I. W. W. FOCUSES WAR ON SOCIETY IN MINE FIELDS

Finds Pretext in Colorado Strike.

BY PHILIP KINSLEY.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Denver, Colo., Nov. 26.—[Special.]—Colorado is now the state-wide battleground of the most bitter social and industrial conflict since that which led to the Sacco-Vanzetti executions in Massachusetts. It is a direct outgrowth of the radical protest throughout the world against these executions.

With uncanny foresight the radicals picked out one of the weakest spots in the United States—the coal fields of Colorado—to stage their demonstration of revolution, and the great coal operators, led by the Rockefellers, are forced, through the state, to defend their position with guns.

Men who fought side by side under the American flag in the world war are arrayed against each other. It is war, and the Industrial Workers of the World are laughing up their sleeves.

Miners in Predicament.

Between these two forces, the great capitalists and those whose slogan is "abolition of the wage system," the miners of Colorado are caught in what seems like a hopeless predicament. They have many real grievances, but no organized voice in the state to present them except the I. W. W. Neither the state, which will lose hundreds of thousands of dollars, nor the operators, will recognize or treat with this enemy.

Between 7,000 and 10,000 miners are out on strike in six counties. Two bloody clashes have occurred, in one of which five miners were killed and many wounded. The state militia has been forced out in the fifth week of the strike. New efforts to open mines will be made next week and more violence is expected.

The I. W. W. preach a sweet, gentle policy of peace and non-coöperation, a "conscious withdrawal of efficiency," but the spirit they have aroused is dangerous and thousands of miners have quit work through fear and intimidation as well as through a voluntary protest against conditions they considered intolerable.

Three Moves for Peace.

Three peace efforts are now under way, but no early end to the conflict is in sight. One move is by the governor, W. H. Adams, to appoint a special commission of distinguished and disinterested citizens to hear both sides and give judgment. Another is for the state industrial commission, which has declared this an outlaw strike, is to hear the case through petition of working miners. Already petitions signed by more than 5,000 have come in from the south.

The third movement is in present parleys between individual operators and their own employés. The strikers have now definitely accepted the leadership of the I. W. W. and have so maneuvered the situation that a peaceful, satisfactory settlement seems impossible without dealing with that body. They make much of the American flag and their rights under the constitution.

Constitution Disregarded.

But the state, as in all wars, has found it necessary to strain the constitution. Strikebreakers are being brought in. Meetings of strikers have been stopped in some places, leaders have been clapped in jail and held without warrant, or driven out of towns and beaten. The mailed fist may become heavier, and the governor may be forced to declare martial law. The I. W. W. will be crushed, to rise again in the next spot.

The causes, merits and true history of the conflict become controversial issues. The inspiration and strength come from the I. W. W. Here is a picture that may serve to show the situation in the state.

Fifteen miles from Denver the northern coal fields begin. The brown mesa is dotted with shafts, tipples, dumps and one looks across these plains to the mountains, the great snow covered peaks of the continental divide, which seem so near. But like the heaven of the I. W. W. they are remote and far away. The sun is shining and the sky is blue along this horizon.

Fight at Columbine Mine.

The columbine is the name of one of the fairest flowers that grows in the shadows of these mighty peaks. It is also the name of a mine which has become the northern point of strategy in this war. It was there a few days ago that the state and the I. W. W. met in a clash which has already taken its place in the miners'

TROJANS FALL, 7 TO 6; DRURY, FLANAGAN STAR

Dahman's Goal Gives Irish Victory.

BY WALTER ECKERSALL.

In the presence of 117,000 enthusiastic fans, Notre Dame defeated Southern California yesterday on Soldiers' field, 7 to 6, in the greatest intersectional football game ever played in this country.

The crowd was treated to some splendid line crashing, end running, and beautifully executed forward passes. It also saw hard tackling and blocking by some of the nation's leading players. The spectators saw Capt. Morley Drury of the Trojans and Christy Flanagan of Notre Dame tear off the tackles, smash into the line, and block in a manner that stamped them two of the greatest backs on the college gridiron.

Trojans Die Gamely.

Although Notre Dame nursed the one point margin gained in the opening period, the Trojans fought back with dogged determination and always were dangerous. In sheer desperation Coach Howard Jones of Southern California made numerous replacements in the final quarter and ordered substitutes to hurl the ball with abandon in the hope that a pass might be completed for a touchdown.

Those fighting Irish never gave an inch when their goal line was threatened and they forced the Trojans to forward pass when close to the goal. These passes either were intercepted or went for touchbacks. The only exception was the one in the opening period which resulted in the Trojans' lone score.

Crowd Starts Early.

Early assembly sounded for many of the record breaking 117,000. Two hours before game time, when the gates were opened, thousands poured into the huge edifice to blend themselves into the misty atmosphere that overhung the gray stoned gothic collonades of Chicago's memorial stadium. Other thousands surged into the inclosure right up to starting time, to lose themselves in the mass banked around the chalk lined field.

Unlike many football crowds it was a crowd that came to see, not to root. But it was a crowd prepared for eventualities. Rolling clouds hung like a blanket over the entire setting and the heavy atmosphere hinted at rain but it was a rare spectator who didn't display the foresight to come accompanied by gay hued slicker as well as fur coat or blanket.

Sun Breaks Through.

Before the game was half over the sun succeeded in its struggle to break through and shower spectator and player alike with a warmth that may have caused some of the Californians to believe they were back in their own country and not on the edge of Lake Michigan where winds are supposed to howl and snow to swirl in November. The sun brought out the players in bold relief against the background of brownish turf. From the spectators' viewpoint it was a perfect football afternoon.

The game was played with the mercury at 62 degrees. It was only 70 degrees in Los Angeles yesterday.

Capt. Morley Drury of Southern California proved to be one of the greatest players on the field. His general play, offensively and defensively, merits him strong consideration from critics who pick all-American elevens. There seemed nothing which this played could not do.

Proves All Around Star.

Several times Drury passed the scrimmage line and then slipped when he attempted to cut back or dodge a tackler. He was equally effective in crashing into the line or smashing off his tackles. On the defensive he made several deadly tackles. He caught punts faultlessly and generally ran them back before the Notre Dame ends could lay a hand on him. His speed combined with his knowledge of the game makes him one of the outstanding players of the year.

Christy Flanagan, the ground gaining back of the Notre Dame eleven for the last three years, came into his own. Although he did not break loose for any spectacular runs, his short, choppy gains had a lot to do with the offensive of the Rockne eleven. He ran so hard he generally slid along for a yard or two when he was tackled. Flanagan was given fine support, not only by the backs, who blocked cleverly, but also by the linesmen, who did their share in paving the way for the ball carriers.

As expected, the game settled down

THE MASTER OF THE WORLD

SYNOPSIS.

Paul Rayburn, chemist for the Grannett company, leaves his laboratory after working late into the night, convinced that he has made a discovery which will startle the world. Because he failed to realize a cent from an earlier invention which made millions for his company, he determines to keep this one a secret.

The next day Crahl, a department head, ushers into Rayburn's workshop two young women who are eager to see some of his instruments and to learn something of his work. The younger and more attractive girl asks Rayburn about a machine which he keeps covered with a metallic cloth. Rayburn tells her it is just a plaything of his own which he uses for independent research after working hours. Later she phones Rayburn and invites him to dinner that evening. He declines, saying his work will keep him in the laboratory. He has not yet learned the girl's name and wonders mildly who she may be.

Just then Crahl enters and congratulates Rayburn on having impressed his visitors, especially the younger one. Rayburn asks what her name is.

"Great Scott!" exclaims Crahl. "Didn't you know that was Eleanor Grannett, the old man's daughter?"

The spoiled Eleanor tells her father that Rayburn declined her invitation, and mentions, in passing, Rayburn's secret device in the laboratory. Her father tells her to invite Rayburn again that evening; then he instructs his confidential man to inspect Rayburn's invention while Paul is absent from his laboratory.

CHAPTER IV.

Paul Rayburn reluctantly accepted Miss Grannett's second invitation to dinner. Having pleaded work as a reason for declining once, he doubted the wisdom of using the same excuse again.

"A most determined young woman," he reflected.

He would go and get it over with. Besides, the evening need not be wholly lost, for he could get in a couple of hours' work afterwards. So he took some of his note books and calculations home, after carefully locking up the rest as usual.

At seven-thirty he arrived at the imposing apartment house, appropriately called "Marble Court," where the Grannetts spent two or three of the winter months.

"I'm so disappointed," exclaimed Miss Grannett upon greeting him, "My two other guests have just dropped out, so I'm afraid you are doomed to a dull family dinner. I think you know my father?"

"Only slightly," said Rayburn, "I doubt if he remembers me."

"You are too modest, Mr. Rayburn. Of course he does. We were speaking of you only today—in fact, it was his suggestion that I asked you for dinner."

This remark gave Rayburn food for thought.

A butler announced dinner. Mr. Grannett entered, followed by the girl who had accompanied Miss Grannett the day before.

"This is my cousin, Miss Downs."

The table was set for four in a small alcove of an impressively rich dining room. Rayburn recognized one tapestry alone which represented a fortune. He had seen its mate in a Paris museum.

Mr. Grannett was in an expansive good humor. For one thing, he was always amused by his daughter's methods of enslaving susceptible young men; for another, he expected to learn something about the mysterious experiments of this young man.

"My daughter tells me your laboratory is quite a show place, Rayburn."

"I'm glad she enjoyed it. Naturally, I find it interesting, but I hardly hoped it could be so to others."

"I was telling father about all those strange devices," said Eleanor in the soft voice she had found so effective. "I think he ought to know more about the wonderful things his extremely capable staff is doing."

There was a swift exchange of glances between father and daughter. Mr. Grannett was not given to dissembling. He now proceeded with brutal directness to the point of especial interest.

"She was telling me you are engaged in some independent researches," he began. "I am anxious to know the nature of them." And then with ponderous joviality, "I'm afraid we don't give you enough work to keep you busy on the company's affairs."

Rayburn sensed the criticism veiled in this remark, and although resenting the introduction of such a matter at a time when he was a guest and not an employé, he concealed his displeasure.

"I find it desirable to have a hobby," he said quietly, "something aside from my regular work. It is my form of recreation."

He was evading! Mr. Grannett flushed with annoyance.

"Excellent!" he exclaimed, "We all ought to have our hobbies. But what is it you are hoping to do?"

The question was direct. There was no polite way of ignoring or evading it, although he had no intention of revealing the exact nature of his experiments, which had advanced to a point where phenomenal results were within reach.

"I've been playing a little with astronomy."

"Astronomy!"

"Yes," returned Rayburn smiling. "If I have seemed reluctant about discussing these experiments, it was because I feared I would be misunderstood. And perhaps laughed at."

"But why astronomy when there are so many more practical and profitable fields of research?" Mr. Grannett's voice was unsympathetic.

"As I said, it is a hobby," answered Rayburn pleasantly.

"And this machine my daughter was telling me about——"

Ah, thought Rayburn. He began to see a reason for this sudden interest in him. He must be on his guard.

"It is a machine I had constructed according to my own designs. What it may accomplish remains to be seen."

"But what do you hope to accomplish with it? What are you driving at?"

"Please tell us," Eleanor's voice was appealingly friendly, "We are tremendously interested, Mr. Rayburn."

"Perhaps Mr. Rayburn would prefer not to tell us—yet." It was Miss Downs' first remark—Rayburn flashed her a grateful look—but it was greeted by a surprised glare from Mr. Grannett and his daughter.

Rayburn paused. The silence became painful. The others regarded him intently. He felt that he had been driven into a corner—that they were taking unfair advantage of him.

Unions Plan $1,000,000 Bank Venture

The officials of the Chicago Building Trades' council will launch a $1,000,000 banking institution early in 1928. The purpose of the labor bank will be to coöperate with the council's realty mortgage company.

P. E. SULLIVAN.

Patrick F. Sullivan, head of the trades' council, made this announcement yesterday after a conference with his associates. Attorney C. J. Bassler was called in and instructed to draw up documents which will be filed this week with various state departments at Springfield.

Mr. Sullivan said several sites in the loop and the near north side are being considered as a location for the new trade union bank.

"We are negotiating for the services of a vice president of one of the large loop banks to take charge," Sullivan said.

"In February of 1926 officialdom of the building trades launched the Illinois Federation corporation. Its organization was for the purpose of encouraging Chicago wage earners to build homes on a 100 per cent trade union basis.

"Shortly after the company began to function its directorate was opened to trade union officers outside the realm of building trades. At present the scope of the company's activities extends over the metropolitan district of Chicago—south to Chicago Heights, west to Aurora and Elgin and north to Waukegan."

Some of the directors of the Illinois Federation corporation are Charles M. Paulsen, electricians; William Maloney, hoisting engineers; Henry Biehl, cement finishers; John Schilt, metal trades; Edward J. Evans, electricians; Edward Ryan, iron workers; Arthur Evensen, iron workers; Thomas Flynn, carpenters; M. J. Kelly, meat cutters; William Rooney, sheet metal wokers; George Meyers, glaziers; Walter Snow, elevator constructors, and George Jones, roofers.

Fifty Dry Agents Watch Football Crowds for Rum

By orders of Prohibition Administrator Yellowley, fifty enforcement agents were stationed in the loop last night to prevent sales of alcoholic liquors to visitors who attended the Notre Dame-Southern California football game.

Banker Shot By Wife When He Traps Her

Surprised in her home late last night while entertaining another man, Mrs. Mayme Isbell, 40, sought revenge for her husband's part in the raid by shooting him in the back. He is John M. Isbell, a $40,000 a year mortgage banker with offices in the Otis building and who lives at 5224 Winthrop avenue.

Detectives Frank Weimer and Joseph Kecseg of the Townhall station accompanied Isbell to the residence of his wife at 1336 Norwood avenue. They have been separated for more than a year, it was said, although last February she announced a reconciliation while her attorney was arguing for $250 a week allimony before Judge Joseph Sabath.

Finde Her with Man.

Mrs. Isbell was found in company with Charles Davis of 5038 Drexel boulevard, a real estate operator. Both were scantily dressed, police said. She was permitted to go upstairs to dress.

"This case will never go to court," the woman is reported to have said as she decended the stairs after dressing to go with the police. She then produced a revolver and fired twice, one bullet striking a piece of furniture and narrowly missing one of the officers. The detectives then overpowered her and took the couple to the Summerdale station. Isbell was removed to the Ravenswood hospital. It was said there his condition is serious.

Married 20 Years.

Davis told the police that he met Mrs. Isbell four months ago through a street flirtation and that she had since pursued him. She had been married for twenty years and is the mother of two daughters, Marion, 9, and Marjorie, aged 7.

On Your Mark, Good Fellows! Yuletide Calls

BY THOMAS WREN.

Little children everywhere are looking with eager eyes toward Christmas. In the tenements of the poor, in the tumbledown houses in the Ghetto, in the luxurious homes of the rich, it is all the same—little hearts beat faster as their owners think of Santa Claus.

This morning begins the 1927 campaign of THE TRIBUNE'S Good Fellow army to bring Christmas cheer and happiness into the homes of the poor children of Chicago. Headquarters of this year's army will be opened tomorrow morning in THE TRIBUNE'S public service office at 1 South Dearborn street.

Will You Be a Good Fellow?

Mr. Good Fellow! this year once more will you do your share to make the fairyland real for some lonely, saddened child of the needy?

Ho! Good Fellows, Ho! This is the clarion call that rides the winds sweeping down on Chicago. This is the battle cry that rings among the tenements, that drives dread specters out of dark and gloomy homes. Ho! Good Fellows, Ho!

Good Fellows, we must be up and doing again, fighting off care and gloom on Christmas day. How soon the year rolls around! Here's Christmas coming once more, and all the little fellows who so sorely need a friend with the fear that they'll be forgotten.

They Won't Be Forgotten.

But we won't forget them. No, not a blessed one! When we go marching out on Christmas morning against the hosts of Generals Cold and Hunger and Gloom, there won't be one of those youngsters forgotten.

Good Fellows, the letters from the youngsters already are starting to come in.

Thus John Aloysius W——, of South Parnell avenue, writes:

"Santa dear—I am five years old. Last Christmas I was only four. Don't you remember, Santa, dear, you sent the Good Fellow with a drum and a nice horn for me. Please, Santa, remember me again this time. Mama says she thinks you'll come and you won't forget us just because we are poor. I think so, too, so please don't fail to come and send the Good Fellows again with the big basket.

"Thank you, Santa."

Many Other Letters.

There are other letters, pathetic little missives praying that they will not be forgotten. Well, it's been a good year for many people, Good Fellows. With others the times have not been so kind, and privation and stinted rations have been the portion of many poor children in Chicago. It was for the benefit of these little folks that the first Good Fellow back in 1909 wrote that master letter that gave us the big idea and started it all.

This master letter appears today in THE TRIBUNE.

This year, Good Fellows, we will have to work harder than ever to make a success of our campaign.

If you can't come in personally, clip the coupon printed in today's TRIBUNE and mail it immediately to the Good Fellow department. Or you can telephone Superior 0100 and ask for the Good Fellow department.

Now's the Time to Do It.

Last year the Good Fellow army brought joy and happiness into the lives of more than 12,000 of Chicago's poor children. This year, Good Fellows, it is up to you to beat that mark. It can be done with a little coöperation. Good Fellows who register early for the campaign perform doubly for the cause because they facilitate the program to care for the last minute rush.

Do it now, Good Fellows, and you will be repaid on Christmas morning.

KOVNO, Lithuania, Nov. 26.—Lithuanian political police today arrested two Polish spies in the vicinity of the demarcation line. Both are facing a court martial at Kovno.

WARSAW, Poland, Nov. 26.—The Polish government today announced officially that it will reply to the Russian note only before the league of nations and that for this purpose the Polish dictator, Marshal Josef Pilsudski will personally attend the forthcoming league meeting at Geneva.

The Polish government brands the Russian note as "unimprotant." It declares Russia has nothing to say in the conflict between Poland and Lithuania, that only the league of nations has the authority to interfere, and that Poland puts itself entirely in the hands of the league.

This declaration was greeted with applause and smiles by the allied diplomats of Warsaw, since it is recalled that when the league of nations ordered Poland to evacuate the Vilna district after Gen. Lucien Zeligowski seized it in 1920, the Poles simply ignored the order. The sudden willingness of Poland to abide by the decision of the league is due to pressure exerted by France and England.

Lithuania Masses Forces.

Polish papers report that six Lithuanian regiments of cavalry and four battalions of infantry have joined the Lithuanian forces near the Polish border. THE TRIBUNE learns on excellent authority that many of these Lithuanians are deserting and running over to Vilna, where they are seen in the streets in Lithuanian uniforms. These men are flocking to the movement led by M. Pletchkaitis, exiled leader of the opposition to Dictator Smetona. His forces are massing on the left bank of the Niemen river. However, it is declared, they will not attempt to seize the Lithuanian government at Kovno without authorization from Warsaw.

Marshal Pilsudski, it is claimed in some quarters here, will use this army of refugees and deserters as a weapon in the negotiations with the league of nations and if his wishes are not fulfilled at Geneva, the politicians fear he will use the dissatisfied Lithuanian adventurers to install the government he wants in Lithuania.

Lithuanians Scoff at Pilsudski.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

KOVNO, Lithuania, Nov. 26.—Lietuva, the official newspaper of the present Lithuanian dictatorship, refuses to take the present strained conditions in northeastern Europe seriously. In an article inspired by the foreign office, it states that Poland does not dare to take decisive steps to liquidate the present unofficial war between the two countries, and Marshal Josef Pilsudski's trip to Vilna was only a demonstration to strengthen the position of his political party in the coming Polish elections.

The soviet note to Warsaw, the paper reports, is a gesture of bolsheviks who want to make an impression on the Geneva disarmament conference. The Lithuanians profess amusement over the present row, maintaining that their position is one of no compromise until Vilna is returned by Poland. The paper also reports the "hate Poland" campaign is continuing. The government has decided to subsidize a small traveling theater named the Vilna, which will give patriotic plays.

An important development in internal Lithuanian politics occurred today when Maj. Plehavichius, chief of staff and organizer of the December putsch, which placed the Smetona-Waldemaras government in power, resigned. Maj. Plehavichius, a former Polish officer, made his career through rabid Lithuanian patriotism.

POLES BLAME RUSSIA

BY SIGRID SCHULTZ.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]
[Copyright: 1927: By The Chicago Tribune.]

BERLIN, Nov. 26.—The Polish minister to Berlin called at the German foreign office this afternoon and told Foreign Minister Stresemann he was entirely misled about the Polish-Lithuanian situation.

It was true that there was a plot to overthrow the Lithuanian government, he said, but Marshal Josef Pilsudski had nothing to do with it; it was organized and financed by Russia to discredit Poland.

When asked why Marshal Pilsudski went to Vilna and did not interfere with the preparations the Polish minister replied that Marshal Pilsudski went to Vilna to visit a sick sister.

"Not Mediators; Peace Makers."

Frightened at the sensation caused by their communique announcing parallel action to prevent a Lithuanian-Polish conflict, Russian and German foreign office spokesmen spent today trying to minimize its significance.

Before proceeding to Geneva, M. Litvinoff, assistant commissar of Russian foreign affairs, had another long conversation with the German secretary of state, Herr von Schubert, leading to the following Russian statement:

"We are not going to act as mediators, but merely as peace makers by extending warnings and good advice."

Semi-official German diplomatic and political correspondence in articles inspired by Foreign Minister Stresemann, echoes this in a different key:

"Germany's relations both with Poland and Lithuania are fraught with so many difficulties, and Germany has been forced to lodge so many complaints against both countries, that she cannot take sides nor act as mediator, but Germany is on the side of European peace and, within the league of nations' limits, will do everything possible to preserve it," these statements say.

While this official viewpoint theoretically is true, the German press and public opinion manifest a decidedly anti-Polish bias and appear pleased with Russia's note to Poland.

Wants League to Act.

The conservative Kreuz Zeitung says that Germany as well as Russia cries hands off Lithuania; the opportunity must be seized to bring to the notice of the league of nations the intolerable conditions on Germany's eastern frontier.

The Deutsche Tageszeitung says:

"Poland's action against Lithuania, if it develops in any shape or form, critically endangers the interests of both Germany and Russia in a manner calling for an inevitable reaction on our part. Poland's plans are directed not only against Lithuania's sovereignty, but in an equal measure against Germany."

Germany's Bridge to Russia.

The liberal Vossiche Zeitung, over George Bernhard's signature, gives one of the main reasons for this national attitude when he points out that Lithuania is the sole land bridge between Germany and Russia, a bridge which Germany cannot allow to fall into Polish hands.

The Berliner Tageblatt joins in the chorus, stating that Lithuania under Polish control would mean a complete collapse of Germany's position in eastern Europe.

The Berlin stock exchange, which opened feebly owing to the war scare, rallied on learning that government circles believe Russia's action and M. Litvinoff's and Herr Stresemann's conversations have temporarily relieved the situation, and it is now hoped that Marshal Pilsudski will hold his hand until after the league of nations' session.

"Roumania Safe from Revolt."

BUCHAREST, Roumania, Nov. 26.—(AP)—Vintila Bratiano, who succeeded his brother, the late Ion Bratiano, as premier of Roumania, granted the Associated Press today the first interview he has given to any one since his accession to power. He expressed fullest confidence of his ability to guide Roumania successfully through its present difficulties.

"Tell the people," said Vintila, with emphasis, "that whatever may befall Roumania because of my brother's death, there can be no revolution, no serious disturbances, no change in the constitution. Our people are by temperament too philosophical, too hard working, too obedient to constituted authority to be interested in revolutionary ideals.

"Roumania will be the last country to be contaminated by bolshevist theories. You must remember that all our peasants now own their own land, therefore they are the last people in the world to want to upset the new order.

"As you see, perfect calm reigns; our army is completely loyal to the constitution. There is no chance of Carol returning. The death of my lamented brother spelled the end of the Carolist agitation. If there had been any active forces, civilian or military, working for his return we would have known it within the last 48 hours, and we would have known how to deal with it.

"Moreover, it can no longer be said that our government policy is actuated by the fact that its head is the personal enemy of Carol, which was the constant insinuation as long as my brother lived."

Italian-Hungarian Alliance Near.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

ROME, Nov. 26.—Although the Italian press limited itself to saying that Italy and Hungary had signed a new commercial treaty, completing the already existing one, it is reliably reported that the two countries are on the eve of signing a regular treaty of alliance on the same lines as last week's Italo-Albanian treaty.

Europe Sees Three Signals of Danger to World Peace

BY HENRY WALES.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

PARIS, Nov. 26.—The chancelleries and foreign offices in Europe are seething with activity as the various powers line up behind their allies and protégés from the Baltic to the Balkans.

Three danger signals, warning against another disturbance of the peace of the world, are causing serious misgiving among the diplomats and politicians.

The Balkans, the canker of Europe's troubles, is the scene of two distinct danger spots—the complicated situation in Jugo-Slavia and Albania, puppets, with France and Italy respectively pulling strings, and Roumania, where the sudden death of Premier Bratiano has left the country open to the menace of civil war if former Crown Prince Carol attempts to return to the throne.

Hungary Eyes Lost Provinces.

Hungary, deceived and despoiled by the Trianon treaty, is awaiting an opportunity to recapture the pilfered provinces of Transylvania and Bukovina, and Bulgaria, shorn of rich Dobrudja, a fertile valley between the Danube and the Black sea, seeks a moment to come into its own.

Far to the north the fate of Lithuania trembles in the balance, with Poland preparing the public opinion of the world to accept the seizure of what is left of the little state since Gen. Zeligowski grabbed its principal city and capital, Vilna, and a huge strip of land, cutting the country off from Russia, in 1920.

East of this line sits Red Russia, with the largest army in the world under arms, ready to seize an occasion to retake the vast granary, Bessarabia, from Roumania and to intervene by force of arms if necessary against Poland's determination to over run Lithuania.

Germans Support Russian Note.

Germany, determined to maintain untrammeled communications with her economic outlet, Russia, supports Moscow's defi to Poland, but France, tied to Warsaw by a military alliance, is forced to support Marshal Pilsudski's ambitions or risk smashing the little entente ring, which it forged between the Teutons and the Slavs.

Confidential reports reaching here from Warsaw state that Poland already has concentrated sufficient troops and cavalry in the vicinity of Vilna to march through Lithuania and seize the free port of Memel, torn from Lithuania by a revolt four years ago and since administered by the league of nations.

The fate of the other Baltic states—Esthonia and Latvia, carved fringes of the pre-war German and Russian empires to execute Woodrow Wilson's point of self determination of peoples—depends on Lithuania, as the Warsaw leaders envisage a greater Poland, eventually swallowing the entire territory.

PEARL HARBOR COMMANDER IS KILLED IN CRASH

HONOLULU, Nov. 26.—(AP)—Lieut. Com. Millington B. McComb, commander of the Pearl Harbor naval station, was killed late today when a land plane in which he was escorting the steamer Malolo out of Honolulu harbor on its return trip to San Francisco plunged into the sea off Koko head.

Lieut. Com. McComb had been accompanied by Lieut. R. P. Kauffman, flying in another plane. The latter returned to Pearl Harbor and reported the mishap.

McComb was one of the best aviators in the islands and one of the youngest officers of his rank in the navy. The officer's body was recovered from the water, the message from Malolo said. A mechanic, J. C. Anthony, accompanying McComb, is missing.

FREE 32 SEIZED AS GANGSTERS IN COLISEUM RAID

Writs and Threats of Writs Balk Police.

CRIMINAL COURT.

Peter Berger, larceny, sentenced to 1 to 20 years in the penitentiary; Alfred Theys, burglary, sentenced to 1 to 20 years in the penitentiary by Judge John P. McGoorty.

Edward Clifford, burglary, sentenced to 1 to 20 years in the penitentiary by Judge Harry B. Miller.

Writs of habeas corpus were rained on the detective bureau in unprecedented numbers yesterday, and as a result nearly all the gangsters seized in the Friday night raid on a prize fight at the Coliseum had to be shown the open door.

In many cases the writs were not actually served but bailiffs of the various judges notified the police the writs had been sought, and the bailiffs said the writs would be issued at once unless the prisoners were booked before nightfall. Thirty-two prisoners were released under such circumstances.

Planned to Hold Victims.

It had been the announced intention of Chief of Detectives William O'Connor to hold all the captives until the court sessions on Monday. This, he explained, would not only serve to inflict hardships upon the undesirables, but would also enable the police to have the gangsters in attendance at the weekly showup of criminals today at the Des Plaines street police station.

But no sooner had the chief's intention been broadcast than the flood of writs began. Writs were issued by seven judges, as follows: Chief Justice William V. Brothers, 10; Judge Emanuel Eller, 9; Judge Worth N. Caylor, 5; Judge Harry B. Miller, 3; Judge Stanley Klarkowski, 2; Judge Marcus Kavanagh, 2, and Judge William Lindsay, 1.

Judge Eller caused the release of the prize catches of the night, including Frank McErlane, south side beer chief; McErlane's bodyguard, Paddy Sullivan, and one of the McErlane-Saltis gangsters, Nick Cramer. All will be arraigned in the police courts tomorrow.

Holdup Plot Is Bared.

While these prisoners were being turned out as fast as the police could fill out bond blanks, and while the bureau squads were out seeking a new batch of notorious gangsters, a confession was obtained from three men who had been suspected of an attempt to assassinate Chief of Detectives O'Connor.

William Clifford, a police character and leader of the trio caught loitering about the home of O'Connor, confessed to Lieut. John Norton that they had been lying in wait for William Davidson, a general contractor, living at 8122 Champlain avenue.

Davidson, Clifford declared, was in the habit of carrying his pay roll, amounting to $3,500, and on his way to his shop passed by the spot where the men were waiting. They had planned to stick up Davidson and seize the pay roll, Clifford confessed. While waiting for him to show up, they had become nervous and stored their pistols behind a portable schoolhouse, where they had been found by the police on the information of schoolboys.

Nunzio Aiello Seized.

Among the gangsters seized in raids early yesterday was Nunzio Aiello, 41 years old, 445 West Division street, a brother of Joseph Aiello, who is leader of a gunman band allied with the Skidmore-Bertsch-Moran combine which has spread gambling joints and booze concessions over the north side. Aiello, according to police information, was marked for death because of his betrayal of his former associates, Antonio Lombardo and Al Brown.

Nunzio Aiello was seized at Townsend and Division streets by a detective bureau squad led by Sergt. John Connelly. As the policemen ran up to Aiello, the latter cried out in Italian, and at once a dozen men with menacing faces rushed from nearby houses. Sergt. Connelly called out immediately that they were police officers and the men, who had evidently believed a rival gang was leading an assault, subsided.

SPINGOLA IS TARGET OF BOMB SECOND TIME WITHIN THREE DAYS

Peter Spingola, Republican politician whose home at 5501-03 Gladys avenue was bombed on Thursday evening, was made the target of another blast last night. A black powder bomb was exploded on the porch of his brother-in-law, Joseph Giannatassio, 125 North Mayfield avenue, while Spingola was visiting there.

A portion of the porch and the rear wall of the two story home were torn away. The damage was estimated at $200. Spingola told the police that he knew of no reason for the attempts to terrorize him.

The bombing was the fifth in five days. On Tuesday an alleged vice resort at 823 West Adams street, controlled by the Bertsche-Skidmore-Zuta syndicate, was blown up. The following day there was an attempt to frighten Abe Klass and Sam Buhai by a bomb in their soft drink parlor at 1312 South Halsted street.

Then on Thursday the Spingola home was the goal of the bombers. Early yesterday the fourth blast of the gang war was set off in the front of the soft drink place and alleged gambling house of Jimmy Hackett at 11901 Vincennes avenue. This place had been destroyed on Nov. 9 by a bomb and was under repair at the time.

Peter Spingola, a brother-in-law of the notorious Genna brothers, never has been known as a racketeer. The police assume that his position as a politician—he was prominent as a Thompson campaign aide—and his failure to use influence as desired by gangsters may have brought the attempts against him.

SHOPPERS HUNT UNIQUE, EXOTIC CHRISTMAS GIFTS

Trend Away from Usual in Full Swing.

The jovial fat man in the red suit who will climb down Chicago's chimneys this Christmas Eve will be wearing a more worried look than has been his wont. With life in all its phases becoming more and more complex, it is not surprising to find its complexities edging into Santa Claus' business. It is not surprising, but extremely discomfiting to those rather unimaginative people who have been in the habit of solving the Christmas shopping problem with a tie for the boy and handkerchiefs for the girl.

There is a definite spirit abroad, according to shopkeepers, of individualism. It is a kind of "by their gifts ye shall know them" idea. Gift buyers are constantly asking for the unique, the unusual, something to express their own originality as well as the personality of the one to receive the gift.

Makes It a Problem.

This brings its own problems. People want something which will flatter their own taste and please as well. In former years bargain counters were patronized by women trying to pick up something which they "wouldn't want for themselves but which would do to give some one for Christmas." This year it would appear that more care is being used in the selection of gifts than in buying personal things for one's self. And this search for the unusual has brought about an increasing vogue for the ultra modern. Straight line statuettes in light green or silvered bronze are having a run. Inexpensive, humorous ornaments from Central Europe have been selling in quantities, such as match holders, grotesque ceramic ornaments for book ends, and queer little plaster of paris men used as cork tops for bottles.

Demand for Tooled Leather.

Italian tooled leather, which began to be popular several seasons ago, is having an increased demand. Desk sets, book covers, bridge-score pads and photograph albums are selling and selling at prices which may seem a little fantastic. Crystal flowers from France and Czech-Slovakia will try for place in the Christmas stockings. Vases and lamps, both being written over and over on Christmas lists, are invariably of the bold, straight line of modern art.

"It was the Exhibition of Decorative Arts held in Paris in 1925 that has brought this demand for the modern," said one dealer. "At first people laughed at these extreme, exotic designs, then they looked a little longer and now they are buying it as fast as they can get hold of it."

Antiques, which have had such a continued popularity through the last five years, are holding their own, particularly in the way of materials. "Everybody seems to be asking for old bits of vestments to throw over pianos or to hang on walls and old pieces to use in making pillows," said another dealer.

Pictures Back in Favor.

Pictures, one time out of favor with decorators, are back on the walls this season, with demands in stores for black and white and colored etchings, old prints, sporting subjects and oil paintings, particularly of contemporary American painters.

Toys, always the Christmas shoppers' greatest concern, are changed in style from those popular several seasons back. By far the biggest sellers are the mechanical toys, toys which require ingenuity to use and imagination to enjoy. Airplanes of all kinds are selling because of the Lindbergh, Chamberlin and Ruth Elder flights. Dolls, which can do all sorts of human things, like walking, talking and rolling their eyes, are being piled into the Santa Claus bags along with houses, artistically planned, for them to live in, and wardrobes carefully selected to clothe them.

Men are perhaps the Christmas shoppers' most annoying problem. To give a man a proper gift, one to be both useful and pleasing, requires no end of thought. The possibilities of the haberdashery department soon exhaust themselves, and girls have found all too frequently that the ties that tied at Christmas may ruin the ties that might have bound in June, and so look about them for something different.

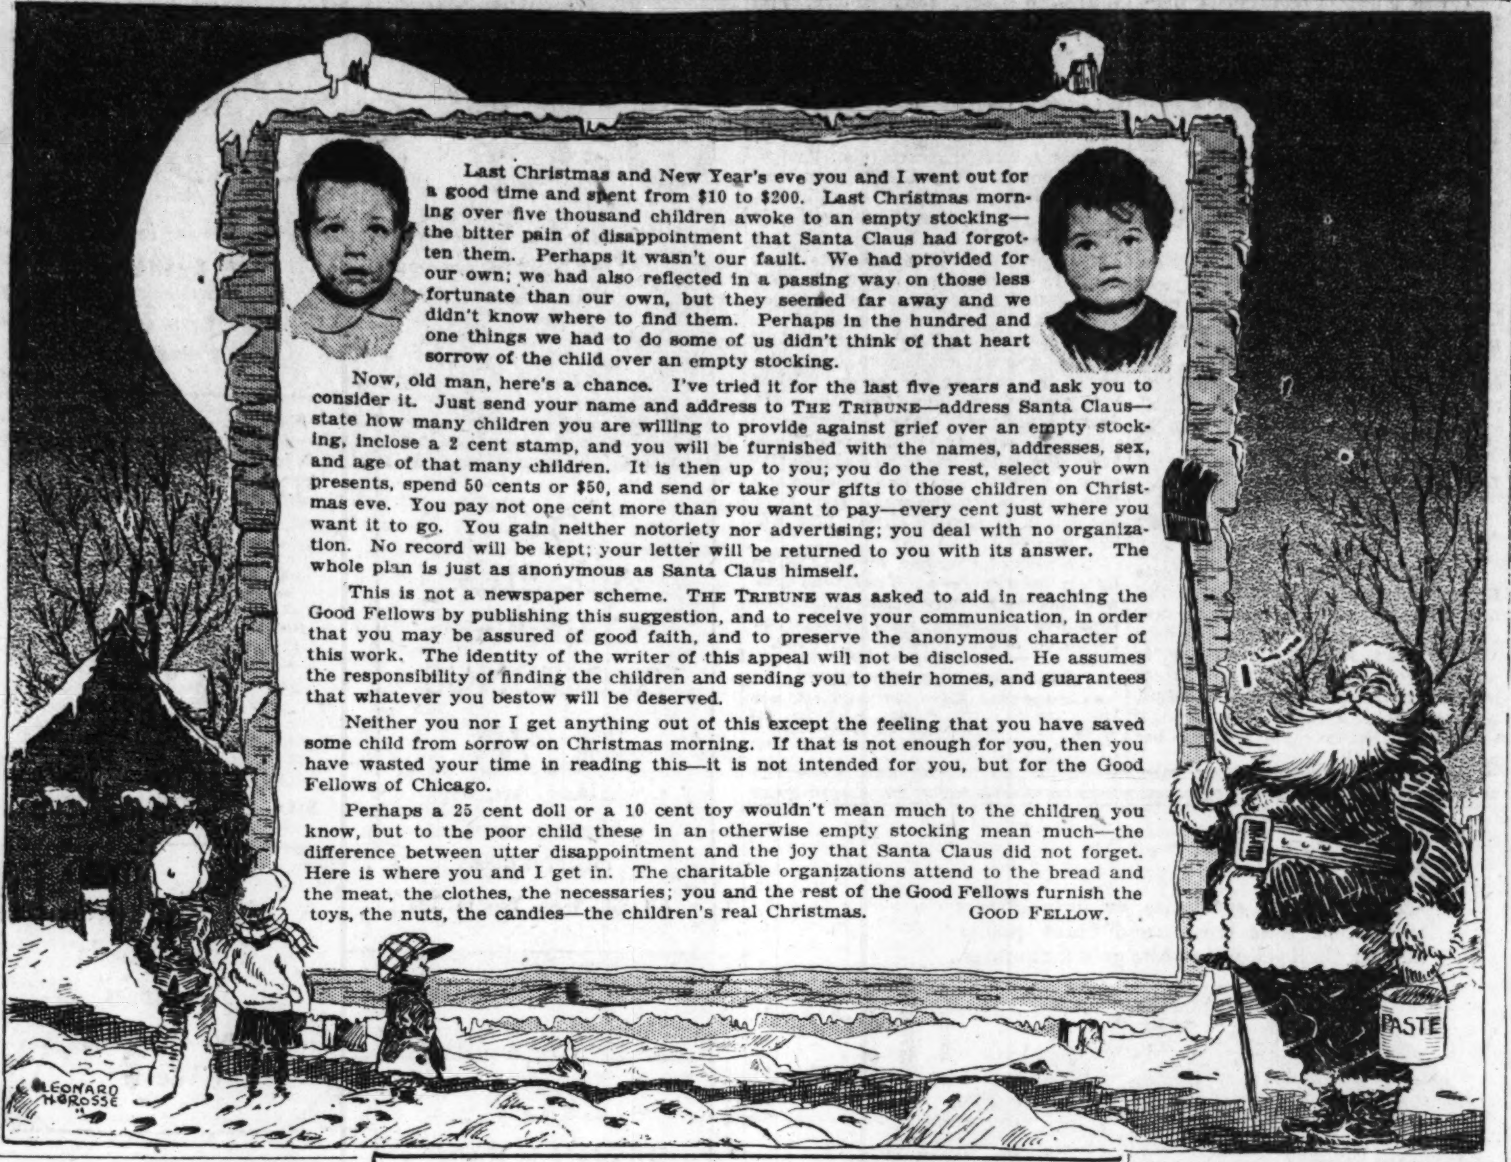
Turn to Substitutes.

They are finding all manner of things as substitutes. There are golf meters, similar in appearance to wrist watches, to keep tab on miscounting golfers; there are cocktail shakers, squeezers and flasks for the scofflaws, and finally there are cigar lighters. These little devices, in colored sharkskin, snakeskin, in gold or silver are selling in enormous quantities. The idea seems to be that the man will think of the girl every time he tries to light the nobby little gift, and as he will probably try many times before succeeding, this will put her in his thoughts with fair frequency.

Department store managers say they are looking forward to a Christmas business rivaling even last year's record breaking sales.

TO CHICAGO GOOD FELLOWS

Original Good Fellow Letter as Printed in The Tribune Dec. 10, 1909—Campaign Again Open



Last Christmas and New Year's eve you and I went out for a good time and spent from $10 to $200. Last Christmas morning over five thousand children awoke to an empty stocking—the bitter pain of disappointment that Santa Claus had forgotten them. Perhaps it wasn't our fault. We had provided for our own; we had also reflected in a passing way on those less fortunate than our own, but they seemed far away and we didn't know where to find them. Perhaps in the hundred and one things we had to do some of us didn't think of that heart sorrow of the child over an empty stocking.

Now, old man, here's a chance. I've tried it for the last five years and ask you to consider it. Just send your name and address to THE TRIBUNE—address Santa Claus—state how many children you are willing to provide against grief over an empty stocking, inclose a 2 cent stamp, and you will be furnished with the names, addresses, sex, and age of that many children. It is then up to you; you do the rest, select your own presents, spend 50 cents or $50, and send or take your gifts to those children on Christmas eve. You pay not one cent more than you want to pay—every cent just where you want it to go. You gain neither notoriety nor advertising; you deal with no organization. No record will be kept; your letter will be returned to you with its answer. The whole plan is just as anonymous as Santa Claus himself.

This is not a newspaper scheme. THE TRIBUNE was asked to aid in reaching the Good Fellows by publishing this suggestion, and to receive your communication, in order that you may be assured of good faith, and to preserve the anonymous character of this work. The identity of the writer of this appeal will not be disclosed. He assumes the responsibility of finding the children and sending you to their homes, and guarantees that whatever you bestow will be deserved.

Neither you nor I get anything out of this except the feeling that you have saved some child from sorrow on Christmas morning. If that is not enough for you, then you have wasted your time in reading this—it is not intended for you, but for the Good Fellows of Chicago.

Perhaps a 25 cent doll or a 10 cent toy wouldn't mean much to the children you know, but to the poor child these in an otherwise empty stocking mean much—the difference between utter disappointment and the joy that Santa Claus did not forget. Here is where you and I get in. The charitable organizations attend to the bread and the meat, the clothes, the necessaries; you and the rest of the Good Fellows furnish the toys, the nuts, the candies—the children's real Christmas. GOOD FELLOW.

SAY NEW METHOD ELIMINATES PAIN IN CHILDBIRTH

New York, Nov. 26.—[Special.]—A method of bringing children into the world without pain, but without the dangers of twilight sleep or the administration of ether, has been developed by two physicians of the Lying-in hospital, it was learned today. It is known as the "Analgesia method," analgesia being the elimination of pain without the elimination of consciousness, as in anæsthesia.

The men who have developed this method are Dr. Asa A. Davis, in charge of the medical work of the Lying-in hospital, and Dr. William Gwathney, a member of the staff. Dr. Gwathney said that more than 15,000 babies have been born by this method and that it has been successful in about 90 per cent of the cases.

The treatment consists of an injection of an emulsion of ether, olive oil, and quinine, which is absorbed slowly through the membranes of the intestines. Injection is made when labor pains begin, and in many cases virtually relieves the patient of severe pain throughout the delivery of a child.

For the eighth time the stork visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. Michael Fronckowski, 3324 Drake avenue, last Thursday, leaving on this visit three wee ones at once—a boy and two girls. The triplets weigh 10 pounds. The mother is 33 years old.

Smith's Name to Go on Ballot in Michigan and California

New York, Nov. 26.—[Special.]—Gov. Smith is likely to figure directly as a candidate for the presidential nomination in the Michigan and California primaries. This became apparent today, although the governor himself is consistently clinging to his policy of aloofness.

George W. Olvany, Tammany leader, has received word from Michigan Democrats of their intention to enter the name of Gov. Smith at the primaries early in April. Next to those in South Dakota these primaries will be the earliest presidential primaries to be held.

McAdoo Group to Fight.

Tammany has also heard that since the California drys are taking steps to make a fight at the primaries for dry delegates to the Democratic convention, Isidore B. Dockweiler, the Democratic national committeeman from San Francisco, who is friendly to Gov. Smith, will enter delegate candidates of his own. They will oppose the dry group composed of the remnant of William G. McAdoo's former supporters.

Associated Press dispatches from San Francisco today declared that Smith's name would appear on the California ballot.

The dispatch quoted Justus S. Wandell, anti-McAdoo candidate for governor in 1925, as follows:

"The name of Alfred Smith of New York will go on the ballot next May and California will send a delegation to the Democratic national convention pledged to his nomination for the presidency.

Refuses to See Emissaries.

Two Michigan Democrats, it was learned today, came here several days ago to obtain the consent of Gov. Smith to enter his name in the primary. They failed to obtain an interview with the governor. The emissaries went home, after leaving word that regardless of the governor's attitude his name would appear on the primary ballot.

Tammany now feels so certain that Gov. Smith will be able to swing the necessary two-thirds vote in the convention that the organization has abandoned its earlier plan to make a fight to abrogate the rule, which continues to have strong support in the south and the far west. There is a strong belief that Gov. Smith will have the support of a majority of the 1,098 delegates. With a majority, should aggressive action for the rules abrogation be necessary at the eleventh hour, the strength to insure its success would thus be at Gov. Smith's command.

REMUS INSANE BEFORE SLAYING, WITNESSES SAY

Defense Calls Lawyers to Prove Mania.

BY ORVILLE DWYER.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Cincinnati, O., Nov. 26.—[Special.]—Two Cincinnati lawyers, the first witnesses for the defense today, told the jury that, in their opinion, George Remus was insane long before he shot and killed his wife, Imogene, in Eden Park in this city, on the morning of Oct. 6. She was then on her way to face Remus in the divorce court.

One was Leo Burke, with whom Remus conferred a number of times during June and July of this year concerning business matters. The other was A. D. Beatty, a Negro, who for two years was a member of the Ohio legislature and for three more was an assistant United States district attorney in Cincinnati.

Beatty told the court and jury he met Remus immediately after Remus had been released from Atlanta federal prison. He said the meeting was in connected with a year's sentence to the Troy, O., jail, which the former "master bootlegger" had to serve for the same offense that sent him to Atlanta.

Rules Against Defense.

Attorney Charles H. Elston tried hard to have the witnesses disclose the matters of conversation that had caused Remus to act in such a manner that they suspected he had lost his mind.

Elston wanted this brought out to show that Remus' condition was due to his wife's alleged conduct with Franklin L. Dodge Jr., the department of justice agent, who had sent the disbarred Chicago lawyer to the federal prison. The court, however, ruled against him.

The defense was opened today immediately after the state had closed its case with the testimony of William Hulvershorn, an automobile distributor. Mr. Hulvershorn told the jury that he picked up Remus as he wondered in Eden park, the morning of the shooting. He drove him to the business district of Cincinnati, he said, finally letting him out of his automobile at the Pennsylvania station, where Remus took a taxi to police headquarters to give himself up.

Objects to Testimony.

The auto distribtuor's testimony brought about a clash between Attorney Elston and Prosecutor Charles P. Taft II., son of the United States chief justice. Elston claimed the prosecution had built up before the jury the inference that George Conners, secretary to Remus, or George Klug, who drove Remus to Eden park on the morning of the killing, might have driven Remus to the station.

"I demand that all such testimony as would tend to give the jury that impression be stricken from the record and the jury be instructed to disregard it," Mr. Elston said. "The prosecution has built this thing up deliberately, and now they bring this witness in to save their faces."

The court reserved decision.

Attorney Elston next made a motion that the three alienists appointed by the court, who had just made a tentative report, finding Remus was sane at the time of the killing and that he is sane now, be ordered to leave the bench, where they had been sitting behind Judge Chester R. Shook.

"I don't want the jury to get the idea that these gentlemen are official in this case," Attorney Elston said.

"Your honor," Remus said, as he leaped to his fee, "we withdraw that motion. These gentlemen, in their report, have been most considerate of the defendant. I am sure we do not want them to be removed from the bench."

Judge Shook looked from Elston to Remus and back again.

"You gentlemen," the court said, "put me in a most embarrassing position. Do you concur in withdrawing your motion, Mr. Elston?"

Remus and Lawyer Disagree.

Elston stood his ground doggedly.

"Your honor," Remus said, "I am sure Mr. Elston will do me the favor to withdraw the motion. I do not want those gentlemen moved on my account, Mr. Elston?"

Elston shrugged his shoulders and sat down. The motion was withdrawn, but the court moved the three doctors—David I. Wolfstein, E. A. Baber, and Charles E. Kiely—to a spot beside the jury box, where they will not be constantly in the jury's eyes.

The report of these alienists, which was given to the court but not to the jury, was provisional and read as follows:

"Basing our conclusion upon conversations with and examinations of the said George Remus, including our observations of him in the courtroom during the progress of the trial thus far, we are of the opinion that said George Remus is now sane, and was sane on the morning of Oct. 6, 1927.

"This present opinion, however, is provisional and subject to modification, depending upon further developments in the trial."

Attorney Burke was first to take the stand for the defense. He stated he had six conferences with Remus in June and July of this year. He said he had an opinion concerning Remus' sanity.

"What caused you to form that opinion?" Attorney Elston asked.

"When Mrs. Remus and Dodge would be mentioned or their names would come out in conversation," the witness said, "I recall that Mr. Remus—would—his eyes would——"

An objection was overruled. Mr. Burke was told to explain how Mr. Remus would act.

"Mr. Remus would become very much worked up," the witness explained. "He would get up and pace around the room. He would pound his fist into his palm. His voice would become more and more shrill. He appeared like a maniac."

This answer provoked immediate objections on the part of the state.

Court Rebukes Lawyer.

Judge Shook demanded from Mr. Elston when, according to the defense theory, Remus had recovered the reason he was alleged to have lost for more than two years. Mr. Elston would not make any statement; he said that had nothing to do with the defense.

"Mr. Elston," said the court, "please don't resort to subterfuge."

Elston flushed hotly: "There'll be no subterfuge in this case while I have anything to do with it," he answered.

Finally, Elston made this statement of the defense theory:

"My position is that the defendant was insane for a period of two years before this act and that he was insane when this act was committed."

The jury was recalled and Burke continued his testimony:

Q.—Did you form an opinion as to whether he was sane or insane? A.—Well, in my opinion, he was insane at that time.

Defense Wins Point.

Prosecutor Taft attempted in cross-examination, to bring out what the business was that Remus had with the attorney. Attorney Elston objected on the ground that did not concern the jury.

The objection was sustained.

Burke was asked whether he had ever expressed his opinion concerning the insanity of Remus to anybody. He said he had—to several. He also admitted that while he had thought Remus "unbalanced," he made no attempt to have him placed in restraint.

"When did you meet Remus?" Attorney Beatty, the next witness, was asked.

"When he was sent to Atlanta penitentiary," he replied.

Q.—When did you see him again? A.—When he was released, about 18 months later.

Q.—How often did you see him, and where? A.—In my office in the federal building.

Q.—What was the subject of the conversation? A.—Well, he was to be removed from this district to St. Louis, in connection with the Jack Daniels' liquor prosecution. That was in June or July of 1925.

Q.—From all you saw of Remus, from his conduct and his statements, what was your opinion as to whether he was sane or insane? A.—That he was insane.

Q.—Now I ask whether, in those ravings, Mr. Remus referred to an attempt to kill him. A.—The government was in a conspiracy he claimed, with some Egan gang (Egan's Rats of St. Louis) to kill him.

Q.—Did he say Franklin L. Dodge Jr., was in that conspiracy?

There was an objection and it was sustained and then witness was excused.

Court then adjourned until Monday morning.

Folks dining at the North American Restaurant for the first time are always impressed by our low prices. But they are even more impressed with the unusually fine quality of the food.

Here actually is a restaurant which, to insure the quality and flavor of the food being beyond compare, goes to lengths most dining-places would consider extravagant. Everything is the finest obtainable—selected milk-fed chickens—the choicest cuts of meats—fish fresh from the water—the richest, purest milk and cream—

Even in cooking and baking the same rule of finest quality is strictly followed. Never do we use any of the cheaper substitutes for butter, whipped cream, etc. No wonder food here always tastes so good.

Yet in spite of the great expense to which we go to keep the quality and flavor of our food unbeatable, prices are surprisingly low. For our Common-Sense-Serve-Yourself plan makes it unnecessary to add anything to prices to cover waiters' salaries. And this saving is passed to you.

ADVERTISE IN THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE

NUNS PRAY AS BONZANO'S BODY LIES IN STATE

Noted Cardinal Will Be Buried Wednesday.

BY DAVID DARRAH.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

[Copyright: 1927: By The Chicago Tribune.]

ROME, Nov. 26.—The body of John, Cardinal Bonzano, former apostolic delegate to Washington and the papal legate in the International Eucharistic congress in Chicago a year ago, who died this morning at the clinic where he underwent an operation for tumor of the stomach a week ago, was quietly removed tonight to his private apartment in Via Vicenza.

The remains of the great cardinal, who was 60 years old, will lie in state there until the day of the funeral, Wednesday. The funeral probably will be held in the Church of the Sacred Heart.

Nuns and monks of the Sacred Stigmata throughout today attended the rooms at the clinic where the body lay, saying prayers for the soul of the cardinal. Tonight nuns prayed beside the body as it lay in state on a bed in the cardinal's apartment. Four large candles burned at the corners of the bed. In the hand of the deal prelate was clasped a crucifix.

Pope Grieves at Loss.

Immediately on Cardinal Bonzano's death this morning, the news was communicated to Pope Pius, who was celebrating mass in his private Vatican chapel. The pope interrupted the service momentarily and expressed profound sorrow for the loss of the eminent member of the college of cardinals. He then resumed mass and as soon at it was ended remained in long prayer for the soul of the cardinal.

Cardinal Gasparri, papal secretary of state, also was notified of the death. He had not been able to visit Cardinal Bonzano because he himself was forced to remain in his room because of a slight attack of influenza. Cardinal Gasparri immediately called Msgr. Pizzardi and Msgr. Borgoncini Duca, directing them to visit the body and attend to arrangements for the funeral.

Mourners View Body.

As soon as the news of the death became generally known in Rome among the cardinal's numerous friends, mourners came to view the body. Among them were members of the diplomatic corps accredited to the holy see, as well as the widow of the former Italian ambassador to Washington, Contessa Macchi Di Cellere, who was in Washington while Cardinal Bonzano was apostolic delegate there. She was one of the cardinal's most faithful friends. The pilgrimage also included representatives of Catholic societies and many clergymen.

Before his death Cardinal Bonzano received the last sacraments and the special blessing of the pope from a private confessor. Although bulletins on his health yesterday were not without hope, Cardinal Bonzano himself had a premonition that death was near. He was told yesterday morning that numerous admirers were asking about his health and offering prayers for his recovery.

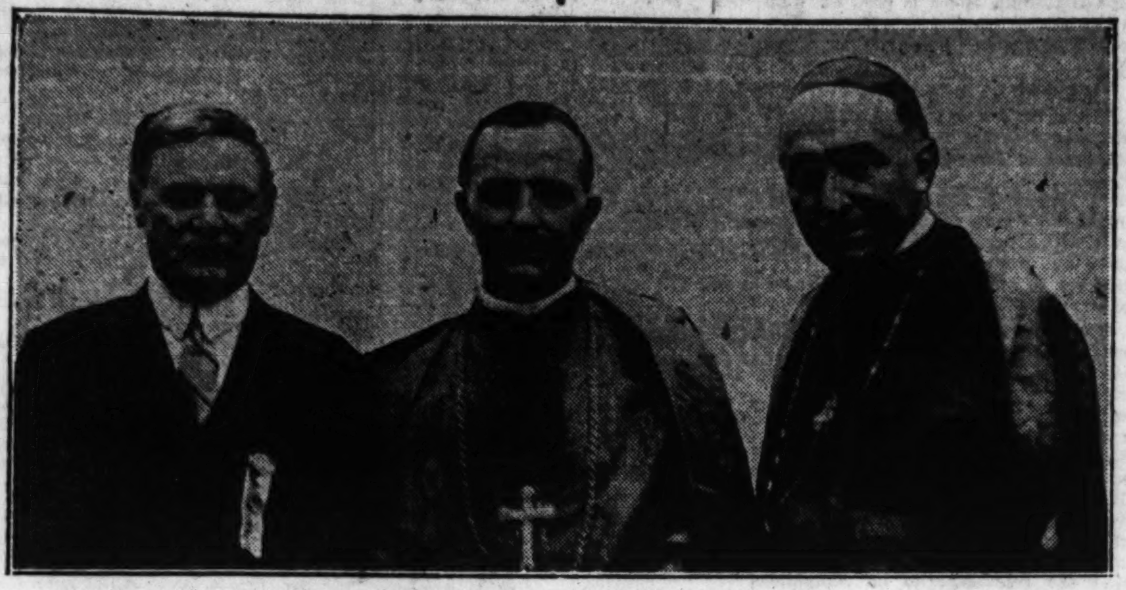
"I do not know whether these prayers will aid me to get well," he replied, "but I know they will aid me to die well, and so I am grateful to those who pray for me."

Physicians used strychnine and caffeine injections when it became apparent that death was near, in the early hours of this morning, thus keeping the prelate alive until 8 o'clock.

While the Catholic world laments the loss of Cardinal Bonzano, another cardinal is at the point of death, with little hope for recovery. This is Cardinal De Lai, who was given communion this morning at the same time as Cardinal Bonzano was given the last rites of the church.

There is a tragic tradition in Rome that when one cardinal dies, generally two more members of the sacred college follow him, which seems likely to come true in this case, as Cardinal De Lai is in a state of coma tonight and is considered beyond hope of surviving his heart trouble. Cardinal Bonzano's death is the fourth among the cardinals during this year.

MOURN DEATH OF CARDINAL BONZANO



Cardinal Bonzano, former apostolic delegate to the United States and papal legate to the Chicago Eucharistic congress, who died yesterday in Rome, as he appeared last year in this city. With Cardinal Bonzano are former Mayor Dever on his right and Cardinal Mundelein on his left.

MOURNED BY MUNDELEIN

News of the death of Cardinal Bonzano, his friend of many years, came as a shock to Cardinal Mundelein. Their acquaintanceship, begun in their student days in Rome, strengthened and ripened with the years.

Their progress in ecclesiastical honors kept pace with their friendship, and reached a climax last June when the Chicago prelate, host to the Catholics of the world at the greatest religious gathering in history, the twenty-eighth international Eucharistic congress, welcomed his Italian friend as the personal representative of Pope Pius XI.

A statement issued yesterday by Cardinal Mundelein read:

"I feel a great personal loss in the death of the late beloved prince of the church, Cardinal Bonzano. A friendship of many years is severed as this charming, saintly and eminently learned churchman answers the call of the Master Whom he had served so well.

"For the last five years Cardinal Bonzano administered some of the most important offices of the church in Rome. He was an outstanding member of the Sacred college. His sound judgment and marked executive ability rendered an efficient service to the church, his influence having been felt in every part of the Christian world. He was particularly well known in the United States, having filled capably the office of apostolic delegate at Washington for eleven years.

Extends Chicago's Sympathy.

"His eminence is best remembered by the people of Chicago, however, as the papal legate at the Eucharistic congress a year ago. Here he was he most prominent figure of the greatest religious assembly ever held in this country. Throughout the entire congress our holy father was nobly represented by him. His charming personality, his graciousness, his pleasing smile, his affable manner, his benign dignity endeared him to all the people of Chicago as well as to every visitor to our city.

"The sorrow that comes to our holy father is indeed a great one, and we extend to him the sympathy and condolence of the people of Chicago. For his eminence was much beloved and is now widely lamented. Catholics of this archdiocese offer the sincere tribute of their many prayers."

Cardinal Bonzano was the third of the eleven cardinals present last June at the Eucharistic congress to pass away. The first was Cardinal Czernoch, primate of Hungary, who died last July at the age of 75 years. The second was Cardinal O'Donnell, primate of Ireland, whose death occurred in October.

PUT STEPHENSON IN SOLITARY ON BREAD AND WATER MEALS

Michigan City, Ind., Nov. 26.—[Special.]—Officials of the Indiana state prison here admitted today that D. C. Stephenson, former grand dragon of the Indiana Ku Klux Klan, was in solitary confinement at the penitentiary.

"Stephenson is living on bread and water, and when he promises to keep quiet about his affairs while in prison, he will be given the same privileges that other prisoners have," a person in authority said.

It is likely Stephenson's statement rebuking United States Senator Arthur R. Robinson of Indiana, which was smuggled out last Saturday, was the reason for his punishment. Robinson, a short time age, made an extended defense of himself and Mrs. Robinson for accepting gifts from Stephenson, one of them a string of pearls given Mrs. Robinson for Christmas in 1924.

It was also learned from the prison authorities that Stephenson was permitted to partake of the elaborate Thanksgiving day dinner served to the rule abiding prison inmates.

PRAY A WEEK TO BRING DEAD MAN BACK TO LIFE

BERLIN, Nov. 26.—"My husband is not dead. There is no such thing as death by disease. The only death is violent death, and that comes about by burying the so-called dead under the earth so they cannot breathe."

This was Frau Rohde's indignant remonstrance to Potsdam police, whom neighbors called in because Louis Rohde, certified to be dead seven days ago from cancer of the stomach, still lay in bed in a small room adjoining his butcher shop. Brethren of the "Weissberg prayers" stood around, alternately praying and laying hot poultices on the body to prevent it from feeling cold. The head priest of the sect asserted that enough prayers, blankets and poultices would bring about a resurrection without fail.

SMALL, CERMAK, AND ZIMMERMAN TALK GOOD ROADS

Conference Ends in Hot Prohibition Debate.

Gov. Len Small, Anton J. Cermak, president of the board of county commissioners, who expects to run for governor next fall, and Gov. Fred R. Zimmermann of Wisconsin gathered at a banquet last night as guests of the Motorists' Association of Illinois to discuss good roads. The banquet ended in a prohibition debate.

Gov. Small first discussed the state's highway accomplishments. Mr. Cermak then announced a proposed 600 foot parkway with two 50 foot motor drives from South Chicago through the forest preserves to Evanston, to be financed by a bond issue to be voted on at the next general election. He also discussed the highway accomplishments of Cook county.

Assails Prohibition Law.

Concluding with the subject of roads, Mr. Cermak took up the question of prohibition, assailing the existing situation both because the county is put to enormous expense in building and maintaining more jails, more public hospitals, more infirmaries, and charitable institutions, as well as courts and police, and because of its hypocrisy generally.

Gov. Zimmermann of the recognized wet state of Wisconsin took issue with the speaker, and in a highly dramatic manner shouted his opinion that prohibition is the real reason that the public is now able to finance highways and parks.

"Here is a ten dollar bill," Gov. Zimmermann proclaimed, producing one. "This is lawful money of this country. It will buy booze or it will buy roads. But it won't buy both.

"I do not know just how to answer Mr. Cermak, because he is a Democrat and I am not. But I want to call attention to the fact that before prohibition you did not have millions for roads and millions for parks and millions for public buildings, and more millions for more public works. Since prohibition there has come a period of great financing of all these things.

"When prohibition has made it possible for the city of Chicago and for Cook county and the state of Illinois to raise and spend millions upon millions for highways and parks and other things, I say prohibition has done something for Chicago and the county and the state. I am not speaking for or against prohibition. But when I took the oath to support the constitution and laws of the state and country I meant every word I said. And I will continue to do so."

Mr. Cermak did not arise in rebuttal, for Gov. Zimmerman then began discussing the highways of his state. Gov. Small, who listened to Mr. Cermak solemnly, exhibited a smile of deep content when Gov. Zimmerman opened his heated remarks.

The banquet, which was attended by several hundred of the motor club's members, was presided over by Hugo Meyer, its secretary, who introduced the speakers. The membership was equally enthusiastic in its applause for each of the speakers. At the banquet table Mr. Cermak was seated between Gov. Small and Dr. John Dill Robertson, president of the west parks commission.

The club officials in charge of the program had intended that the speakers bring out some new and progressive views on the subject of coöperation in highway building. Especially it was intended that Gov. Zimmerman be asked for a definite statement in regard to plans for the building of a superhighway from northern Wisconsin to the state line to join a similar superhighway projected by the state of Illinois to encircle Chicago and connect with the Wisconsin enterprise.

Small Is First Speaker.

Gov. Small spoke first. He reviewed the work done in building 5,615 miles of road in the state since he had become governor and laid especial stress upon what had been done in and about Cook county.

"I want to emphasize my approval," he said, "of the construction of parallel lines in order to relieve traffic congestion and the construction of highways 40 feet in width where necessary. I believe that much can be done to facilitate the flow of traffic by grade separations, and this subject is receiving serious attention by the highway department.

"We will push the state road building section in the Chicago area as rapidly as possible and give this part of the state the traffic relief and facilities to which it is entitled. During the last year we have widened Roosevelt road and Ogden avenue and we have received bids and let contracts for a 40 foot road from the city limits to St. Charles. We have awarded contracts for a new highway into Chicago by way of Justice, and for a new wide highway from Kankakee to Chicago. We have also let contracts for paving 22d street to the county line and for building a road from Glenwood to the Indiana line. In addition, surveys have been completed for a road from Elgin to Evanston."

Cites Governor's Delay.

Mr. Cermak, following, recalled that one reason for delay on Cook county roads was the governor's failure to sign the validating act affecting the $15,000,000 bond issue until many months after its passage.

NEW HIGH RECORD SET FOR PANAMA CANAL TRAFFIC IN OCTOBER

Washington, D. C., Nov. 26.—[Special.]—New high records for commercial traffic through the Panama canal established in October was announced today by the war department. The new records covered number of vessels, registered gross and Panama canal net tonnage, tolls, and tons of cargo carried.

The number of commercial transits, 567, exceed by 24 the previous record of 543, made in August, 1927. The net tonnage of commercial vessels, Panama canal measurement, was 2,585,752 tons, greater by 69,261 tons than in the highest month previous, December, 1923. Tolls, $2,380,116.97 were $44,386.16 more than in December, 1923, the previous record month. The amount of cargo carried, 2,717,646 tons, exceeded by 110,600 tons the record of 2,607,046 tons carried by commercial vessels transiting in the month of March, 1926.

ROOSEVELT ROAD SHOWS VALUE OF WIDER HIGHWAYS

Test Trip a Revelation; Work on Straightening.

BY PUTNEY HAIGHT.

Work has been started on the final unit of Roosevelt road reconstruction, at a point near the county line where the original road jogged sharply to the south. The line of highway now being graded will eliminate the jog, making a straight line from Lake Michigan to the western part of Du Page county.

As the highway exists today, in partially completed form, it presents an illuminating example to demonstrate that 40 foot roads will bear safely several times the volume of traffic that a 20 foot highway will accommodate unsafely. It also demonstrates the soundness of the contention that high speed is safe on wide highways, as compared with the danger in much less speed on narrower roads.

Chaos on Narrow Roads.

There further is shown that light and heavy traffic falls naturally into the lanes of different speeds on wider routes. Yesterday miscellaneous traffic traveling on Roosevelt road was mixed up where the narrow portions still exist, but upon the wider portions the motors took up positions in relation to speed without supervision of traffic officers.

The reason why Roosevelt road is useful for demonstration purposes is that only a portion of the 40 foot width has not been completed. The wider parts are between Mannheim road and the county line to the west and between 9th avenue, Maywood, and Des Plaines avenue to the east. Between these points the pavement is still 20 feet wide. The widening of this part is under contract, a portion already laid and in the curing stage and the remainder to be completed in the spring.

There is still one piece of pavement in Du Page county shut off to traffic, but this will be cured within a fortnight, making a straight run of new surfaced road from Des Plaines avenue to a short distance west of Lombard road in Du Page county. The detour is on paved road and short.

Part of $15,000,000 Program.

The rebuilding of Roosevelt road was one of the projects assumed by the state at the time the $15,000,000 highway improvement plan for the county was adopted. Under the terms of the agreement between the county and state the highway was to be a forty foot road in Cook county. The state has gone further and taken the forty foot widening to Butterfield road in Du Page county.

On the twenty foot section extending four and a half miles west of the Butterfield road and nearly ready for traffic the state engineering department has built into the highway a provision against the immediate necessity for widening. This consists of a shoulder ten feet wide on either side of the pavement. In its present stage it offers traffic a safe means of passing a blockade in the road or a sudden turn out in an emergency. This shoulder is built so that it may serve to support a ten foot widening on each side. This is in line with the efforts of residents of the counties to the west to get a widened Roosevelt road built to the Mississippi river.

Safety for Four Lanes.

A trip over the widened portions of the road yesterday showed that huge, bulky trucks did not constitute a blockade factor. It was simple and safe to pass these vehicles, with complete road vision ahead. At times two lines moving on one side of the road met two lines coming from the opposite direction. The four lines passed with ample room for safety at rapid speed.

A test trip into the city from the county line showed the possibilities for rapid motor transit to the county line and into Du Page county when the city finds time to improve that route within the metropolitan area.

From the county line to Des Plaines avenue, about six miles, the easy driving time was 9 minutes.

From Des Plaines avenue to Crawford avenue required 17 minutes.

From Crawford avenue to Michigan avenue required 38 minutes.

Normally it is possible to travel from Roosevelt road over Michigan avenue to The Tribune Tower in 10 or 11 minutes. Yesterday, encountering football crowds, the time for the seventeen blocks was 55 minutes.

MRS. W. L. DENNY GIVEN DIVORCE.

Walter L. Denny, division head of the Western Electric Co., was divorced yesterday before Circuit Judge Thomas J. Lynch from Mrs. Vera M. Denny of 435 South Kenilworth avenue, Oak Park. The decree provides, in accordance with an out of court agreement, that Mrs. Denny will receive $225 a month alimony and a number of insurance policies.

MEXICAN COURT MAPS REFORM OF AGRARIAN PLAN

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

MEXICO CITY, Nov. 26.—A member of the Mexican Supreme court said today that the court would undertake to settle the agrarian question. The court will define the functions of the federal agrarian commission and so interpret the agrarian law as to prevent local agrarian commissions from giving lands to peasants without respect for the provisions of the law and constitution.

According to the same authority, if the provisions of the agrarian law were fully observed, not more than 10 per cent of the peasants holding lands in common or under [illegible] titles as gifts from the federal or state authorities would be holding lands, because they have not received the sanction of the agrarian commission and signature of the president of the republic.

The court member holds that the resolutions of the Supreme court on the agrarian question will lead to the reforming of the whole agrarian system in such a way as to restore agricultural credit.

FLIES IN GALE TO RESCUE GIRL SHOT ON ISLAND

Storm Stops Ships, So Doctor Takes Plane.

ANCHORAGE, Alaska, Nov. 26.—Help for Bessie Howe, government school teacher at the isolated native village of Ninilchic, 115 miles [illegible] of Anchorage, on Cook inlet, literally came out of the air when a terrific gale prevented her rescue by sea. Miss Howe accidentally shot herself in the abdomen last Tuesday while cleaning a rifle. No doctor or expert medical care was available and no regular means of communication existed between the little Indian village and white settlements.

The government radio men at Seldovia and Anchorage caught a faint amateur signal of distress, evidently sent with a spark coil. It asked immediate aid. All boats at Seldovia, the nearest port, refused to set out in the teeth of the raging storm.

Doctor Flies to Rescue.

Pilot Russell Merrill and A. D. Haverstock, government doctor, decided to take the big chance and hopped off in a plane equipped with skiis. The 115 mile flight to Ninilchic was accomplished and the airmen succeeded in landing on the ice of a small lake six miles from the village.

Through wisdom born of long service in the north, Dr. Haverstock took the girl by dog sled to the plane. The tortuous journey over the frozen terrain and against headwinds in Cook inlet delayed the return flight and the plane was forced to land in the Anchorage air field in darkness. Three fires and the headlights of an automobile revealed the location of the field and Pilot Merrill brought the plane down for a successful landing.

Has Fighting Chance.

The wounded girl was in a critical condition today in the Anchorage hospital with a fighting chance to recover from the blood poisoning which had set in. She arrived in Alaska in September from the middle west. Her home is believed to be in Kansas.

LONDON, Nov. 26.—(AP)—An S O S from the French submarine Morse was intercepted tonight by Lloyd's Landsend radio station. The position of the submarine was latitude 40.32 north; longitude 2.34 east. This is a point off the Balearic islands in the Mediterranean. The Morse carries fifty-one men. It was built in 1925.

Fined $5,000 in One Liquor Case; Faces Cell in Second

Harry Gellman, already under sentence of 14 months at Atlanta federal penitentiary in connection with a liquor conspiracy case in Cleveland, yesterday plead guilty before Federal Judge James H. Wilkerson and was fined $5,000 on charges of violating the prohibition law. Three others indicted with Gellman following a raid on a linseed oil plant at 33 West Illinois street a year ago were sentenced as follows: Isidore Karsen, fined $1,000; George Hurley, fined $500, and George Dellmore, fined $2,000 and three months at Woodstock jail.

BULLET MISSES PROWLER, KILLS WOMAN IN HOME

Mrs. Mary Gaffney, 50, of 1025 West Monroe street, was killed last night as she stood talking with her landlord when a bullet fired by a neighbor at a fleeing intruder crashed through the kitchen window and struck her in the back.

The man whose shot went wild—James A. Eggleston of 1043 West Monroe street—was until recently assistant superintendent of the county jail. He told Sergt. Mertell Parker of the Des Plaines street station that he and his son, Charles, 19, observed a large man trying to enter his garage. The man fled at his approach, Eggleston said, and ran past the rear of Mrs. Gaffney's home. He fired one shot and missed his mark.

Police were summoned by Nels Johnson, 1609 West Adams street, owner of the building in which Mrs. Gaffney lived. A block away they found Walter Rutkowski, 30, of 1619 South Loomis street, who was identified by Eggleston as the alleged burglar.

Wounds received when he grappled with a Negro bandit at 40th and Dearborn streets caused the death in Mercy hospital of Henry Birkemeir, 64, a watchman living at 3939 South Dearborn street.

A 14 year old boy, one of a group said to have been breaking windows in a rooming house at 118 South Lincoln street, was taken to the county hospital suffering from shotgun wounds about the face and shoulders. Police said that Angelo Valaera, 34, one of the boarders, admitted firing the shot. The boy, William Walsh of 1732 West Adams street, is in a serious condition.

Peter Friskus, 41, of 816 West Congress street, was perhaps fatally injured when he was shot once in the left side and stabbed about the face and neck during a fight at Halsted and Congress streets. His wife told police that three men attacked him in revenge for an assault made by him last February on Steve Hamamon, 30, of 500 South Halsted street. Hamamon was arrested.

Despondent over illness, Harry Glendore, 59, shot and killed himself in his home at 3727 Pine Grove avenue. The suicide was witnessed by his wife, Emma.

Carmini Sicoli, 41, of 1011 Polk street was shot down at Peoria and Miller streets. Bruno Malfaro, 40, was arrested in his home at 1204 McAllister place for the shooting and Sicoli identified him. Sicoli will probably die from bullet wounds in the abdomen and jaw. Numerous cards bearing New York, Detroit, and local addresses were found on him, including the names of several attorneys.

FIRE COMMISSIONER ASKS CARE IN DISPOSAL OF GIFT WRAPPINGS

A warning to householders and merchants in disposing of the wrappings and packings in holiday gifts was issued yesterday by Fire Commissioner Albert W. Goodrich.

"The wrappings of Christmas purchases, often containing quantities of excelsior and other inflammable materials, are carelessly disposed of, leading to rubbish fires which are the basis for 85 per cent of the calls upon the department," says Commissioner Goodrich.

"Merchants, too, are lax. The hurry of Christmas preparations causes the ordinary precautions to be forgotten and as a result alleys in the rear of mercantile establishments offer one of the most serious of our fire menaces."

REPORT 300 DEAD AFTER FLOODS SWEEP ALGERIA

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

ALGIERS, Nov. 26.—Three hundred persons were reported to have lost their lives as a result of heavy rainstorms which today flooded scores of villages in northern Algeria. Millions of dollars' worth of property damage is reported, with hundreds of homes wiped out and rail and telegraph lines destroyed. A number of the victims, it is reported, were Europeans on vacation. The whole northern strip from Oran to Orleansville was struck by the storm. Many rivers overflowed.

Four railroad bridges near Tenes were carried away, and the storm, which reached its height yesterday, came so suddenly that forty workmen were caught like rats and drowned.

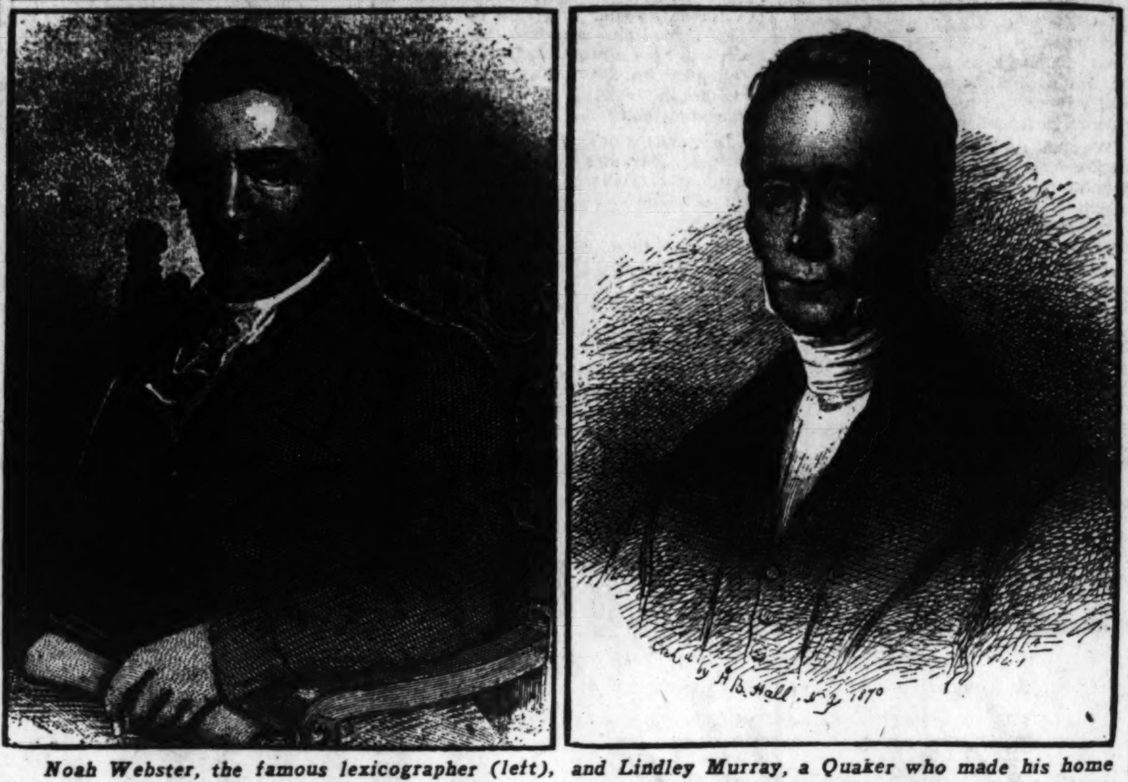
PATRIOTIC TONE WEAK IN EARLY AMERICAN TEXTS

John Kelley Writes of First School Books.

Before School Textbooks Got Into Politics



Noah Webster, the famous lexicographer (left), and Lindley Murray, a Quaker who made his home in England after the revolutionary war, who were a mong the compilers of the readers and other text-books used in the early American schools.

BY JOHN KELLEY.

American school readers and histories, especially those used in the Chicago public schools, have become an international topic by reason of the charge made by Mayor William Hale Thompson that Superintendent of Schools William McAndrew is an English propagandist. Whether the mayor is playing to the gallery, or whether Mr. McAndrew is a British agent is not the topic of this article, but rather to awaken memories in the minds of school boys and school girls of long ago. Having been a collector of old school books for more than a quarter of a century, I feel that I know a little something about them.

With one notable exception [Noah Webster's Reader] the school readers of olden days were no more patriotic than those of the present age. I might go further and say that readers now used in American schools contain more pieces on patriotism than those of an earlier day.

Printing Facilities Limited.

The first series of school books printed in the United States were those compiled by Noah Webster. Prior to the revolutionary war all school books used in this country, with the exception of the New England Primer, were printed in England. The reason for this, perhaps, was that England desired to inculcate in the minds of the youth of her American colony a love for the mother country. Furthermore, the facilities for printing books at that time in New England were limited.

The school readers of that period were Enfield's Speaker, Scott's Lessons, the Preceptor, the Art of Speaking and the Young Gentleman and Lady's Monitor. All of these were sent here from England.

The New England Primer was printed in Boston as early as 1690. Every boy and girl of school age in New England had to study this book and emulate the precepts set down in its pages. An advertisement in an almanac by Henry Newman, philomath, for 1691 reads:

"There is now in the press, and will suddenly be extant, a Second Impression of the New England Primer enlarged, to which is added more Directions for Spelling; the Prayer of K. Edward the 6th, and Verses made by Mr. Rogers the Martyr, left as a Legacy to his Children. Sold by Benjamin Harris, at the London Coffee House in Boston."

Deals with Many Topics.

I have a facsimile copy of the New England Primer of 1777. Besides the alphabet, for beginners, it contains spelling lessons of one, two, three, four, five and six syllables, the Shorter Catechism prayers for different occasions, John Rogers' "legacy to his children," religious verses, and "Spiritual Milk for American Babes, drawn out of the breasts of both Testaments for their souls' nourishment. By John Cotton."

The frontispiece is a woodcut of John Hancock, President of the American congress, which looks as if it were made with an ax. It is said that Paul Revere was the engraver.

Then also is a woodcut of the Rev. John Rogers being burned at the stake. Two of the crown's executioners are standing by, and from the expression on their faces they are enjoying the scene. Each is holding what appears to a long staff, or spear. The wife of Rogers with her brood of nine [one of whom is at the breast] are witnesses to the sorrowful scene. As the flames envelop him, Mr. Rogers, who was the first minister of the gospel burned at the stake in Queen Mary's reign, gazed at his wife and children with a look of genuine happiness. The "legacy," which he wrote a few days before his death, consists of about 1,000 words.

Child's Prayer in Primer.

A "Child's Prayer" printed in the primer still is taught by American mothers to their offspring. Many persons of mature or advanced age who read this will recall the words:

"Now I lay me down to sleep,
I pray the Lord my soul to keep,
If I should die before I wake,
I pray the Lord my soul to take."

Before the revolutionary war, and even for many years after its close, in remote country districts there was no regular set of school books. In some schools there would not be two readers alike. This also was true in regard to spelling books and arithmetics; grammars, algebras, and geographies were almost unheard of in rural schools before the revolution, and for that matter they were not in general use down to the beginning of the nineteenth century.

As an educator, Noah Webster probably was the foremost that America has produced. He was graduated from Yale college in 1774, and for several succeeding years he was engaged in scholastic and literary occupations. While employed as a school teacher he prepared his "Grammatical Institutes of the English Language" published in three parts.

Webster Reader in 1785.

The first edition of Webster's Reader was published in 1785. Before me lies a copy dated 1787. It is the third edition "greatly enlarged."

In the preface Mr. Webster says in part: "A love of country, and an acquaintance with its true state, are indispensable—they should be acquired in early youth.

"In the choice of pieces, I have been attentive to the political interests of America. I consider it as a capital fault in all our schools that the books generally used contain subjects wholly uninteresting to our youth; while the writings that marked the revolution, which are not inferior in any respect to the orations of Cicero and Demosthenes, and which are calculated to impress interesting truths upon young minds, lie neglected and forgotten. Several of those masterly addresses of congress, written at the commencement of the late revolution, contain such noble sentiments of liberty and patriotism that I cannot help wishing to transfuse them into the breasts of the rising generation."

Made Hatred for Britain.

Webster's Reader was not only intensely patriotic, but it engendered hatred toward Great Britain as no other work of the kind has ever done. The reason for this, perhaps, was owing to the fact that the author served as a private in the revolutionary war and suffered the hardships of his rank. As an example of his hatred for England I quote the following from an oration delivered at Boston by John Hancock on the fifth anniversary of the wanton slaughter of several citizens on March 5, 1770, by a party of British troops, in a time of peace:

"Tell me, ye bloody butchers! ye villains high and low; ye wretches who contrived, as well as you who executed, the inhuman deed! do you not feel the goads and stings of conscious guilt pierce through your savage bosoms? Though some of you may think yourselves exalted to a height that bids defiance to the arms of human justice, and others shroud yourselves beneath the mask of hypocrisy, and build your hopes of safety on the low arts of cunning, chicanery and falsehood; yet do you not sometimes feel the gnawings of that worm which never dies? Do not the injured shades of Maverick, Gray, Caldwell, Attucks, and Car, attend you in your solitary walks, arrest you even in the midst of your debaucheries, and fill even your dreams with terror?"

Negro Was First Casualty.

The Attucks named in the foregoing was a Negro and the first of his race to die in the struggle for America's freedom.

Dr. Joseph Warren who later was a general in the continental army and was killed at the battle of Bunker's Hill, also delivered an oration in Boston in commemoration of the second anniversary of the killing of the five citizens mentioned heretofore. The following extract is from Webster's Reader:

"The fatal fifth of March, 1770, can never be forgotten. The horrors of that dreadful night are but too deeply impressed in our hearts. Language is too feeble to permit the emotions of our souls, when our streets were stained with blood of our brethren—when our ears were wounded by the groans of the dying, and our eyes were tormented with the sight of the mangled bodies of the dead. When our alarmed imagination presented to our view our houses wrapped in flames—our children subjected to the barbarous caprice of raging soldiery—our beauteous virgins exposed to all the insolence of unbridled passions—our virtuous wives, endeared to us by every tender tie, falling a sacrifice to worse than brutal violence, and perhaps like the 'famed Lucretia,' distracted with anguish and despair, ending their wretched lives by their own hands."

Brief History of War.

There are many pieces in Webster's old reader that breathe the same spirit of hatred for British soldiers. The book also contains a brief history of the revolutionary war, and its most important battles, a geographical description of the thirteen colonies, speeches of illustrious Americans, the Declaration of Independence, a few pieces of poetry, sketches by Benjamin Franklin and others, a short history of Columbus, rules of elocution, and "select sentences," comprising proverbs and axioms.

It may interest Mayor Thompson to know that Marquis de Lafayette, Count de Rochambeau, Count d'Estang, Count Pulaski, and Baron de Kalb were given creditable mention by Mr. Webster for their services.

Another book by Mr. Webster which served as a school reader was entitled "Elements of Useful Knowledge." It was first issued in 1800, and was popular in its day.

In passing it might be said that Webster's old blue back spelling book was used in American schools for more than a century.

First Arithmetic in 1786.

The first arithmetic printed in the United States was compiled by Nicolaus Pike and came from the press in 1786. A few years later the first geography printed in America was brought out by Jedidiah Morse, father of the inventor of the electric telegraph.

Before the close of the eighteenth century, Caleb Bingham, a Massachusetts schoolmaster, was the compiler of two readers—the American Preceptor and the Columbian Orator. These books were fine examples of the period and were used in the schools of New England and the middle states down to 1830.

In his "Autobiography of a Busy Life," Horace Greeley speaks of the Columbian Orator as the first book he ever owned. He began school at the age of two and a half years, being carried on the back of his grandfather. When he was 5 years old he was the brightest pupil in school.

Horace Greeley's Poems.

It was his wont, he says, to speak the following poem from the Columbian Orator on Friday afternoons.

"You'd scarce expect one of my age
To speak in public on the stage;
And if I chance to fall below
Demosthenes or Cicero,
Don't view me with a critic's eye,
But pass my imperfections by.
Large streams from little fountains flow,
Tall oaks from little acorns grow.
And though I now am small and young,
Of judgment weak and feeble tongue,
Yet all great learned men, like me,
Once learn'd to read their A, B, C.
But why may not Columbia's soil
Rear men as great as Britain's isle; Exceed what Greece and Rome have done,
Or any land beneath the sun?
Mayn't Massachusetts boast as great
As any other sister state?
Or, where's the town, go far and near,
That does not find a rival here?
Or where's the boy, but three feet high,
Who's made improvements more than I?
These thoughts inspire my youthful mind
To be the greatest of mankind,
Great not like Caesar, stain'd with blood,
But only great as I am good."

Abraham Lincoln, according to Miss Tarbell, one of his biographers, first felt the wrong of slavery in reading the American Preceptor, and Frederick Douglass, says the same writer, first realized his own condition in reading the Columbian Orator.

Selection by Washington.

The Columbian Orator contains selections by George Washington, Benjamin Franklin, Joel Barlow, Richard Brinsley Sheridan, Cicero, Hannah More, Napoleon Bonaparte, John Milton, David Garrick, Jonathan Mason, Edward Everett, Hervey, Fisher Ames, Lord Pitt, Blair, Carnot, and many others; also scenes from several of Shakespeare's plays.

The only patriotic pieces in the book are an extract from an oration delivered in Boston by Jonathan Mason in commemoration of the sanguinary affair of March 5, 1770, and two or three extracts of addresses delivered on the anniversary of our national independence.

An extract from President Washington's address to the people of the United States declining a third term is one of the most interesting pieces in the book.

Bingham's American Preceptor is much the same as his Columbian Orator. The only patriotic pieces are extracts from Dr. Warren's oration delivered in Boston and heretofore mentioned, Gen. Washington's resignation from the continental army and the oration of John Quincy Adams, delivered in Boston, July 4, 1793.

Lindley Murray, an American who went to England at the outbreak of the revolutionary war, compiled an English reader and a grammar which were used in many parts of this country from 1795 down to 1850. Mr. Murray was a Quaker and a native of Philadelphia. He had been in poor health for several years preceding the war, and, being a noncombatant on account of religious scruples, made his way to England, where he resided the rest of his life as an invalid.

Lessons from Many Books.

In the early days of the United States, as I have said heretofore, school books in country districts were scarce. In lieu of readers, the boys and girls of that distant day, made any kind of a book serve the purpose. In some schools the class in reading would con their lessons from "The Pilgrim's Progress," Jefferson's "Notes on Virginia," "Robinson Crusoe," Watts' Hymns, Fox's "Martyrs," Weems' "Life of Washington," the Farmers' Almanac, and Addison's "Spectator." In my own experience at a district school there were the National, Sanders', McGuffey's, Willson's, Harper's, Osgood's, and Appleton's Readers, all at the same time.

The American First Class Book, a reader for advanced pupils, was to my mind one of the best I ever saw. It was compiled by the Rev. John Pierpont of Boston, and was brought out in 1822. It contained nearly 500 pages and the selections could not be improved upon, unless it were the want of patriotic pieces. This book was used in the schools of New England for a quarter of a century.

Writes Thrilling Poem.

Pierpont was the author of "Warren's Address to the American Soldiers" at Bunker's Hill, one of the most stirring poems of the revolutionary war. It follows:

Stand! the ground's your own, my braves!
Will ye give it up to slaves?
Will ye look for greener graves?
 Hope ye mercy still?
What's the mercy despots feel?
Hear it in that battle-peal!
Read it on yon bristling steel!
 Ask it,—ye who will.

Fear ye foes who kill for hire?
Will ye to your homes retire?
Look behind you! they're a-fire!
 And, before you, see
Who have done it!—From the vale
On they come!—and will ye quail?
Leaden rain and iron hail
 Let their welcome be!

In the God of battles trust!
Die we may,—and die we must;—
But, oh, where can dust to dust
 Be consigned so well
As where Heaven its dews shall shed
On the martyred patriot's bed,
And the rocks shall raise their head,
 Of his deeds to tell!

McGuffey's Reader Popular.

Among the most popular school readers from 1840 to 1870 were McGuffey's and Sanders', both of which had an enormous sale in the western country. The McGuffey series of readers and spelling books were first used in the schools of Ohio and Pennsylvania. William H. and A. M. McGuffey, brothers, collaborated in the work of compilation. Both were employed as educators in Ohio colleges.

Millions of McGuffey's Readers and Spelling Books were printed and were used extensively in the middle and western states. Probably no series of readers was more adapted to the American youth than McGuffey's, and so were the spelling books, as many who read this can testify.

Hundreds of times have I read "The Spider and the Fly," by Mary Howitt, which was one of the pieces in McGuffey's Fourth Reader. I quote the first and last stanzas:

"Will you walk into my parlor?"
 said the spider to a fly.
"'Tis the prettiest little parlor that ever you did spy.
The way into my parlor is up a winding stair,
And I have many pretty things to show you when you're there.'"
"O, no, no," said the little fly, "to ask me is in vain,
For who goes up your winding stair can ne'er come down again."

He dragged her up his winding stair into his dismal den, Within his little parlor, but she ne'er came out again.
And now, my dear young friends,
 who may this story read,
To idle, silly flattering words, I pray you ne'er give heed;
Unto an evil counselor, close heart,
 and ear and eye
And take a lesson from the tale of the Spider and the Fly.

Few Patriotic Pieces.

The only patriotic pieces in McGuffey's Fourth Reader are an address delivered by Daniel Webster on the character of Washington, and "America," the national hymn.

Some of the selections are: Speech of Logan, Chief of the Mingoes; The Town Pump, Death of Absalom, The Alhambra by Moonlight, The Pebble and the Acorn, Battle of Waterloo, William Tell, Lochiel's Warning, and The Fall of Babylon.

McGuffey's Fifth Reader, or Rhetorical Guide, was regarded by many persons as the best work of its kind. The copy that lies before me was printed in 1844. On the flyleaf is written, "G. P. Jacobs, Oregon, Ill. Freshman class, Beloit college." In the preface the compiler says that "free use has been made of the works of Bell, Graham, Ewing, Pinnock, Scott, McCulloch, Enfield Mylius, Sheridan Knowles and others." Among the lessons are Patrick Henry's speech before the Virginia convention, Character of the Puritans, Eulogy on Lafayette, Lament for the Dead, The Village Blacksmith, The Cataract of Ladore, Burial of Sir John Moore, Pulaski's Banner, Faithless Nelly Gray, Thanatopsis, Gray's Elegy, Address to a Mummy, The Battle of Blenheim and a supposed speech on John Adams by Daniel Webster.

The last named selection is a speech upon the life and character of Mr. Adams.

Sanders' Series Appears.

Sanders' series of readers, compiled by Charles W. Sanders, made their appearance between 1840 and 1842. Among the recommendations printed in the Fourth Reader is the following:

"City of Chicago, office of school inspectors, June 28, 1845.

"Resolved, That Sanders' series of school books, consisting of Sanders' Primary School Primer, Spelling Book, First, Second, Third and Fourth Readers, be adopted for the use of common schools in this city, and that all new purchases of books be of that series, so far as they are applicable to the wants of schools. Attest: Geo. W. Meeker, secretary."

In many respects Sanders' readers are like McGuffey's, and I could not say which is the better. The following from Sanders' fourth book will awaken memories of school days among those of advanced age:

"Peter Prangle, the prickly prangly pear picker, picked three pecks of prickly prangly pears from the prangly pear trees on the pleasant prairies."

200 Lessons in Prose.

The words and music of "America" and "I Would Not Live Away" are printed in the back of the book.

Sanders' Fifth Reader was the collaboration of Charles W. and Joshua C. Sanders, and was for the use of academies and high schools. It contains nearly 200 lessons in prose and poetry by the best English and American authors. The following extract from a "Eulogy on Noah Webster" by Chancellor Kent is apropos to the subject matter:

"The American Dictionary of the English Language is a work of profound investigation and does infinite honor to the philological learning and general literature of this country. Happy the man who can thus honorably identify his name with the existence of our vernacular tongue. There is no other way in which mortal man could more effectually secure immortality beneath the skies. Obelisks, arches, and triumphant monuments seem to be as transient as the bubble of military reputation.

Porter's Book Has Merit.

With reluctance I put down Sanders' Fifth Reader and take up Porter's Rhetorical Reader, the first edition of which was printed in 1831.

Ebenezer Porter, D. D., former president of the theological seminary at Andover, Mass., was the compiler. This work has much to recommend it, and the fact that it passed through more than 200 editions proves its worth. It contains several pieces of a patriotic character and a comprehensive study of elocution. "The Old Oaken Bucket," by Samuel Woodworth, is listed in Porter's reader as "The Bucket—A Cold Water Song."

A poem entitled "New Missionary Hymn," by S. F. Smith, author of "America," is in the book. Mr. Smith was a theological student at Andover when Ebenezer Porter was "prexy."

Four in Goodrich Series.

We now come to Goodrich's series of readers, of which there were four. S. G. Goodrich, the compiler, was better known as "Peter Parley." He was the author of a great many school books that were immensely popular from 1830 to 1850.

The Fourth Reader, from which I quote, was printed in 1845, several years after the first edition. Written in ink on the title page is the name "Selinus Milton Ellsworth, Naperville, Ill."; also "Rock River Seminary, 1844." On the inside of the cover is this warning with a border around it:

"Steal not this property from me,
 For he who does will rue it;
For, if I don't the Lord will see
 The thief who dares to do it."

In concluding these reminiscences of old time school books I am prompted to quote from the preface of Kirkham's Grammar, which was studied by Abraham Lincoln. One of Lincoln's biographers tells how young Abe walked seven miles to borrow a copy of this book. At the time he was clerk in a store at New Salem, Ill., and the biographer says that customers often found him out back of the store lying under a tree, reading Kirkham's Grammar. This is the quotation:

"You are aware, my young friend, that you live in an age of light and knowledge; an age in which science and the arts are marching onward with gigantic strides. You live, too, in a land of liberty; a land on which the smiles of heaven beam with uncommon refulgence.

"The trump of the warrior and the clangor of arms no longer echo on our mountains, or in our valleys; 'the garments dyed in blood have passed away'; the mighty struggle for independence is over; and you live to enjoy the rich boon of freedom and prosperity which was purchased by the blood of our fathers."

Abraham Lincoln perused these words when he was 19 years old, and a third of a century later he played the leading rôle in a conflict that made the war of independence pale into insignificance.

COMPTON GOES TO STOCKHOLM TO GET NOBEL PRIZE

Arthur H. Compton, professor at the University of Chicago, left yesterday for Stockholm, where he will receive the 1927 Nobel prize in physics on Dec. 10. He will return to Chicago early in January. At Stockholm he will deliver the Nobel lecture on the subject "X-Ray as a Branch of Optics." His researches have shown that the X-ray is similar to light. His findings are said to make the hitherto accepted theories of wave lengths only partially true. Prof. Compton is accompanied on his journey by his wife. Tomorrow they will be guests at a dinner at Wooster university and on Wednesday they will sail.

THE HUGHES' REPORT.

In recommending the dismissal of the complainants' bill in the lake water diversion suit, Mr. Hughes, as special master for the United States Supreme court, completely vindicates the contentions of Chicago and the Chicago sanitary district. The acceptance of Mr. Hughes' report by the court will mean the protection of Chicago's health and the benefit of the whole Mississippi valley through the realization of the lakes-to-gulf waterway, which cannot function without an adequate diversion. The diversion, said Mr. Hughes, is both legal and constitutional.

The master's report makes two propositions clear.

It is the province of congress to regulate the navigable waters of the United States, directly or through an appointed agency—in this case the war department. This power lies in the congress by virtue of the commerce clause of the federal constitution. In exercising this power, congress is justified in taking means to improve navigation to the benefit of the people. The diversion of water from one watershed to another watershed is an act within the rights of congress or its delegated agent. The war department, in other words, has full authority to permit water to be sent from Lake Michigan, which is within the St. Lawrence watershed, into the Mississippi.

And thus the proposition is made clear that the St. Lawrence valley is not to dominate the Mississippi valley. The interests of the St. Lawrence are not to strangle the interests of the Mississippi valley. Congress is right in recognizing the needs of the Mississippi valley and in adjusting the flow of water through the sanitary district canal in a manner that will serve that valley. The St. Lawrence valley has no sacred right to water which may be used for the benefit of others. Useful water, under congressional regulation, is something to be shared, not monopolized.

These principles Mr. Hughes lays down. Then he wisely states that the terms under which the diversion is permitted must be settled in the light of conditions as they appear at the time. He does not seek to uphold or deny the justice of the present diversion; he contents himself with stating that such a diversion, so granted, is legal. He does not set forth rules to govern future diversions. His restraint recognizes the fact that sanitary methods of today may be out of date tomorrow, that the needs of navigation today may be very different from those of tomorrow; that what is an engineering impossibility today may be an engineering truism tomorrow. Keeping the fact of congressional authority always in mind, he leaves full scope to the exercise of judgment in the future.

Mr. Hughes also recognizes the fact that the diversion is not only a necessity for the realization of the sanitary canal-Illinois river waterway, but that the diversion is also to some extent an aid to navigation in the Mississippi river at times of low water. We believe we are among the first to point out the possibility of cutting down the flow during high water in the Illinois, when the river was large enough to care for itself, and of increasing it during periods of low water in the river, when it would be an aid to navigation.

From the point of view of Chicago's health and with the program of the sanitary district for further purification taken into consideration, Mr. Hughes finds the war department permit justified, apart from the question of authority. The report is in its way, therefore, an answer to those who have refused to recognize the efforts of Chicago to treat its sewage, and who have tried hard to blind themselves to the admitted fact that the Chicago sanitary district leads the way, and has always led the way, in sanitary progress.

Lastly, Mr. Hughes hints strongly that the course to be taken is the construction of compensating works, a project to which Chicago has already pledged its full share.

"The evidence shows that as a practical engineering matter such compensation can be provided without great difficulty and at relatively small expense," Mr. Hughes says. "So far as the matter lies within the jurisdiction of the United States, congress has adequate power to provide for such works, and so far as it is found that an international agreement is required, the appropriate national authorities have capacity to negotiate it."

The complainants in the case were the states of Wisconsin, Minnesota, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, and New York. Though it is a great deal to expect of them, it is to be hoped that they will turn from arguing and bickering to the construction of compensating works which will make up for all lowerings of the lake—not alone the six inches attributable to the Chicago diversion. And it is also to be hoped, though this, too, is a great deal to expect, that with the opinion of Mr. Hughes supporting Chicago and calling the city's case sound and the diversion legal, the efforts to stir up an anti-Chicago sentiment with screams about a "water steal" will cease.

ASKING HELP FROM THE SUBURBS.

Chicago is a paradox. List its characteristics and you have energy, honesty, a sense of the beautiful and the fine—all those upstanding qualities we like to think about and talk about. But the list is not complete unless we add also civic apathy and political helplessness.

Chicago's chief of detectives announced the other day that his men were going out to shoot down the gangsters and so rid the city of them. He confessed in so many words that legal methods of handling the professional criminal had failed.

How many times has that same pronouncement issued from the police department? How many times has it been taken at face value and blazoned in headlines? And how many times has it come to nothing? We have not had the patience to check our files and find out; the number of times is too many. The latest drive on crime has so far resulted in one obscure gangster shot, one officer severely wounded by a member of his own squad, and an additional bombing by one of the rival gangs.

A cleanup is promised and the gangsters reply by threatening openly that they are going to kill each other. The police arm their cars with machine guns and the gangsters send to St. Louis, Kansas City, Detroit and New York for recruits.

We do not think we are exaggerating when we say that we can recollect no prominent gang leader who has been put out of business in recent years via a legal arrest, trial and sentence in a state court. The ones that have gone have gone as the result of private feuds. A few have been put away for short periods by the federal authorities. But the big ones—the ones still alive—remain and do as they please. Beyond being annoyed now and then by a pickup for questioning they are immune.

Chicago is helpless. The city's "I Will" stutters and lapses into silent protest.

The time has come to ask for help. Those we ask will ask us whether we think they're crazy, but it is time they came in.

It is time the citizens of the suburbs, whose material benefit depends on Chicago, should become citizens of Chicago and accept their responsibilities as voters. The citizens of such suburbs as Evanston, Wilmette, Kenilworth, Winnetka, Glencoe, Oak Park, River Forest, Maywood and Forest Park could swing the balance toward law, order and decency in Chicago.

For the past several years the drift has been out of Chicago and into the suburbs. It has been a natural drift of responsible people to towns where their votes would control and win them clean politics, freedom from crime and schools devoted to education. But Chicago, where they work and to which they owe their livelihood, has suffered as a result.

Now Chicago needs them. It needs them to clean up Chicago. It will be to their own advantage to clean up Chicago. They share in the city though they sleep and vote outside the city limits. It is asking a great deal of them, but in many ways it is to their interest.

Chicago should grant its suburbs autonomy over their school systems and any other division of their government they choose to keep separate, provided they will become a part of Chicago and vote for good government as Chicagoans. Such a plan would require new legislation, but every one interested in good government would support an enabling law. It is for the citizens of the suburbs to say whether they will accept the duty or whether they will continue to live aloof.

STUDENT MILITARY TRAINING.

A resolution adopted by the National Association of State Universities recommends the appointment of a civilian official of the war department to maintain relations with universities and colleges having R. O. T. C. units. The regulation of the R. O. T. C. is now in the hands of the general officers commanding the respective corps areas.

This is a well founded appeal in our opinion. A civilian will more easily understand the peculiar requirements of the military training which is a part of a college course, and which must be fitted into a college curriculum and adapted to the requirements of college students. A military man might also serve, but he should be one particularly selected for the post. Or perhaps a civilian aid might be interposed between R. O. T. C. units and the area commander. The main thing is the adaptation of a training which has grown up through the regular army or in time of war to civilians of a particular type in time of peace.

Without suggesting that the army is not doing all in its power to encourage the R. O. T. C. in universities and colleges, it is fair to urge the army to listen to the desires of university heads. For universities with R. O. T. C. units are making substantial sacrifices and showing unusual devotion.

W. F. Lodge, president of the University of Illinois Dads' association, who criticized the ill-fitting uniforms furnished Illinois cadets, prompts one more suggestion.

The army ought to see to it that the courses offered R. O. T. C. students are interesting and that the equipment furnished is such that the cadet will be proud of his service. Military instruction, both in the class room and on the drill field, can be made a fascinating study if it is properly taught. Few studies and sports can compare with it, combining as it does strategy, the most vivid pages of history, mechanics, the handling of firearms, the command of men, and the unique experience of ordered mass action. And the uniform ought to add to the interest. If R. O. T. C. courses in the universities are not interesting it is because they are poorly taught or because, as Mr. Lodge suggests, the equipment is so poor that young men do not want to be seen on the campus in their country's uniform.

If such defects exist in the R. O. T. C. system it is within the power of the war department to remedy them, and they should be remedied.

"SO THIS IS AMERICA."

[Sydney (Australia) Bulletin.]

Al Smith, governor of New York, and William Hale Thompson, elected mayor of Chicago more or less by armed force, are being seriously discussed as candidates for President of the United States when Calvin Coolidge lapses back into obscurity or thereabouts.

It is pretty possible that one of these may be the head of the greatest republic in the world! . . . And yet not so amazing. For to America goes the credit of disarmament conferences which are insistent on increasing armament; of lynch law for Negroes; of law which weakly surrenders to bomb outrages and mob sentiment; of political, judicial, and social scandals on a scale in keeping with its skyscrapers. . . . Should either be elected at least he will not be markedly incongruous in that extraordinary hotchpotch of political and social incongruities that is the United States.

A LESSON IN CHURCH CO-OPERATION

BY W. FRANK McCLURE.

[Vice president Albert Frank & Co., advertising agency Chicago; five years chairman advertising council, Chicago Association of Commerce, and nine years chairman national advertising commission; organized the Wilmette Sunday Evening club, its president for twelve years.]

The day seems to be past, at least in most suburban communities, when churchgoers feel a responsibility for attending two regular church services on Sunday. Church attendance is largely confined to the morning service. In both large cities and suburban communities a successful church attendance at night is the exception to the rule. This, however, is simply a part of our changing world and is not necessarily a reflection on the religious devotion of the populace.

And yet there is a way of solving this Sunday night problem of the churches in a suburban community. Take, for example, Wilmette, a suburb of Chicago, where the Wilmette Sunday Evening club, now in its thirteenth year, has successfully passed the experimental stage. In a community where once a union Sunday night service brought out an attendance of 50 to 75 now 500 to 1,000 persons gather each Sunday night from October to April in the largest auditorium in the village to hear the great preachers, statesmen, scientists, explorers, and other benefactors of the world. Here each Sunday evening are presented the social, economic, philanthropic, musical, and artistic phases of the world's life in the light of their religious significance. Backed by a laymen's committee of thirty citizens and supported by voluntary subscriptions, this organization has the coöperation of schools, churches, the Parent-Teacher association and the Woman's club.

The evening hour for a union Sunday service, with speakers of national note, affords an opportunity for churches to coöperate and thus present a solid front to outsiders laboring under the delusion that denominations are narrow, bigoted, and unable to work together. In fact, I am convinced that, as a rule, a movement such as this in a suburban community can be successfully run only when backed by a union of churches.

Today in Wilmette and Kenilworth eight churches coöperate in our program. They represent a wide variety of creeds, including Baptist, Presbyterian, Congregational, Episcopal, Lutheran, Methodist Episcopal, and one union church. The ministers of these churches work with me in building the program for each year, and take turns at conducting the devotional part of the program, which precedes the address. They also announce the club's activities from Sunday to Sunday in their respective pulpits and church calendars.

The young people of today, in any community, however, offer the greatest opportunity for such a movement as the Sunday Evening club. They need the type of inspiration which comes from seeing and hearing the great men and women of our times. Such inspiration makes for leadership.

Dr. Frank W. Gunsaulus, for more than a quarter century identified with metropolitan Chicago, once said to me the proudest moment in his life, as a young man, was when he helped Wendell Phillips to put on his overcoat. John T. McCutcheon, in a recent cartoon in THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE in connection with the passing of one of Chicago's great bankers, John T. Mitchell, emphasized the inspiration he would be to the younger generation.

As a boy in my teens in a small Ohio city, I had the privilege of attending a church the pastor of which was 25 years ahead of the times. Each Sunday night for years he brought to his church such men and women as T. De Witt Talmadge, Mary A. Livermore, Anna Shaw, Henry Ward Beecher, and many others. Next to my own parents' influence, this Sunday night program was the greatest inspiration of my boyhood.

At the Wilmette Sunday Evening club, on many Sunday evenings in the last few years, I have witnessed scores of eager boys and girls gathered about the speaker at the close of the evening's program, waiting for his autograph or to shake his hand. The speakers at Wilmette have included such well known personages as President Coolidge, while Vice President of the United States; Thomas R. Marshall, while Vice President; former Gov. Lowden, W. J. Bryan, Lorado Taft; such preachers as Dr. S. Parkes Cadman, Dr. Robert E. Speer, Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis, Rabbi Stephen S. Wise; such authors and poets as Henry Van Dyke, Edwin Markham, and Edgar Guest; such benefactors as Maud Ballington Booth, Jane Addams, and Judge Ben B. Lindsey; such explorers as Stefansson and MacMillan; such educators as President Glenn Frank of the University of Wisconsin, President Max Mason of the University of Chicago, President Henry N. McCracken of Vassar; and scores of other leaders of thought who may well become the heroes and the heroines of young men and women.

This Sunday evening movement in a suburban community can justify itself on the ground of what it can accomplish among young people alone.

Still another need for such an organization as the suburban Sunday evening club is represented in the forum which constitutes a part of each program, relating to civic, national, or international problems. The people in communities such as Wilmette are of that substantial citizenship which must help to solve the problems of modern life. The discussion of these problems from widely different standpoints, enables the seeker after truth to view controversial subjects from all sides. Many times the questions and answers following an address at the Wilmette Sunday Evening club occupy half as much time as the address.

Music also has its rightful part in the year's program. The club crowds the church auditorium to hear the Apollo club, the Swedish chorus, the a cappella choir of Northwestern university, the Fisk jubilee singers, the Madrigal club, and other well known organizations.

The Wilmette Sunday Evening club for twelve years has been financed by means of subscriptions, mostly of $10 each, and the evening collections. The annual budget amounts to $4,500 to $5,000 for approximately thirty Sundays. This budget is chiefly apportioned for speakers, special music, and advertising. The average Sunday evening collection last season exceeded $70.

The value of advertising to the modern church is also nicely demonstrated in any such successful union effort as the Wilmette Sunday Evening club. In fact, it really is no longer possible without the use of advertising to follow the biblical injunction to "go out into the highways and byways" in reaching the unchurched. Every recognized form of good avertising can be used to spread the gospel. The Wilmette Sunday Evening club uses street signs, newspaper space, window cards, slides in the local moving picture theater, notices in church calendars, and often sends announcements by mail to every resident of the village. Incidentally, it is of interest that seven Wilmette churches advertise their morning services in half pages of the local newspaper each week in one joint advertisement containing one message in large type and signed by each church. This is another way for churches to present a solid front of unity and coöperation, to say nothing of the value of the message itself.

The movement which I have described is spreading. In Evanston the Sunday Afternoon club, now six years old, follows much the same program as Wilmette. La Grange, Ill., has organized a club which meets in the local theater. Elgin, Ill., has inaugurated a Sunday Evening club this fall among the churches, the initial meeting of which was attended by a thousand people.

WHY NOT SEWERS FOR POLLUTED AIR?

THE AEROLOGIST once made this statement: "Every house has two sewers. In early times one of these emptied into an open ditch; the other discharged through the housetop into the air. The former discharged liquid waste from the household; the latter, gaseous waste from the furnace. We have learned by sad experience the folly of permitting the former and have corrected it. We will, in time, recognize the folly of the latter."

Later the great English sanitarian, Hill, referred to chimneys as "sewers of the air"; and still more recently the newspapers have been using the same figure of speech in their contentions for abatement of the smoke nuisance.

There is ample proof of the harm that smoke does. This proof has been accumulating for a long time. The latest addition to it is the evidence that smoke and other dirt in the air filters from the light ray that part which is necessary for human welfare. Between the shadows cast by high buildings, the fog and cloud which hang over cities, and the filtration of the light by smoke and dirt, the city dweller and his child, his wife, his manservant, his ox, and his ass have a hard time keeping health.

Whenever any scientific fact is established which tends to clear smoke of its stigma another is established to reconvict it. As soon as it had been proved that smoky air was not a major factor in causing consumption it was established that it was an important factor in causing pneumonia, bronchitis, and colds.

Aviators tell me of a similarity which they notice. In flying over water, some of which is located near a city and some farther away, they can see the effects of the city on the flotsam and on the color and turbidity of the water. They can locate a city while miles away by the great mass of dirty, smoky air which hangs around it.

Mr. Hirsch, a sanitary engineer, proposes a plan for solving the smoke problem which has some similarity to the plan used for sewage. In the Frankfurter Zeitung he proposes that cities build underground smoke tunnels through which air pollution should be drawn by fans to a point outside the city limits, where the products of value should be removed and the purified air discharged into the atmosphere. This is almost an exact duplication of the method used for sewage. It will meet the same objections as were raised against sewers and disposal works. On the other hand, it will have much the same type of advantage.

NO DANGER IN THIS.

Mrs. F. X. S. writes: My brother fell and cracked the base of his skull when he was two or three years old. He is now 18. Would boxing and playing football ever hurt him if he should happen to be hit on the head?

REPLY:

He is in no special danger.

CAUSE OF BAD BREATH.

T. I. M. writes: My breath is very bad, although I use a deodorant. It helps for about ten or fifteen minutes. I have my teeth looked over twice a year and keep them clean. My physical condition seems to be O. K.

REPLY:

Assuming that your nose and tonsils are also free from blame, the cause of your trouble is something that is going wrong in your digestive tract. It is something akin to the cause of acidosis. Eat principally sour milk preparations, vegetables, and fruits. Overcome constipation.

GET IT IN WRITING.

Freeport, Ill., Nov. 14.—[To the Legal Friend of the People.]—I am a small manufacturer and sell my goods through agents. Recently I have had a number of losses because the agents have not been able to collect for the goods sold. Will it be necessary to have an agreement in writing with my agents in order to hold them responsible? J. H. S.

It may be possible to hold them on an oral agreement but of course a written agreement would be easier to prove.

A WIFE IN EVERY COUNTRY.

Chicago, Nov. 14. — [To the Legal Friend of the People.]—1. Can a husband who left his wife and several children in Europe be married to another woman in the U. S. A.? 2. Can he be forced by any law to protect financially his family in old country? M. F. P.

1. He cannot contract a valid marriage without divorcing the first wife.

2. It seems probable that he can but the wife would have to take the action.

TRIBUNE LAW DEPARTMENT.

PLACING THE LOSS.

Chicago, Nov. 15.—[To the Legal Friend of the People.]—I am a property owner and have a mortgage with a large reliable concern downtown. They also attend to the property insurance which runs for five years. I received a bill recently for over $2,000 for insurance as the company had failed. Are we compelled to pay the bill? M. S. J.

We assume that you mean that you are the borrower rather than the lender. If you have signed any writing bearing upon this subject matter the wording of the writing would control. It seems probable that the loss falls on you unless you can show that the broker was in some way to blame.

TRIBUNE LAW DEPARTMENT.

LEGAL SEPARATIONS.

Chicago, Nov. 15.—[Legal Friend of the People.]—My husband left me ten years ago and I have heard nothing of him for the last eight years and do not know where he is. 1. Are we not legally separated after such a length of time? 2. I know there is such a law in California. Is it true in Illinois?

MRS. M. M.

1. While a legal presumption of death arises when a person has been absent for a long time, this presumption would not stand against the actual fact of survival if it is a fact. Hence, we strongly advise securing a divorce instead of relying on this presumption.

2. We believe that you are misinformed as to California law.

EDITORIAL—THANKSGIVING DAY—The readers of THE TRIBUNE will, in spite of the war, find each for himself, whatever his condition, abundant cause for thankfulness to the FATHER for His ten thousand mercies and blessings in which this year has been so prolific. In the aggregate and as component parts of a great nation they will devoutly thank God that the republic still lives, and that in spite of merciless treason at home, of doubtful friends and avowed enemies abroad, and of a savage and devastating war, the greatness and the honor of the country are not less than a year ago when nineteen governors called upon their people to acknowledge the overruling Providence of the Almighty. They will, we hope, see in the continuance of the contest an expression of the will of Heaven itself; and they will pray that the end of all the great musterings and weary marchings, of the turmoil and trouble, of the pain and bloodshed, of the disease and death, will be a triumphant affirmation of the great truths upon which the corner stone of the republic was laid.

FALMOUTH, Va.—It is expected that the railroad will be finished tomorrow from Aqua Aquia creek to the Rappahannock, opposite Fredericksburg. Long lines of road have been corduroyed under direction of Col. Ingalls. Camp fires of the enemy at Fredericksburg are constantly increasing within sight of the federals here. Lee has joined Longstreet, and A. P. Hill, D. H. Hill and Jackson are known to be on their way.

CHICAGO.—This being Thanksgiving day, no paper will be issued from this office tomorrow.

CHICAGO.—The thanks of the editorial corps of THE TRIBUNE are returned to the proprietors of the Tremont house and Briggs house for their kind invitations to eat Thanksgiving dinner with them today.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—There is an excellent prospect that the naval training station for the great lakes will be located on the shores of Lake Michigan, somewhere between Chicago and Waukegan. The board of officers which had the matter under consideration presented its report today. It is understood the board favors a shore station on the highlands that begin at Winnetka.

He approved a recommendation by Food Administrator Hoover reducing the alcoholic content of beer to 3 per cent and also reducing the amount of grain used in brewing to approximately 70 per cent of the volume now consumed.

MINEOLA, L. I.—In a low toned, slow spoken narrative, not more than a couple of hundred words long—all the more impressive because of its brevity and repression—Blanca de Saulles, on trial for the murder of her husband, John Longer de Saulles, told of her visit on Aug. 3 last to his home, "The Box," at Westbury, which resulted in his death at her hands. Of the actual killing she said not a word.

WAR NEWS.—Rome reports furious Teuton attack between the Piave and Brenta crushed by the Italians. Berlin claims a victory in the local fighting. The Russian second army voted to support the Lenin government. The resolution appeals to all soldiers not to support Premier Kerensky and the provisional government generals "against the people." Grand Duke Michael Alexandrovitch, brother of the former emperor, is reported to have been arrested and imprisoned in Smolny institute, the headquarters of the bolsheviki. The British gained more German trenches near Cambrai.

THE TARANTULA AT HOME.

Elmhurst, Ill., Nov. 10.—Tarantulas are common in various parts of Arkansas, Oklahoma, Texas, New Mexico, Arizona, and California. They may be found in burrows or under stones on hillsides. The burrows they either construct themselves or appropriate from a gopher or other rodent. They are known to prefer ground that is fairly free from weeds and grass, and only partly shaded. The soil furnishes amusement for these spiders, as they like to dig long and winding tunnels. For a meal a full grown tarantula takes a large, live grasshopper, or two small ones. When they are sufficiently hungry, however, they will accept a catalpa worm, but caterpillars are little favored in their diet.

The studies and observations of W. J. Baerg of the University of Arkansas, a recognized authority on the subject, have recently been made public in Nature magazine. Mr. Baerg's conclusions are the result of over eight years devoted to a thorough and complete study of the tarantula and its habits. The young spider, he has found, has an exceedingly small chance for survival, as probably not more than two or three out of five thousand young live to maturity, or an age of seven or eight years. The body of the full grown tarantula measures about two inches in length. Since they shed their skin periodically, they possess the great advantage of being able to replace lost appendages all their life. A spider may lose a leg one year, and the next a new one will appear. When a leg is wounded, the tarantula discards the whole leg and proceeds to grow a new one.

In their holes the spiders spend most of the day, but at night, except in winter, they come out to forage. In foraging they rely entirely on touch. If a grasshopper comes in contact with one of the legs of the tarantula, it promptly rears on the four hind legs and with great swiftness strikes the insect with its front legs. Another feature is that although the tarantula has eight eyes it does not use them any more than a blind man does.

THE PLACARDS.

Chicago, Nov. 16.—A correspondent on Nov. 14 asked what individual or group is responsible for the "Drive Sanely" placards which are posted all over the city of Chicago. These placards were prepared and contributed to the city of Chicago through the courtesy of the Westinghouse Lamp company. There were some 2,250 displays put up. These displays were lithographed in fourteen different colors and placed on a stock of heavy cardboard, which the paper manufacturers advised would last about one week in normal climatic conditions; also, this lithographing prevented the running of the colors. In some places these placards were abused and torn, but the majority lasted out well until Friday or Saturday of "Drive Sanely" week so that the purpose was satisfactorily served.

COOLIDGE PENS HIS MESSAGE ON FLOOD, SEAWAY

Demands Millions to Control Rivers.

BY ARTHUR SEARS HENNING.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Nov. 26.—[Special.—The annual message which the President will transmit to the Seventieth congress week after next will reveal Mr. Coolidge in a new rôle.

While reiterating with no abatement his insistence on rigid economy in government expenditures and holding out the promise of a further reduction of taxation, the President will go before the committee for the first time with a comprehensive and far reaching program of internal improvements. As an economizer, Mr. Coolidge is well and favorably known. Now the country is going to get acquainted with Coolidge the spender.

Will Not Read Message.

The President is now engaged in writing the message in which he is directed by the constitution to inform congress "of the state of the Union." If he abides by his present intention he will not address congress in person, but will transmit his views in writing.

Mr. Coolidge now takes the position that so much has been accomplished in retrenchment of government expenditure and retirement of the public debt the nation can undertake without financial strain the concurrent development of internal improvements of vast scope.

The largest undertaking to which he will ask congress to address itself is the control of floods in the Mississippi valley. This is a project which it is calculated will cost altogether between $500,000,000 and $1,000,000,000. Though portions of the cost of the engineering works required may be borne by states and municipalities, the major part of the outlay should be made by the federal government, in the opinion of the President.

Flood Control Devices.

Either at the time of his message or before the holidays, Mr. Coolidge will refer to congress the flood control plans worked out by the war department engineers. These plans provide for a system of levees, spillways, and other flood control devices which can be completed within a decade at a cost well within $100,000,000 a year. Mr. Coolidge wants to see the project authorized before the adjournment of the coming session, so that the actual work can be begun in 1928.

Another vast project which the President will commend to the immediate consideration of congress is the development of inland waterways. This is another undertaking that eventually will cost several hundred millions of dollars.

Great Waterway System.

The time has come, in the opinion of the President, to overhaul our haphazard processes of river improvement. He is in favor of concentrating on the creation of one great system of waterways after another instead of piecemeal improvement of disconnected stretches of unrelated streams.

One of the first systems which the President would have the government complete is that of the Mississippi valley, including the linking of the great lakes and the Gulf of Mexico by means of the Illinois river and the Chicago sanitary canal.

Mr. Coolidge also favors the St. Lawrence shipway project for bringing ocean shipping to great lakes ports.

Roads to South America.

Perhaps the most unusual feature of the President's program has to do with plans he has been evolving for improving the communications between North and South America. Mr. Coolidge thinks that the two continents should be linked not only by a system of hard roads running through Mexico and Central America into Colombia but by airplane lines.

Plans for the development of a privately owned American merchant marine are also a part of the new Coolidge program of constructive improvements, while further legislation for the consolidation of our railways into more efficient systems will be recommended by the President.

There will be great curiosity regarding the recommendations Mr. Coolidge will make to the new congress for legislation to improve the condition of agriculture.

Subject of Taxation.

On the subject of tax reduction the President will recommend enactment into law of the Mellon program which provides for a total reduction of $225,000,000, the scaling of the corporation tax from 13½ to 12 per cent and the repeal of estate taxes. It is well known, however, that the President is lukewarm to the proposition of wiping out the tax on inheritances.

In the domain of foreign affairs the burden of the message will be in the mian a pointing with pride. The administration has pacified Nicaragua and is preparing to supervise an election which will determine whether the conservatives now kept in power by American marines are to continue to administer the government or are to give way to the liberals who were the revolutionists put down by our armed forces. The President will take a hopeful view of relations with Mexico and will recount with satisfaction our course in China.

One of the most interesting portions of the message will give the President's view of the failure of the Geneva conference for a further limitation of naval armaments by the three leading naval powers.

DAVIS WOULD LET 400 ARMY OFFICERS TRY FOR STAFF DUTY

Washington, D. C., Nov. 26.—[Special.]—Legislation designed to remove one of the barriers surrounding the placing of army officers on the general staff corps eligibility list has been forwarded to the house military affairs committee by Secretary of War Davis. Enactment of this legislation would open the doors for the possible selection of 400 additional army officers for inclusion in the exclusive "inner circle" of officers available for general staff duty.

Under the national defense act only those officers recommended as qualified for general staff duty upon graduation from the general staff school are added to the eligibility list. Officers not selected as qualified for staff duty on the completion of their courses are debarred from selection at a later date. The new legislation would open the door for the selection on the eligibility list of all debarred graduates from the general staff schools regardless of whether they completed their courses before or after the war.

CHRISTMAS SEAL ORIGIN RECALLED AS DRIVE STARTS

The origination of the Christmas tuberculosis seal was recalled by officials of the American Tuberculosis institute as the 20th annual sale, which opened on Thanksgiving, got under way yesterday.

Twenty-four years ago Einar Holboell, then a young mail clerk in the postoffice at Charlottenlund, Denmark, conceived the idea of a voluntary tax on Christmas greeting cards which would benefit the poor. He gained permission from the ministry to sell the stamps at postoffices for a fund to erect a hospital for tubercular children.

In 1907 Miss Emily P. Bissell of Wilmington, Del., adopted the idea and interested the American Red Cross in the project. The first national sale in 1908 brought in $135,000 and the amount has grown larger each year. The sale of seals has saved 100,000 lives annually among tubercular patients, officials declare.

At the time of his death, last February, Holboell was president of the International Tuberculosis association and a member of the board of directors of the National Tuberculosis Association of Denmark. As a mark of honor to the originator the Danish Christmas seal for 1927 bears his picture.

MRS. VANDERBILT GRANTED DIVORCE BY RENO COURT

Cornelius Jr. Fails to Press His Suit.

Reno, Nev., Nov. 26.—(AP)—Mrs. Rachel Vanderbilt was today granted a divorce from Cornelius Vanderbilt Jr., former publisher, on charges of desertion. A complaint filed by Vanderbilt charging cruelty was withdrawn. Mrs. Vanderbilt was not present.

Vanderbilt said after the decree was granted that he was "very sad" and spoke of the happy moments he had spent with Mrs. Vanderbilt. He said he would live in Reno in the future.

Vanderbilt filed his suit on Nov. 10, charging that his wife discouraged his newspaper activities. The complaint had scarcely been filed when a cross-petition was entered by Mrs. Vanderbilt. No mention was made of a financial settlement.

Vanderbilt lost a fortune in tabloid publication ventures. He established tabloids in Los Angeles, San Francisco, and in Miami, Fla.

Refused further aid by his father when he was pressed for funds in 1926, Mr. Vanderbilt saw his papers go into receivership. He then began writing special articles in the hope of meeting all his debts.

Mrs. Vanderbilt was the former Rachael Littleton of Chattanooga, Tenn., and a half sister of Martin W. Littleton, New York attorney. They were married in April, 1920.

TIE UP MARSHAL, ROB ARKANSAS BANK OF $30,000

Bearden, Ark., Nov. 26.—(AP)—Posses, off to a belated start because of the forcible detention of the town marshal, failed today to intercept five middle aged men who robbed the Farmers and Merchants bank of approximately $30,000 during the night.

The robbers, riding in an automobile bearing a Texas license, arrived in town about 1 o'clock. Seizing Tom Pierce, town marshal, they locked him in a warehouse. Later they took him to the bank and held him while they worked deliberately with an acetylene torch until they opened the safe.

After gathering up the money, the robbers took Pierce to a refrigerator car about 50 yards away and locked him up. Pete Culp, an early worker, happened along and he too was placed in the car. Trainmen found the two men several hours later.

JOHN COOLIDGE GOES CALLING ON MISS TRUMBULL

Hartford, Conn., Nov. 26.—[Special.]—John Coolidge, son of President Coolidge, is visiting Gov. Trumbull's daughter, Florence, at the governor's home in Plainville.

John's classmate at Amherst, Edward Young, son of a former Brooklyn clergyman, and Florence's classmate at Mount Holyoke college, Miss Virginia Rogers of Pittsburgh, are other guests of the week-end party.

Last night they danced in the ballroom of the Hotel Bond in this city, where R. C. Wood, John's secret service guard, is registered.

What Is the Difference In Funerals?

There is many a small town newspaper whose owner acts as newsgatherer, compositor, editor, bookkeeper, printer, delivery "boy," and collector, all in one. He is Jack of all trades, and master of none. The size of his business does not permit him to be anything else. His newspaper shows it!

There is, in this sense, a parallel between the small town newspaper and the business of conducting funerals, even in a big city like Chicago. The funeral director whose business is small cannot be expected to be a master of every feature that enters into such a delicate and intricate business. It is only the largest establishment that can employ experts to give to each phase the "master touch" which your love and devotion demand.

The largest funeral establishment in America is known to be "Hursen's." There is a Hursen "funeral-home" on the North Side, one on the West Side, and one on the South Side. On every "Hursen" funeral is lavished the "master touch" of experts, each supreme in his field.

It is unusual "Hursen" elegance, unusual expertness of service, unusual "Hursen" manner, and unexcelled Hursen automobile hearses and passenger cars that have made "Hursen" funerals unexcelled in America. What is more, the price of a "Hursen" funeral is only a fraction of the charges made elsewhere. So, call Hursen, of course!

POLICE ON ALERT AS RED ARMS DELEGATES ARRIVE IN GENEVA

GENEVA, Nov. 26.—(AP)—The soviet Russian delegation to the forthcoming preparatory disarmament conference arrived here today, headed by Maxim Litvinoff, vice commissar for foreign affairs.

Many police and detectives met them at the station on orders of the Swiss authorities, who desire to avoid repetition of the controversy caused by the assassination of Vaslov Vorovsky at the Lausanne conference, but everything was orderly.

M. Litvinoff declined to make any statement before the meeting of the committee next Wednesday.

ANGLO-U. S. SEA RIGHTS PARLEY URGED BY CECIL

LONDON, Nov. 27.—[Sunday.]—(AP)—Viscount Cecil, who recently resigned from the Baldwin cabinet to carry on a campaign for disarmament contributes a long article in the Sunday Times under the caption "Great Britain and the United States—Twisting Each Other's Tails."

He discusses all the points of the difficulty between the two nations, including disarmament, naval competition and belligerent rights at sea. Holding that conditions of naval warfare are different from those of Napoleonic times, when England was virtually self-supporting, Lord Cecil points out that England was lucky in the world war in being able to bottle up the German fleet, but that she might not be so lucky in the next war.

He suggests the two countries enter into a full discussion of the whole question of belligerent rights at sea.

An article by Editor James L. Garvin in the Sunday Observer strongly advocates a treaty of unconditional arbitration between Great Britain and the United States. Mr. Garvin says Great Britain was ready for such a treaty thirty years ago but that the Irish question then stood in the way. Now, he says, "We are as ready as then to conclude a treaty which would be epoch making in the cause of peace."

Doctor, Divorcee Shot to Death in His Office

Cincinnati, O., Nov. 26.—(AP)—Mrs. Artie McGough, 33, formerly of Philadelphia, and Dr. Charles Dryer, 38, Cincinnati physician, died tonight within two hours after they were discovered desperately wounded in Dryer's downtown office. Both blamed their wounds on Mrs. McGough's former husband. Their assailant escaped.

PATRIOT SOCIETY FOUNDED IN 1783 WILL MEET HERE

First Session of Cincinnati Outside Original States.

The Society of Cincinnati, one of the most historic and exclusive of American patriotic organizations, will hold a dinner on Dec. 3 at the University club. This is the first time in history, so far as is known, that the Cincinnati society has held any gathering outside the thirteen original states.

Among Chicagoans who will attend the dinner are: Carter H. Harrison, Eames MacVeagh, Peter Vroom, Maj. W. Lee Hart, the Rev. Arthur Rogers, William A. Pope, and Arthur W. Maynard.

The Society of the Cincinnati was organized in 1783 by officers of the continental army and French officers who saw service with them in the revolution. Membership in the organization is limited strictly to the direct male descendants of these original members and at the present time constitutes a total of only 1,000.

Eighty Members in Midwest.

In the middle west there are about eighty members, many of whom find it impossible to attend the annual state meetings in the east. It is to accommodate these that the meeting on Dec. 3 has been called in Chicago. About forty members will be present.

So exclusive was the organization even at its founding, that Thomas Jefferson, Samuel and John Adams and Benjamin Franklin denounced it as threatening liberty in America by forming a race hereditary military nobles. The organization, however, had for its purpose nothing more sinister than the perpetuation of the memory of the formal separation of the colonies of North America from Great Britain.

The name of Cincinnati was adopted by the society because of the veneration of its founders for the character of the illustrious Roman, Lucius Quintius Cincinnatus. The city of Cincinnati was named for the society by one of its founders, Gen. St. Clair, when he was sent to the Ohio territory as governor.

Washington Its First Chief.

George Washington was the first president general of the society and served until his death in 1799.

Among prominent present day members are: former Senators Chauncey Depew, John Sharp Williams, and William Hall Milton, Govs. Charles S. Whitman and Richard I. Manning; Gens. Samuel S. Sumner, Cornelius Vanderbilt, Theodore A. Bingham, Charles H. Whipple, and Henry T. Allen; Hobart Chatfield-Taylor, James Rowland Angell, Henry Van Dyke, the Marquis du Quesne, and the Marquis de Saint Pierre.

DESPONDENT MOTHER KILLS SELF.

Harrisburg, Ill., Nov. 26.—[U. P.]—Mrs. Robert Killman, 34, mother of three children, shot herself to death at her home in Harco last night. Despondency is believed to have been the cause.

Preaches Tonight

EVANGELINE BOOTH.

Enthusiastic over the opening of the central territorial congress of the Salvation Army, Commander Evangeline Booth arrived in Chicago yesterday. She appeared much concerned about the companionate marriage situation and said that Judge Lindsey had evidently either been misquoted or misinterpreted. Commander Booth will preach tonight at the Moody church on "The Christ of the Doorstep." There will be a large meeting this morning at the Erlanger theater. At 2:30 p. m. a music festival will be held at the Moody church.

SEEK TO REOPEN GAMBLING IN PARIS SUBURBS

PARIS, Nov. 26.—(AP)—Public gambling houses seem likely to flourish again just outside of Paris, around which there now is a sixty mile restricted zone.

The finance committee of the chamber of deputies has approved a bill abolishing this ban and many deputies are working earnestly for passage of the law. Andre Tardieu, minister of public works, among other prominent politicians, advocates additional facilities for the public to take a chance.

Parisiens and their foreign guests at present are obliged to go to glorified gambling resorts, such as Deauville, Le Touquet, Dinard, and La Baule, if they want to risk their money outside of the private gambling clubs and racetrack pari-mutuel machines.

Som opposition is expected, for it was the activities of gambling wives of parliament members who spent the money of their law-making husbands at the Enghien Casino, just outside of Paris, that had much to do with enactment of the restrictive law in 1911.

GOLD DIGGING BY WIVES AROUSES WRATH OF JUDGE

New rules in handling separate maintenance suits, to protect husbands from gold digging wives, will be started this week by Superior Judge Joseph Sabath.

Hereafter, before awarding temporary alimony to a wife suing for separate maintenance, the court will investigate the merits of her bill, Judge Sabath said yesterday, rather than granting her a temporary allowance merely on a showing that she is living away from her husband and that he is able to pay.

As a further safeguard to husbands, the judge said hereafter defendants contesting the merits of a separate maintenance suit will be given a preference on the trial calender, assuring them a prompt hearing.

"I am moved to change the rules of my court," the judge said in making his announcement, "by the fact that many separate maintenance suits are filed for the sole purpose of using the suit as a club to make the husband pay heavily for a divorce.

"I am opposed to separate maintenance where there are no children. It tends toward immorality by prohibiting the estranged husband and wife from marrying others.

"There are cases in the files of the Superior court clerk's office where women have been drawing temporary alimony year after year and the suit is never brought to trial on its merits.

"I am working on an act which would make separate maintenance a temporary decree. Two years after the decree is entered the wife would have to modify her bill to make it a divorce or alimony would be cut off."

Coolidges and Party of Friends Cruise on Potomac

Washington, D. C., Nov. 26.—(AP)—President and Mrs. Coolidge sailed on the Mayflower today for a week-end cruise. Their guests were Senator and Mrs. McNary of Oregon, Senator and Mrs. Oddie of Nevada, and Senator and Mrs. Dale of Vermont, Mrs. Frank W. Stearns, and Mr. and Mrs. E. T. Clark.

Negro of Back to Africa Movement to Be Deported

Atlanta, Ga., Nov. 26.—(AP)—Marcus Garvey, Negro leader of a "Back to Africa" project several years ago, whose five year sentence in the federal penitentiary for using the mails to defraud recently was commuted, was turned over to imigration officials here today for deportation as an undesirable alien.

I. W. W. WAR ON SOCIETY BREEDS COLORADO STRIKE

Miners' Woes Furnish Pretext for Attack.

hearts beside the "Ludlow massacre" of 1914, when the United Mine Workers' strike was crushed in this state.

Approach this Columbine made by man, it is a blot, a dark spot, in a little hillside, open to all the winds of the plains, facing the ramparts that stopped many a covered wagon of pioneer days.

Ordinarily a scene of busy industry, the mine is idle and a sinister silence hangs over it. In the town below thousands of idle men are milling about, talking of "scabs" and "murderers." In front of the mine, around it, is a patrol of youthful soldiers. Their camp is on the hillside. Machine guns, tear bombs, helmets, rifles, cavalry, smart officers, all the scene of war.

Strange Medley at Funeral.

The men in the town are gathering in front of a little white meeting hall. It is a strange babel of tongues. Mexicans, Greeks, Italians, men from the south of Europe, the Balkans, a few Negroes and Welsh are there.

From the hall comes the sound of a chant, and all hats are removed as a Greek priest, a patriarch with long whiskers, hair tied in a knot at the back of his head, a long, black robe comes out of the church and stands silently on the steps looking over the crowd. It is the funeral of a riot victim at the Columbine. They have a funeral a day this week, and the faces of the men in the streets become more grim.

The American flag lies over the casket, H. W. Duke, I. W. W. leader, walks beside it. It is lowered at the steps for a few minutes, rested in a tilted position so that all can see the dead, calm face, the young, dark face of the victim of this situation. Thousands look at him, not a word is heard.

The casket is placed in a hearse, the widow walks weeping in the dust behind, and the thousands fall in line, four abreast for the march to the cemetery under the pines and the blue sky. Here more ritual and a reading by the I. W. W. leader, and another "martyr" is covered up whose spirit will be used to push the thousands on and on into more trouble.

On this the strike leaders thrive. One theory of the Columbine battle is that the I. W. W. feared to lose the strike and deliberately sought the clash. Another theory is that the state officers and the operators planned it so the hand of the governor would be forced into calling the troops out.

Miner Explains Scene.

This is the picture, however, and this is the voice of a miner explaining it.

"I am not a member of the I. W. W. nor a union man—never had a card and don't want one. I am as good an American as any of those gunmen at the mine. I went over in 1917 and know how to fight. I have a home and a wife and children.

"Why can't the employers be fair? They cheated us on the scales. They make us shovel rock maybe all day, without pay. Talk about $7 or $8 a day. Why, I have only averaged $2.60 a day. The other states around here are paying the Jacksonville scale—Why can't this state? The United Mine Workers betrayed us in 1914. Now the I. W. W. are leading us. They are all right. They are very careful to counsel against violence and guns. We have got to live.

"Do they want to make thieves and criminals of us, or start a revolution? Why can't the governor give us a fair deal? Money can buy anything in this world, and the poor man must stay poor. I wish some of the bosses and politicians could go into a mine and see what it is like. Two miles below, knocking coal out of solid rock. A bunch of kids up there with guns now, waiting to kill. If we wanted to, we could wipe them all out. But all we want is to force the operators into giving us a fair wage."

The miners' wages were $7.25 a day, the Jacksonville scale under which the eastern strike was settled, in 1920. They were cut to $6.20, then to $5.52. The day before the strike was called the wage was raised to $6.20 a day in the southern field, but it was too late. The state commission gave the northern field a differential of 57 cents a month ago, making their pay $6.77.

But the trouble is the miners don't get work all the time. Much of the summer is spent in idleness. The operators cannot find a market for full capacity production. One commission report for a six years survey, shows an average of 184 working days a year. Even at the $6.20 wage this makes an income of $880.80 a year. In the Walsenburg district last year the miners are said to have worked only 107 days.

What aggravates the miners chiefly is that in Wyoming the wage is $7.92, in New Mexico about $7 and in Utah as high as $8.30. The same retail price is charged for the coal, $10.75 a ton. The operators say conditions are different here and this is not a fair comparison.

The operators are divided in policy. The situation is dominated by the Colorado Fuel and Iron company, the Rockefeller companies, and the Rocky Mountain Fuel company. The rest of the mines are independent. There is no common voice here. Some of the operators are willing to treat with their own employès, but these have come more and more under the leadership of the footloose, careless, "wobblies," who don't care much about the peace terms or length of the strike, so long as they can promote their ideas of the industrial revolution.

There are said to be about 8,500 members of the I. W. W. in the Colorado field now.

I. W. W. Planned Strike.

The I. W. W. travelers, out of Chicago and the east, modest and humble enthusiasts who drew only $4 a day from their organization, worked into the hearts of the miners, and year after year planted the seed of this rebellion.

They decided a test of strength as a protest and an outlet for their emotions, at the time of the Sacco-Vanzetti excitement last August, and on Sept. 6 wrote their first strike letter to the state commission. They did not expect more than 2,500 to go out and were surprised when this number came up to 8,000.

The state law makes it necessary for strikers to give 30 days notice of their intentions. The objection made at once to this notice was that it was not given by real representatives of working miners. The strike commitee was composed of John Shepard, Louis Rino, John Vegsileos, Leandio Gallegos, Nemissio Edilla, and Walter Chatterbock.

The strike conference was held at Aguilar, and the industrial commission reported after investigation that it was unable to find that a single delegate to the conference had been elected by his fellow-workers in a meeting for that purpose. The attorney general reported that he had positive information that Shepard and Rino were discharged by the Colorado Fuel and Iron company on Sept. 5, one day prior to the strike notice, that Vegsileos had quit the service of the C. F. and I. company on Aug. 25, 1927, that Edilla was discharged on Aug. 27, that Gallegos and Chatterbock were not in the employ of the company in September. Neither was Secretary Payne of the strike committee, an employé.

Therefore the attorney general declared the strike notice was insufficient and void and the strike unlawful.

The industrial commission of which Thomas Annear, Democratic state chairman, is the head, formally declared that no legal demand had been made for an increase in wages or changes in working conditions, that it was only the Walsenberg branch of the I. W. W. that had acted. Furthermore, the I. W. W. committee had caleld a strike not only in the C. F. and I. mines, but in all the coal mines of the state.

The answer to this was a second strike letter of Sept. 17, in which the strike committee expressed the fear that the state committee had gone over to the coal companies in maintaining present wages and issued a challenge to have open meetings of miners addressed by members of the commission and a strike vote taken.

This challenge was not met and the strike called for Oct. 18 went into effect. About 4,500 walked out at first.

As the I. W. W. with bands and American flags went about in mass picketing, enthusiasm rose, or fear was spread—the operators say the latter—and the strike roster mounted until most of the mines were shut and all crippled. A. S. Embree came out as the first I. W. W. leader, then dynamite George Jardine, Roger Jancezon, Paul Stedler, Kresten Svaam, Karl Clemons, Flaming Mamie Salich, and others. As fast as they were jailed under the state anti-picketing law others arose to take their places, and the call went east for 1,000 good workers to come to Colorado. Their cry was "solidarity."

What the State Faced.

So the state was faced with an unlawful strike, led by enemies of society as it exists.

In the matter of keeping order, the governor has been patient with the men. He sympathizes with their troubles. Some say he has been too patient, that he should have sent the militia in at once.

When things began to get out of hand the governor called his law enforcement squad into action, a force of 20 men increased to 40. This was originally a prohibition squad, but the governor has never seen fit to use it for that purpose. The old state police, starved out of office in previous administration, were sadly missed.

Open Mine as Test.

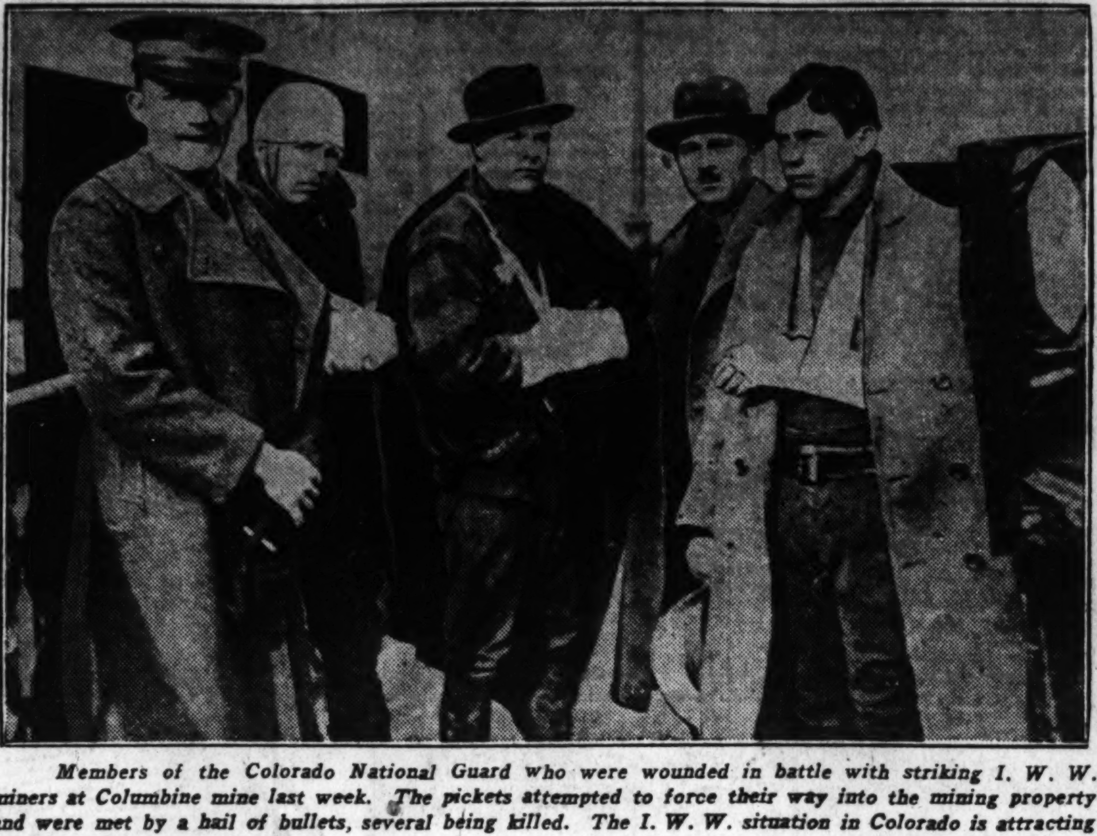
It was decided to open the Columbine mine in the north as a test of protection, and the state officers under Capt. Louis Scherf went up there. Just what happened in the morning of the riot is disputed. Certainly the miners were ignoring the anti-picketing law. They advanced to the mine deadline. Whether they hurled stones at the armed officers first or not, is disputed. Adam Bell, a Welsh miner, is said to have climbed the fence and shouted to the others to come on.

He was beaten back, and fell into the arms of a girl, who covered his body with the American flag, and then was beaten by the officers according to the miners' story.

One peculiar part of the morning's work was that Mr. Annear, Col. Paul P. Newlon, and several other militia officers, and Sterling B. Ley, personal representative of the governor, happened to be on the spot at 6:15.

Evidently trouble was expected. It came and no one knows where it will break out next.

CASUALTIES IN COLORADO MINE STRIKE BATTLE



Members of the Colorado National Guard who were wounded in battle with striking I. W. W. miners at Columbine mine last week. The pickets attempted to force their way into the mining property and were met by a hail of bullets, several being killed. The I. W. W. situation in Colorado is attracting nation-wide attention.

COOLIDGE'S NAME IS BOOED BY REDS IN MINE WAR PROTEST

New York, Nov. 26. — [Special.]—The name of Calvin Coolidge was met with cat calls this afternoon when a speaker at a meeting held in Union square to protest against the killing of workers in the Colorado mine war called the President a "cool headed, hard hearted skinflint."

These terms were applied by Robert Minor, editor of The Daily Worker, before a crowd that swelled from a few hundred to several thousand. He held the President responsible for the refusal of mine operators to grant increases to their employés.

Mr. Minor was one of half a dozen speakers who connected John D. Rockefeller's name directly with the shootings. Another, Max Schachtman, editor of the Labor Defender, made the additional accusation that the house of Morgan is back of the Colorado killings.

GRAND OLD MAN OF FRANCE NOW LEARNS DANCING

Ex-Premier Clemenceau Proves Health Is Good.

The Tiger of France, Georges Clemenceau, war-time premier, tells of his philosophy of life in a series of intimate conversations with his lifelong friend, Constantin Colas. At the age of 86 the great statesman, from his retirement in the Vendee, bares his soul.

BY CONSTANTIN COLAS.

PARIS, Nov. 26.—"I've got to learn a few new steps so that I can dance at the wedding of my grandson," former Premier Clemenceau of France declared a few days ago, "and get ready enough work to keep me out of mischief during my annual sojourn at Vendee. So I can't deny much nonsense."

This was by way of denying reports in the press that he was seriously ill, not able to receive friends, etc.

His whims are strikingly original.

He will not light a cigar unless there is a box full of them at hand. He will not write by electric or gas light, but prefers an old-fashioned oil burning lamp.

He loves the sea with deep affection and had his house built on a strand in Vendee, almost entirely surrounded by water, and he writes there, overlooking the blue ocean. Flowers in profusion bloom on his property, but he will not have them tended by other hands. He conducts various horticultural experiments, but without assistance. He hates newspapers and will only read the headlines of one, the Petit Parisien.

He will write only at a table shaped like a horseshoe, at which he sits comfortably, surrounded by huge piles of papers. He loves dancing.

Recently he attended a "soirée" at the home of old family friends. A number of young people who were present made the phonograph play so fast that Clemenceau, trying to keep pace with it, soon was out of breath. So each time he passed the instrument he pushed the button which reduced its speed and went on dancing. Each time the young people passed they restored the button to its former position.

His Idea on Dancing.

"Is the music too fast for you?" one of the young ladies asked. He said: "No, but when I learned to dance I was taught to do it as though I enjoyed it and not as though I were running to catch a train!"

Near Vendee the peasants tell many stories about the former premier.

Once he rode on horseback to a village store, and without alighting bade its proprietor fetch him a cigar. He smoked it and said: "Fetch me another." After smoking this one he asked that another be fetched, until six had been smoked in this manner. Then, with an approving countenance, he hitched his horse to a post before the door, and alighted, saying: "They're not so bad—guess I'll go in and try some!"

"What is love?" I asked Clemenceau. "It has been variously defined by thousands of people, but what is your definition?"

"Love," he said—and his eyes became fixed far away in pensive reflection, "is whatever gives one legitimate contentment in life, without so contenting that it makes one feel there's no need to continue striving.

"Love," he went on, "denotes a concentration of tender feeling upon one particular person, most commonly the affection existing between parent and child, and that affection between two persons of opposite sex which forms the normal basis of marriage. It manifests itself in a desire for the welfare of the beloved object, in a longing for his presence and delight in his approval, and sorrow at parting.

Doesn't Agree with Leibnitz.

"Leibnitz' definition that to love is 'to be carried away, to take pleasure in the well being or happiness of the loved being,' restricts the emotion to protecting love. Socrates distinguishes between heavenly and vulgar love, and utterly condemns the latter, and Plato follows in his steps. I believe in heavenly and vulgar love—I believe, in fact, in all forms of love except 'Platonic love,' which is said to be the affection between two persons of opposite sex that is free from all sexual desire, that is a striving after the infinite, and a lowly adoration of perfect beauty.

"Why don't you bellevei n 'Platonic love'?" I asked.

"Because it leaves out sex and consequently leaves out life. This is well enough to read about, but is a fairy tale. It is life as some imagine it, not life as it is lived. And we must know life as it is lived if we are to know life at all. Why, sex is more almighty than the dollar! Sex, my dear Constantin, goes on forever!

"There are three things that never go out of style, and sex is two of them!"

"Will you briefly outline your philosophy of life?" I asked.

"After assimilating various philosophical systems, my own stands between the dualism of Descartes, who separated all things into two heterogeneous substances, and the monism of Spinoza, who held that all are absorbed in one divine substance. So far as substance is concerned, I hold with Leibnitz that the universe consists of simple and similarly constituted monads, which differ in quality but are all alike in being percipient and self-active.

"These series of monads, though acting independently, are all in harmony with each other and with God, who is the prime and efficient cause of all things. I hold that the ultimate reality of substance is force, each monad having an inherent striving property, the ultimate aim of God's universe being perfection. I recognize the presence of evil, but believe in its final suppression, thus contending that this is the best possible world, and that faith and reason are essentially harmonious.

"Work is the means of extracting this reality from substance, work will light the way to ultimate perfection. Only through work may we realize ourselves truly and fully. Just as labor paves the roadways for humans to walk upon, labor will pave the path to glory. Work! Work! Even the word is an inspiration. VIVE LE TRAVAIL!"

[Copyright: 1927: By Constantin Colas.]

CHILD IS BURNED TO DEATH.

Ruth Callow, 4 years old, of 453 West 42d place, was fatally burned yesterday afternoon when her clothing was ignited as she danced about a bonfire in a lot near her home.

JOBLESS YOUTH FIRES AT VIENNA MAYOR; ARRESTED

VIENNA, Austria, Nov. 26.—(AP)—A 23 year old youth tried to kill Karl Seitz, mayor of Vienna, today. He fired several revolver shots at the mayor, but all missed their mark.

The youth, whose name is Strebinger, was arrested. He declared he was not a socialist, but had been without employment, and planned to kill Seitz, who in addition to being mayor is a former president of the Austrian national assembly and was one of the signatories of the 1919 peace treaty.

Mayor Seitz, who is a Socialist, took active measures in suppressing the riots in Vienna last July.

The attempt at his assassination bears some resemblance to the attack made by a rail worker in June, 1924, on Chancellor Seipel. The chancellor was wounded, but recovered.

"Difference of opinion makes horse-racing," is the immemorial proverb and auspice of the sport of kings. Yet, for Man O'War who was indifferent to all but the victorious goal, king and stable boy rise to agree there was no difference of opinion when that super-horse faced the barrier.

No Difference of Opinion
When Supremacy is so Outstanding

In its repertoire of brilliant abilities, the New Hudson Super-Six asserts its supremacy in vivid performance facts that stand free and clear of opinion or debate.

Here is a new power in motordom—totally different in development and expression—totally new in range and efficiency—the smooth and mighty power of the steam engine delivered with silky ease and vivacity.

From standing start the New Hudson Super-Six takes the full shot of power, with no suggestion of lurch or stagger, mounting to high speed with greater smoothness and rapidity than any stock car we know, regardless of size, number of cylinders or price.

The basis of this great Hudson capacity is a new companion invention to the Super-Six principle which turns waste heat to power. Together they combine the highest efficiency in power generation and transmission ever achieved within our knowledge. It makes Hudson the most economical car per pound weight in the world.

In the new Hudson motor, spark knock heretofore characteristic of the high-compression motor is eliminated.

Ordinary gasoline gives the performance results sought through special and higher-priced fuels. By Hudson's method of vaporizing raw gasoline that enters the combustion chamber, oil dilution is prevented, and heat formerly wasted through the exhaust becomes useful power.

It is receiving the greatest public reception in Hudson history, because in all ways it is the greatest Hudson Super-Six ever built.

Only 1 Moving Part
—One of the 3 big features of the SIMPLE Autopoint

HERE is the pencil that has captivated Big Business. That is used by thousands of firms to carry their advertising message as a good-will builder. That is standard equipment in countless firms where wooden pencils have been a large item of waste.

Autopoint is a unique pencil. Its simplicity is its chief claim on business men. But its beauty, its sturdy lightness are also major factors. There is but one moving part to Autopoint—hence it is the first no-jamming pencil.

You have had mechanical pencils that looked pretty . . . that claimed big things. But sooner or later they jammed, and after that it was useless. There simply is nothing to jam in the Autopoint—the simple mechanism is an entirely different principle.

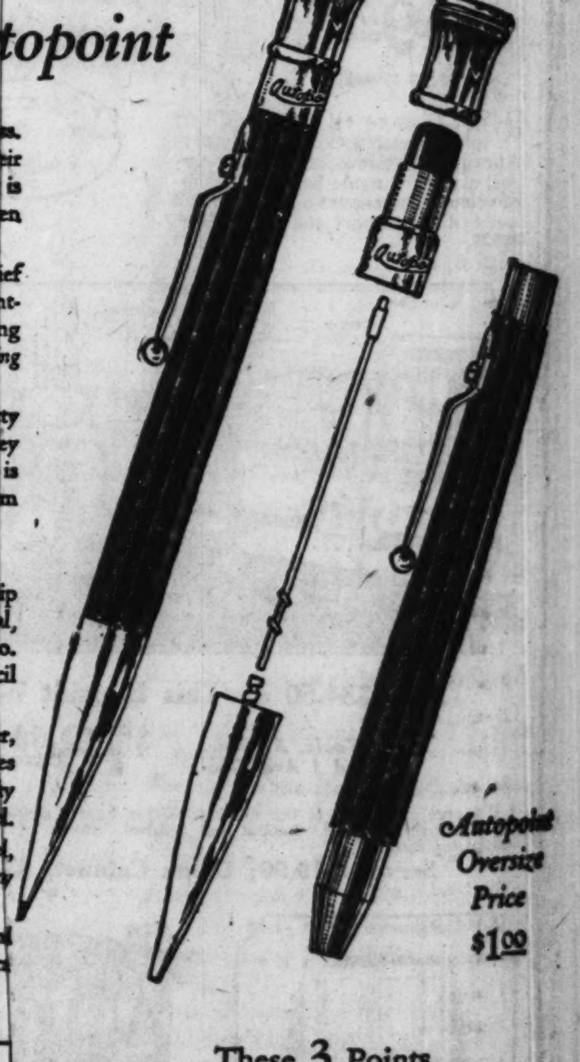
Autopoint Oversize is a new model. A big, easy-to-grip pencil—use it and it will win you. The balance is ideal, the "feel" so different. Autopoint Oversize is $1.00. Use it a week and if you don't find it a better pencil than you have ever owned, we'll refund your money.

All Autopoints, no matter which model you prefer, have three exclusive features—Bakelite barrel, which gives it strength and lightness, beauty and balance—simplicity of mechanism — and a guaranteed no-jamming feed.

Buy an Autopoint and know long, uninterrupted, trouble-free service. And a pencil you are proud to carry in your pocket.

See the wide range of Autopoints in many styles, and a wide variety of colors and finishes, at leading dealers. Or write us.



Autopoint Oversize Price $1.00

Autopoint Pencils to build your business

For manufacturers, wholesalers, banks, retail merchants, and others, Autopoint . . . the Better Pencil, made of Bakelite . . . is a great business builder. Many of the largest companies in America use Autopoint Pencils, stamped with their names, for advertising purposes. These sturdy, reliable pencils are a constant reminder of the giver. They build good-will and prestige for your firm. A few prominent users of Autopoint are:

PIONEER TRUST & SAVINGS BANK
WESTINGHOUSE ELECTRIC & MFG. CO.
NATIONAL TEA COMPANY
REO MOTOR CAR CO.
GENERAL TIRE & RUBBER CO.
SIMONDS SAW & STEEL CO.
VACUUM OIL COMPANY
KOHLER COMPANY
LARKIN SOAP COMPANY
OGLE CONSTRUCTION CO.

Write or phone for representative to call. Prices on quantity lots and complete information by mail if you prefer.

These 3 Points

No Jamming
① When lead is exhausted, the feeding mechanism goes into "neutral"—it does not jam. Jamming is what breaks ordinary mechanical pencils.

Bakelite Barrel
② The Bakelite Barrel—an unchanging, light-weight material. Most beautiful material ever used for pencils.

Simplest Mechanism
③ Only 1 moving part in the Autopoint. This is the simplest and smoothest working mechanism of any pencil. Nothing to go wrong.

SHARP and shrill a whistle note cuts the air . . . the ball soars high in a graceful, twisting arc . . . twenty-two husky players snap into action . . . the game is on!

All's well during the first quarter . . . then the strain begins to tell on those who can't stand the gaff. Substitutions are made. In the final quarter it's stamina that counts.

Just as every coach depends upon men who keep on playing a hard, fast game in spite of strain and punishment, so do Architects and Builders depend upon the stamina and efficiency of Sloan Flush Valves for lasting and unfailing service.

In the country's largest stadiums, Sloan Flush Valves exhibit their remarkable stamina. Idle and neglected for weeks at a time, they are suddenly subjected, in one afternoon, to more hard use than the average flushing equipment receives in several months—but they function properly just the same.

SLOAN FLUSH VALVES require no closet tanks or "flush boxes". They save space. They are easy to install and easy to operate. They save large sums yearly in maintenance costs. Neat and attractive in appearance, they are the most satisfactory flushing equipment for every type of building, from the Small Residence or Apartment to the Largest Hotel.

SLOAN FLUSH VALVES

No Wasted Water

SLOAN FLUSH VALVES deliver the exact amount of water required—no more, no less—and then shut off, even when the handle is held in the open position. For over 21 years Sloan Flush Valves have reduced water bills wherever installed.

No Regulating

SLOAN FLUSH VALVES require no regulating of any kind. Their precision in delivering a uniform flush is not affected by different methods of operation and changes in water pressure. Delicate and troublesome regulating devices are eliminated by correct principles of design.

OUT OF PRISON, FORBES VOWS TO DEFEND HARDING

Sensation Promised by Ex-Vet Bureau Head.

Leavenworth, Kas., Nov. 26.—[Special.]—Col. Charles R. Forbes regained his freedom today and straightway announced he would use it to clear the name of President Harding.

The colonel completed the two year term, minus time off for good behavior, to which he was sentenced in Chicago for defrauding the government in contracts for hospitals for the war wounded. He formerly was director of the United States veterans' bureau.

Ordinary Leavenworth convicts emerge in prison made clothes that mark them unmistakably. Col. Forbes was attired in a tailored suit as he left the prison at 12:01 a. m. His necktie was black and new. He looked the prosperous business man.

Bound for St. Louis.

Before entering a St. Louis bound automobile, the colonel gave out a typewritten statement to newspaper men.

An "erroneous impression" exists in the public mind concerning President Harding, the statement said. Forbes promised by startling facts to "put to shame a lot of sycophants and calumniators whose chief purpose seems to be the destruction of the good character of one of the noblest men it has been my privilege to know."

His own knowledge of Harding, Forbes said, put him in position to change that public impression, and to do so would be the highest mission of his life.

Cellmate of Dr. Cook.

In prison the colonel was a cellmate of Dr. Frederick A. Cook, arctic explorer, who is serving a term for using the mails to defraud in a Texas oil scheme. Dr. Cook is another calumniated person, Forbes said, and he promised to do his best for his prison comrade in the way of explanatory writings.

The colonel admitted his own financial condition was bad.

"I am utterly penniless," he said, "and I don't know yet how I'll get on my feet again, but it probably will be through my profession—engineering."

He has been utilizing his professional knowledge in the prison. In addition to resurveying much of the penitentiary property, he administered and took part in various construction jobs, even going so far as to handle carpenter's tools.

NEW YEAR TO FIND CIVIL SERVICE MEN TRYING TO MAKE COUNTRY DRY

Washington, D. C., Nov. 26.—[Special.]—Officials of the civil service commission announced today that Jan. 1 will find most of the administrative posts under the bureau of prohibition filled by civil service appointees selected through competitive examination tests. Commission officials announced that every precaution will be taken to keep politics out of the new appointments.

"Prohibition Commissioner Doran and the members of the civil service commission are united in the belief that political appointments have been one of the chief hindrances to prohibition enforcement," the commission announced.

"To guard against political preference it is now required that selection for appointment must be made from the names certified for a particular job. The appointing officer will not be permitted to pass over a certification of three names and go further down the list for the name of some one whose appointment is urged or desired"

CITY READY TO TALK ACTION ON AIRPORT PLAN

Prospects of an agreement between the south parks and the city for the construction of an airport on the island in Lake Michigan between 16th and 23rd streets appeared brighter yesterday when Commissioner of Public Works Wolfe announced his willingness to enter into negotiations.

The island, known as Harbor 16, is owned by the city. The park commissioners have agreed to finance the airport providing title to the property is transferred to them.

Previously, Commissioner Wolfe had taken the position that the city should retain the property and, if practicable, build the airport itself. Yesterday, he said, he would be willing to consent to the transfer providing the city may keep an equitable share of control of the field's management.

Mr. Wolfe's statement came on the heels of a similar statement by Mayor Thompson, who said that he didn't care who built the airport so long as it is built.

Girl, Two Men Bind Woman in Flat; Get $3,500 Loot

Mrs. Rose Paley, 28, wife of Jack Paley, a dress manufacturer at 301 South Franklin street, yesterday morning was tied up in her apartment at 1125 Farwell avenue and robbed of $3,500 in jewelry by two men and a girl who gained entrance on the pretext of delivering a package. An hour after they had left Mrs. Paley freed herself. Three diamond rings, a diamond lavaliere, and a fur coat were taken.

THOMPSON KILLS CHICAGO CHANCE FOR CONVENTION

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Nov. 26.—[Special.]—Mayor William Hale Thompson is the chief obstacle in the way of Chicago's getting the 1928 Republican national convention, in the opinion of Ralph Williams, committeeman from Oregon and vice chairman of the Republican national committee.

Mr. Williams, who arrived today in advance of the Dec. 6 meeting of the national committee at which the convention city will be selected, called on President Coolidge. Afterwards, he commented on convention city possibilities and on presidential candidates.

He asserted that Chicago is entirely out of the running for the convention, despite efforts to be made by a delegation of 300 from that city. Mayor Thompson's tendency to "ballyhoo" himself was the chief factor creating this situation, Mr. Williams said. The convention delegates, he added, are certain to favor a city where there will be a minimum of pressure from local sources.

Thompson the Stumbling Block.

If it were not for the Thompson situation there, Williams thought that the fact that Illinois has two possible presidential candidates in Frank O. Lowden and Charles G. Dawes would not necessarily eliminate Chicago from consideration.

Mr. Williams favors San Francisco and was inclined to the belief that a majority of the members of the national committee will approve his choice. However, he conceded that Detroit, Cleveland, and one or two other cities will be formidable contenders. He thought the selection would rest entirely in the hands of the committee, and that there would be no attempt on the part of President Coolidge to influence them. Four years ago the President is credited with having brought about the selection of Cleveland after a majority of the committeemen had been lined up for Chicago.

San Francisco to Open Fight.

Activities in behalf of San Francisco will start on Monday with the arrival of William H. Crocker, national committeeman from California, the vice chairman said.

President Coolidge, in Mr. Williams' opinion, is entirely out of the picture as a possible nominee to succeed himself. Sentiment in the northwest, he said, is chiefly for the nomination of Secretary of Commerce Hoover. Lowden and Dawes, he said, also have some strength.

Representative Strong [Rep., Kan.], another White House caller, said that farmers in his section would like to support President Coolidge for reelection, regardless of his veto of the McNary-Haugen bill. With Coolidge out of it, he said, the Kansas delegation at the Republican convention would be solidly for Senator Curtis [Rep., Kas.].

Asks Help for Barge Service.

Senator Shipstead [Farm.-Labor, Minn.], who also conferred with President Coolidge, declined to disclose his choice for President. The Minnesota senator asked the President to favor a $50,000,000 increase in the capital stock of the Inland Waterways corporation in order to provide for improved barge service on the Mississippi.

Mayor and Prize Babies to Attend K. of C. Show

Mayor Thompson and the twelve prize winners of the better babies contest will share honors tomorrow evening at the opening of the west side Knight of Columbus four day radio festival at Crawford avenue and Washington boulevard. Dr. Herman N. Bundesen, commisioner of health, will present the contest winners. Among guests on succeeding nights will be Senator Charles S. Deneen and Knute Rochne, Notre Dame football coach. Proceeds of the entertainment will help maintain the K. of C. community center at 4721 West Madison street.

WESTERN STATES LAG IN PREPARING TOPOGRAPHY MAP

Surveys Useful in Many Ways Sought by U. S.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Nov. 26.—[Special.]—The backwardness of the middle west in topographical mapping will be disclosed by the annual report of the geological survey, it was learned today.

While the eastern part of the country has been actively coöperating with the federal government in this work, and is almost completely mapped, comparatively little progress has been made west of the Ohio.

The geological survey's topographic map is made on a scale of one mile to the inch. It shows every road, lane, creek, hill, farmhouse, village and other features of the landscape, including contours and elevations of terrain.

Convenient in Many Ways.

It is the base for field investigations of geologists and hydrographers and is of immense value to a multitude of industries as well as to motorists, hikers and others for pleasure purposes.

Under the federal law the geological survey does topographical mapping in those states only in which appropriations therefor have been made by the state legislatures. Then the federal government matches the amount appropriated by the state and the whole is expended by the geological survey within that state.

Illinois, which is now endeavoring to make up for lost time, is appropriating annually more than any other state for this work. That state appropriated $50,000 for the 1927 work, so that mapping costing a total of $100,000 is going forward in Illinois this year. It is the understanding here that Illinois will continue to appropriate not less than $50,000 annually until the entire state is mapped.

Illinois is now about 45 per cent complete and at the rate the work is now being done it is estimated that it will take about ten years longer to finish the job.

The Illinois mapping now being done is chiefly in the metropolitan district of Chicago. When this work is completed there will be available an extremely valuable set of detailed charts of Chicago and its environs.

Present Progress by States.

The following table shows the amounts appropriated in 1926 and the total amounts appropriaed up to date by midwestern states and by other states which are now leading in the work.

State—	1926.	Total.
Illinois	$47,495	$388,607
Texas	42,942	387,988
Arizona	24,898	32,078
California	22,911	481,752
Pennsylvania	18,864	346,121
Tennessee	20,892	39,413
Colorado	12,610	38,592
Delaware	12,570	12,570
New York	11,997	417,484
Virginia	11,897	84,701
Wisconsin	12,450	124,821
New Hampshire	11,972	25,343
Michigan	10,796	123,893
Missouri	10,612	151,246
North Dakota	10,716	13,730
Iowa	2,065	34,650

Indiana and Iowa Backward.

Indiana is practically unmapped. The state has made but one appropriation, which $1,323 in 1920, when a few square miles were mapped in the southwestern corner, as a result Indiana remains the most backward state in the country in topographic mapping. Wisconsin and Michigan are about one-third mapped. Very little has been done in Iowa.

As a result of the initiative of its state geologist, Ohio has been completely mapped at a cost of $625,000, half of which was borned by the state. New York is virtually complete at a cost of $839,000. Massachusetts is complete at a cost of $107,845, but as most of this work was done thirty years ago the state is preparing for a remapping. Pennsylvania is close to complete at a cost of $693,000. The work costs from $40 to $50 a square mile.

Altogether $9,017,960 has been expended on mapping the country topographically, half of which has been contributed by the states. Congress has authorized completion of the work in twenty years, but at the present rate of appropriation it would take 110 years.

JOBLESS WELSH UNLIKE HIS ARMY, COXEY, HERE, SAYS

The army of unemployed Welsh miners which recently invaded London with a demand for bread and the resignation of Prime Minister Baldwin cannot be compared with the Coxey army that began a march on Washington in 1894, Jacob S. Coxey, who was general of that famed army, said last night at the Hotel La Salle.

"Our purpose was to ask congress to put idle men to work by issuing government legal tender money to the states without interest, for the purpose of building good roads and other improvements," Gen. Coxey recalled. "The English army has no definite plan for relief nor offers a solution of the oppressive conditions prevailing there. Of course, I sympathize with the men and their families, who are facing bitter poverty."

Mr. Coxey, although much older than when he headed his tattered army, has grown even more enthusiastic over his plan to cure the financial ills of the country by abolishing interest. He is returning home from the recent monetary conference held in Des Moines.

ELECTRIC FEATS TO BE TOLD AT 3 DAY MEETING

Recent phases of electrical development will be discussed at a three day meeting of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers, beginning tomorrow at the Drake hotel, under the chairmanship of B. G. Jamieson of the Commonwealth Edison company.

W. M. Vanderslius of the Illinois Central Railroad company will tell of the first year's experience of that railroad with its electrified suburban service and Edwin Taylor of the General Electric company will discuss the results of the 125 ton storage battery locomotive in Chicago terminal service.

Another topic will be on the recent installation of 6 miles of 132,000 volt cable underground, which with a similar installation of 12 miles in New York are the only attempts so far to transmit energy under ground at so high voltage.

At the opening session tomorrow students of electrical engineering at numerous colleges and universities of the middle west will present papers on many electrical subjects.

G. O. P. WOMEN CHIEFS TO BE AT MEETING HERE

A number of prominent Republican women are expected to take part in a midwest conference at the Congress hotel tomorrow which precedes the annual convention of Illinois Republican Woman's clubs, to be held there Tuesday and Wednesday.

Among them are three woman members of the Republican national committee, Mrs. Joel F. Vaile of Colorado, Mrs. R. P. Hallowell, Iowa, and Mrs. William Le Van, Ohio. Others expected are Mrs. Mabeth Hurd Paige, Minneapolis, member of the Minnesota legislature; State Senator Nettie Loughead, Cincinnati, O., and Mrs. A. L. Livermore, former national committeewoman from New York.

Vice President Dawes will be the guest at a luncheon on Tuesday, and on Wednesday Republican candidates for state offices have been invited to speak before the Illinois convention, to which eighty-nine counties have sent delegates.

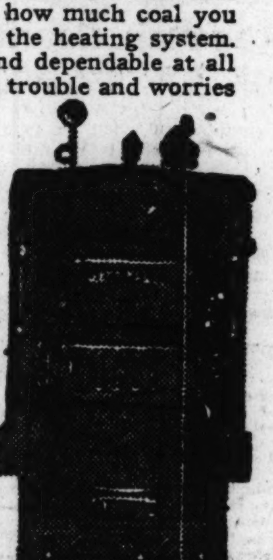
NOVELTY Boilers are always dependable, when most needed

THE Doctor says—on his third visit: "Yes! as I thought, she has developed pleurisy due to the fact that you have kept her in this cold room." You explain to the Doctor that you have a heating system but you can't get sufficient heat into any of the bedrooms, no matter how much coal you use. The boiler is the heart of the heating system. Unless your boiler is efficient and dependable at all times you leave yourself open to trouble and worries that come unexpected.



JUST like your heart supplies blood to all parts of your body, so does the Boiler supply hot water or steam to all parts of the house (through the pipes and radiators). The Boiler is responsible for your heat comfort and health, not the pipes or radiators. Insist upon a NOVELTY Boiler to insure your heat comfort and health in the winter time.

PROOF Of Efficient and Economical Heating

In our 80 years of manufacturing, we have produced over 2,500,000 heating units, that have been and are comforting about 20,000,000 people.

SOCIETY ATTENDS McGANN-DOUGLAS WEDDING SERVICE

Ceremony Performed in Lake Forest Church.

BY MILDRED JAKLON.

Miss Grace McGann's wedding to James H. Douglas Jr., solemnized at [illegible] o'clock at the Lake Forest Presbyterian church yesterday afternoon, was the most distinguished of the season's nuptials.

Miss McGann, who is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert G. McGann of Lake Forest, is a descendant of many of the important first citizens of the community. She is the great-granddaughter of the late Senator Charles Benjamin Farwell, one of the Illinois pioneers, and the niece of Mr. and Mrs. Hobart Chatfield-Taylor. She is related to the Farwell and Winston clans and is the niece of Mrs. Reginald De Koven, who came from New York City to attend the ceremony.

Decorations Green and White.

Great green arches of feathery ferns flanked the altar, which was covered with greens and ferns, with two bouquets of calla lilies. Tall standards, holding waxen lilies and white snapdragons, stood at intervals down the aisles, giving the effect of a formal garden. Miss McGann's gown was a masterpiece of white satin and old, old lace, with a long train covered with layers of lace and tulle, and her head was covered with a tulle veil wreathed with orange blossoms. Her bouquet was of white lilies of the valley and snapdragons and rose-hearted lilies. The maid of honor, Miss Alice Lord Coonley of Great Barrington, and the bridesmaids, Miss Muriel Winston, Miss Jane McLennan, Miss Jane Warner, Miss Virginia Wilson, Miss Elizabeth Rumsey, Miss Elizabeth Woodward, Miss Sylvia Brewster, Miss Polly Goodyear, and Miss Martha Ferguson, all were gowned alike, in frocks of pale green bodices and fluffy, tiered tulle skirts. They wore close-fitting hats of green feathers and carried arm bouquets of all white flowers.

Play De Koven's Music.

Before the wedding march was played the strains of "O, Promise Me," composed by the late Reginald De Koven, the bride's uncle, were sounded by the organ. Mrs. McGann wore plum colored velvet with a matching velvet hat and a silver fox scarf. Mrs. De Koven was in brown moire, with a wrap and hat of brown velvet. Following the ceremony the guests walked or motored the two blocks toward the McGanns' smart English house, standing a little way back on the site of the old Chatfield-Taylor residence.

Other members of the various families interested in the wedding included Mr. and Mrs. Bertram Winston, the groom's grandmother, Mrs. Charles T. Boynton; his parents, Mr. and Mrs. James H. Douglas, Mrs. Donald Douglas, whose husband was best man; Farwell Winston, the bride's half brother; Mrs. Winston and their three small daughters; Mr. and Mrs. John V. Farwell, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Day Farwell and their youngster; Mr. and Mrs. Arthur F. Tuttle, Mrs. Henry Nelson Tuttle, Mr. and Mrs. Kent Chandler, Francis Farwell, Mr. and Mrs. George B. Douglas, Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Stuart, and Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Boynton, many of whom went out on the special train and bus provided.

Mr. Douglas and his bride are to go to California and Honolulu for their wedding trip.

BRIDE

Miss Mary Barnes' Début.

The balcony rail of the crystal ballroom at the Blackstone was cloaked in ferns and greens for the début ball given by Mr. and Mrs. Nelson L. Barnes last night for their daughter, Miss Mary Barnes, and many great bouquets of roses decorated the room and the reception hall where Mr. and Mrs. Barnes and their daughter stood before a large green screen to receive the guests. Miss Barnes wore a robe de style of pale pink and silver lamé. Mr. and Mrs. John D. C. Towne had given a dinner dance at the Casino for their daughter, Miss Dorothy Vilas, and for Miss Barnes earlier in the evening. Miss Vilas wore a white robe de style.

STUDEBAKER
now holds every official stock car record for endurance and speed, regardless of power or price!

World's Champion Car
25,000 miles in less than 23,000 minutes!

AT Atlantic City Speedway between October 18th and November 4th three strictly stock Studebaker Commanders each went 25,000 miles in less than 25,000 minutes—total elapsed time! Two roadsters each completed the 25,000 miles in 22,968 consecutive minutes—a Sedan in 24,200 minutes. Nothing else on earth ever traveled so far so fast!

The American Automobile Association supervised the run, certified to the time and distance, and disassembled the cars following the run to establish their status as strictly stock models.

The Studebaker Commander now holds all official endurance and speed records for stock cars regardless of power or price!

What These Records Mean to You

This great achievement proves that it is now possible to purchase a truly great automobile at a moderate One-Profit price. It proves that The Commander, because of its super-abundant power, will perform for many years, eagerly, easily, smoothly and with no labor or effort, any and all tasks placed upon it.

Four basic elements of Studebaker superiority made possible these world records and will also make possible for every Commander owner long, faithful service and low maintenance cost:

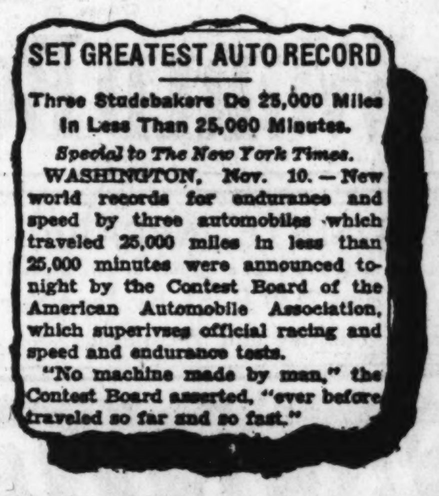
1 SOUND DESIGN—Chief Engineer D. G. Roos, Research Engineer W. S. James and their able associates—backed by Studebaker's vast resources in laboratories and 800-acre Proving Ground—have created a car so superior as to merit its reputation as "the greatest achievement of post-war automotive engineering."

2 PRECISION MANUFACTURE—Studebaker cars are produced in plants equipped for the finest of precision manufacture—cars so accurately built you can drive 40 miles an hour the first day you own one.

3 SKILLED WORKMANSHIP—Studebaker cars are built by the most skilled and painstaking craftsmen under the most expert supervision.

4 QUALITY MATERIALS—Only the highest quality of alloy steels and all other materials enter into the manufacture of Studebakers.

Such value as The Commander—such performance—such championship ability cannot be overlooked by the man who desires a full money's worth for his motor car dollars!



SET GREATEST AUTO RECORD

Three Studebakers Do 25,000 Miles in Less Than 25,000 Minutes.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 10.—New world records for endurance and speed by three automobiles which traveled 25,000 miles in less than 25,000 minutes were announced tonight by the Contest Board of the American Automobile Association, which supervises official racing and speed and endurance tests.

"No machine made by man," the Contest Board asserted, "ever before traveled so far and so fast."

Studebaker Commanders Set Goals; Nothing Ever Before Made By Man Approached This Record

From The World's Bureau
Special Despatch to The World

WASHINGTON, Nov. 10.—New world records for endurance and speed have been established by two Studebaker Commander roadsters and a Studebaker Commander sedan on the Atlantic City speedway. Announcement to this effect was made here to-day by the Contest Board of the American Automobile Association, which supervises official racing and officiates speed and endurance tests for automobiles in the United States.

All three cars participating in the tests on the Atlantic City speedway, according to the contest board statement, traveled 25,000 miles in less than 25,000 minutes. No machine made by man ever before traveled so far and so fast for that continuous length of time. The contest board statement describing the tests continued:

a mile a minute average speed night and day, under the supervision of thirty-five officials of the American Automobile Association for nearly sixteen days, until the 25,000 miles had been completed.

"The official speed of the two roadsters, which started and finished simultaneously, was 65.21 miles per hour. The official speed of the sedan was 61.96 miles per hour.

"The cars were disassembled by the Technical Committee of the Contest Board of the American Automobile Association following the test and certified to be strictly stock cars in every respect. They ran fully equipped as sold by the Studebaker Corporation of America to its dealers.

"In spite of their being fully equipped as stock cars, the records nevertheless exceed any ever made by special racing cars or

WIFE CONVINCES COURT THAT SHE IS NO GOLD DIGGER

Trapper Loses Fight to Set Aside Alimony.

Mrs. Alma Soyka, 2039 West Harrison street, whose husband won her through a matrimonial advertisement, yesterday successfully opposed a motion to set aside her $10 a week temporary alimony award. The motion alleged that the wedding was brought about by fraud, the husband charging she was not sincere in the union and sought only to obtain his money.

Gustave Soyka, the husband, formerly a trapper in the north woods of Minnesota and now a taxidermist at 1406 North Halsted street, charged before Superior Judge Joseph Sabath that she had a Chicago sweetheart before their marriage and that she returned to the Chicagoan after deserting him in Minnesota.

Pioneer Life and Cigarets.

In contrast to her story that she was forced into hardships of pioneer life, the husband said she sat around the fireplace of their log cabin and smoked cigarets and ate candy sent to her by her sweetheart.

"If he was disappointed in getting a girl who couldn't shoot, fish, trap, and paddle, I was just as disappointed in getting a man who didn't shave, cooked his food in a bucket and hiked me to town on snowshoes with a bundle on my back," she told the judge.

Divorce Without Alimony.

"That's not the truth about the sweetheart, judge," she continued, "I didn't have any scheme to get his money. Why, I'm willing to take a divorce wihout alimony, if he won't contest it."

"From that offer, I'm convinced you are not a gold digger and I'll overrule the motion to dismiss the bill on the grounds that the marriage was with fraudulent intent," Judge Sabath ruled. "I'll set the trial of the case for an early date."

Two Youths Caught After Holdup at Delicatessen

New City police yesterday captured two youths following the holdup of a delicatessen store at 2640 West 47th street. Sergt. Patrick Dalton and his squad fired several shots at the fugitives. George Kliora, 18, of 2424 West 46th place, was caught. His companion, Victor Majewski, 19, of 2532 West 46th street, was arrested later.

INSPIRING PROGRAM PROMISED FOR DEANS OF WOMEN'S MEETING

The eighth annual meeting of the Illinois Association of Deans of Women will be held Friday evening, Dec. 2, and Saturday, Dec. 3, at the Illinois Woman's college, Jacksonville, Ill.

The officers of the association announce that an unusually varied and inspiring program has been planned on phases of sociology and of the psychology of youth.

GIRL HELD FOR WILD RIDE IN FLAMING TAXI

Miss Harriet Wray, 23, of the Allerton house, who caused a sensation by driving a blazing taxicab up Lake Shore drive early Saturday morning, appeared before Judge Mathew D. Hartigan at the Town Hall court yesterday, hugging her one month old St. Bernard puppy Pat. She told how she had become impatient in waiting for her escort to locate the driver of a cab standing before the north side night club they had just left, and decided that she and her little puppy could manage the cab alone. She got as far as Sheridan road and Belden avenue when she was stopped by both the police and fire department. The case is continued to Dec. 2 to allow for an estimate of the damage done to the cab. The bonds were set at $2,500 on the charge of larceny and $400 on the disorderly conduct charge.

Miss Wray, whose divorce from John Kurzenknabe of Chicago is pending, said she had been married to Ronald Colman, motion picture actor, in 1922 and divorced him in Los Angeles in 1924.

She gave her Los Angeles address as 1472 Wilshire boulevard.

TELLS LINCOLN'S FRIENDSHIP FOR SOLDIER IN GRAY

Springfield, Ill., Nov. 26.—(AP)—A simple episode revealing the tenderness of Abraham Lincoln and his friendship for Confederate General George Pickett, whom he knew as a boy in Quincy, Ill., is retold in the Illinois State Register today, by Thomas Rees, its publisher.

Mr. Rees took his story from a letter written by Gen. Pickett's widow, to Charles U. Gordon of Greenville, Miss., declining with regrets an invitation to attend a Southern States Republican league celebration at Lincoln's last birthday anniversary.

Letter from Widow.

Describing Gen. Pickett as "one of the greatest and bravest generals of the confederacy," Mr. Rees declared his widow's letter, "written in her old age, worthy of the wife and widow of a great general and leader of men."

"The name of Abraham Lincoln, wherever it may occur," the letter says, "recalls a scene from my window in the old Pickett home at the corner of Sixth and Leigh streets in Richmond on a day in early April after the surrender of our armies. A carriage passing by my home was surrounded by guards and followed by a retinue of soldiers. After it had passed the cavalcade paused and a man alighted from the carriage and came back to our house. Hearing his knock, I opened the door with my baby in my arms and saw a tall, gaunt, and sad faced man who asked:

"'Is this George Pickett's place?'

"'Yes, sir, but he is not here.'

"'I know that, ma'am, but I just wanted to see the place. Down in old Quincy, Ill., I have heard the lad describe the home. I am Abraham Lincoln.'

"'The President,' I gasped.

"'No, ma'am, just Abraham Lincoln, George Pickett's old boyhood friend.'

Baby Kisses Lincoln.

"'I am George Pickett's wife and this is his baby.'

"I had never seen Mr. Lincoln but remembered the intense love and reverence with which my soldier always spoke of him.

"It had been long since my baby had seen a man and being reminded of his own father, reached out his hands to Mr. Lincoln, who took him in his arms, an expression of almost divine love glorifying his face. My baby opened his mouth wide and insisted on giving his father's friend a dewy baby kiss. Putting the little one back in my arms, Mr. Lincoln said:

"'Tell your father, the rascal, that I forgive him for the sake of that kiss and those bright eyes.'"

Poolroom Owner Gets Life for Slaying Kokomo Widow

Peru, Ind., Nov. 26.—[Special.]—William Kiefer, 54, Kokomo poolroom owner, was found guilty of murder in the second degree and sentenced to life imprisonment in state prison at Michigan City by a jury in Circuit court here today. He was charged with the slaying of Mrs. Catherine Russell, 46, a widow and his alleged paramour. This was a second trial.

Russia Denies Reports of Fatal Rioting in Ukraine

MOSCOW, Russia, Nov. 26.—(AP)—The soviet foreign office today denied reports of disorder in the town of Kamenetz-Podolsk, Ukraine.

[The Bucharest newspaper Diminecata yesterday said that chaos and anarchy reigned in the Ukraine, with hundreds of civilians and soldiers killed in street fighting in Kamenetz-Podolsk.]

Nocturne
A soft, warm brown, designed to complement the dark browns in the fashionable limelight this season. For wear with the plain patterned and subdued colored shoes.

Ninon
Dustlike brown with a hidden glint of green. With black shoes or grayish-brown suedes. Worn with black under artificial light it looks like sheer black with an olive cast.

Soubrette
A cold dusky brown of medium value. It gathers warmth from the skin and complements the Whippet Shoe, and a costume of matching color.

Jacqueline
A puritanical gray of middle value. For wear with the sedate Plaza Gray shoes and to match the smart Quaker and Chickadee gray costumes.

Rivoli
A gray-beige of genuine snakeskin color to harmonize with beige and gray costumes and the natural reptilian shoe colors. Typical of the pinkless nudes.

Gunmetal No. 2
A dark steel with a somewhat brownish tinge, is suggested by Lucile for those costumes which require a gunmetal without that deliberate gray overtone. Smarter than ever for Fall, this shade assumes deep grays—for street wear and as accompaniment to the afternoon costume of black.

$1.50 — No. 2230—A full fashioned silk hose with a long clear silk leg to hem. Neither a chiffon or service stocking, but in weight midway between. The low-cut sole reinforcing permits wear with the most extreme low-cut shoes.

$1.95 — No. 3000 — Highly styled full fashioned, medium weight, service hose with a pure thread silk leg from top to toe. An inner lining of fine yarn in the garter top and foot as well as the Ex Toe and toe guard adds to the service.

$1.95 — No. 2471 — An exquisitely styled, sheer, transparent, full fashioned chiffon hose, silk to the hem top. An innerlining of soft lisle in the foot and garter top adds to the wear without sacrificing the beautiful texturing.

$1.95 — No. 2200—A beautiful full fashioned heavy weight service hose with a long pure thread silk leg to the mercerized hemmed top. The mercerized heel, Ex Toe and sole add to the service.

$1.95 — No. 3056—Full fashioned chiffon hose with pointed heel. Extra fine silk to the top. Sizes 8½ to 10. You'll know its superiority when you see it. Truly the peer of hosiery smartness.

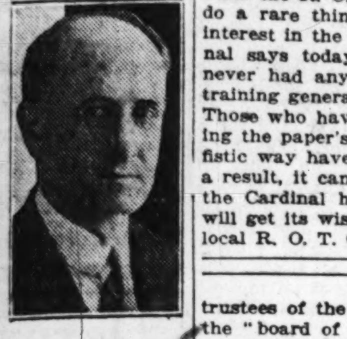
RIPON OFFICIALS FIND R. O. T. C. IS BUILDER OF MEN

Require Basic Drills as Duty to Country.

Ripon, Wis., Nov. 26.—[Special.]—Despite charges that Wisconsin harbors pacifist schools, Ripon college will continue to maintain the R. O. T. C., the only major unit in the state outside the state university, as a definite feature of the curriculum, Dr. Silas Evans, president, stated today.



DR. SILAS EVANS.

"If there is to be any form of national defense whatsoever," President Evans declared, "the R. O. T. C. is the most economical, scientific, idealistic, and thorough form that a democracy can adopt. College men are given an excellent training in courses leading optionally to the commission of second lieutenant in the United States army Thus America provides for a choice group of young men with ability to train citizens and lead them intelligently in the emergency of war."

Defense, Not Militarism.

The Ripon college president made it plain that he is not a militarist.

"I hate war and love peace," he said, "and I believe peace is attainable, in fact ultimately inevitable as an achievement of civilization. I also endorse the league of nations outlawry of war, and limitation of armaments. At the same time, however, a nation in a state of utter defenselessness not only endangers traditional patriotism, but also promising ideals of peace. It is as false as the philosophy of force."

The Ripon college unit, which has been in active existence since 1919, is endorsed by its board of trustees with the statement that "experience has shown this training, entirely outside of its potential military value, to be of inestimable benefit to the student physically, morally and mentally, giving him proper posture and carriage, and developing ability for leadership, self-reliance and above all a sense of duty and obligation to his country."

Builds Better Men.

William E. Hazeltine, one of the trustees of the college, remarked that the "board of trustees of Ripon, during the existence of the R. O. T. C. at this institution, have had opportunity to observe its beneficial effect not only on the individual student but upon the student body as a whole. They find no justification whatever for the oft expressed fear that this type of training leads to militarism or the desire for war. They believe that with the R. O. T. C. here they are turning out students of higher grade—men better equipped to meet all the exigencies of future life—than ever before."

DAILY CARDINAL AT WISCONSIN U. ENDS FIGHT AGAINST R. O. T. C.

Madison, Wis., Nov. 26.—[Special.]—Efforts of the Daily Cardinal, official University of Wisconsin publication, to win abolition of military drill at the Badger school, ended definitely today with an announcement by the Cardinal that it had dropped its plank calling for the wiping out of the R. O. T. C.

The action of the Cardinal followed a referendum in which students voted ten to one against the abolition of military drill.

"While it held its place in the platform the R. O. T. C. plank served to do a rare thing—it stimulated active interest in the local corps," the Cardinal says today. "The Cardinal has never had any quarrel with military training generally or national defense. Those who have insisted on interpreting the paper's stand in a broad pacifistic way have missed the mark. As a result, it can be sincerely said that the Cardinal hopes the student body will get its wish—improvement of the local R. O. T. C."

WIFE OF EX-GRID PLAYER SUES AS HE ASKS DIVORCE

James Roy Allen, an architect with offices in the Fine Arts building, was sued for separate maintenance in the Superior court yesterday by Mrs. Mella Allen of 211 East Delaware place. The bill accuses him of undue friendship with Miss Florence Adams, 2616 Pine Grove avenue.

Three days ago, Mr. Allen, who is a former University of Illinois football player, filed suit for divorce alleging cruel treatment. Mrs. Allen, in her bill, alleges that her husband had boasted of his affair with Miss Adams and has expressed a hope that he could obtain a divorce and be married to her.

A few weeks ago, Mrs. Allen, seeing her husband in an automobile with another woman in front of the Blackstone hotel, engaged in a hairpulling match that was halted by the police.

MUSSOLINI RUNS MAFIA TERROR OUT OF SICILY

150 Held in Court Cages as Their Trial Goes On.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

ROME, Italy, Nov. 25.—The dread Mafia, which for sixty years has sneered at the law and governments of Italy, is apparently passing out of existence in Sicily. The last of the criminals who composed it—150 of them—already are standing in the big cages in the courtroom at Palermo on trial for their transgressions. Many have been convicted. Other Mafia criminals have fled from Italy, many to the United States, where, under favorable political conditions, they are trying to set up the same machine of terror which they learned to use in childhood.

The Mafia criminals in Palermo are receiving for the first time in their lives a fair trial. The judges and jurors have been specially selected so that they may not be influenced by the terror which the Mafia ruthlessly cultivates throughout Italy.

Threats and Bombs.

In years past when a member of the Mafia was accused of a crime, the judges, jurors and state witnesses in the case and their families were subjected to violent threats of reprisals unless the accused were set free.

When an extraordinarily brave judge and jurors rendered a verdict or a witness testified against a member of the Mafia their homes were bombed or burned down and they and their families became the objects of a desperate vendetta, which usually ended in their death or exile. State witnesses were assassinated or kidnaped. Women were dishonored without compunction. There was not even a check to this jungle tyranny of crime. In 1920 Premier Giolitti tried to stop it and failed utterly.

Mussolini Wields Rod.

The man now behind the iron rod of chastisement in Sicily is Signor Mori, former chief of police at Bologna. The man behind Signor Mori is Mussolini, the Fascist dictator in Rome.

The sinister secret organization, which takes its name from a Moorish word meaning swaggering insolence, embraced men of high social, financial and political positions, as well as common thugs, who controlled politics, blackmailed any one for a small payment and hamstrung cattle. It has been cleaned up as drastically and thoroughly as the old Romans subdued the Sicilians and Sardinian pirates centuries ago.

The Fascist aim has been to eradicate the corruption and make Sicily livable.

Premier Mussolini and the Fascists tackled the Sicilian Maffia problem soon after they came into power. Il Duce's methods have been characteristically simple, direct and drastic, since their beginning in 1924.

Ousts Doubtful Police.

He first defied custom by removing all local police officials whose integrity and fidelity were doubtful, replacing them with trusted policemen from other parts of Italy. Fascists were assigned to positions of command and large reinforcements of carabiniers were put at the disposal of chiefs of police and prefects.

Mayors and city counsellors whose relations with the Mafia were commonly known were arrested. Some of those arrested "squealed" and the politicians and higher-ups thus revealed tried to save themselves by also revealing the activities of others still not arrested. These informers nevertheless were arrested as accomplices of those already under lock.

The courts worked speedily, imposing the gravest penalty permitted by the law. The success of the cleanup is attributed to the fact that it was directed by the central government and not locally.

With the leaders among the wealthy higher-ups imprisoned the fight turned to the rank and file of paid criminals. These took to the mountains and started guerrilla warfare and brigandage, terrifying farmers, robbing and blackmailing.

Free Hand in Cleanup.

Premier Mussolini then summoned Sig. Mori, chief of police of Bologna to be, and made him prefect of police in Sicily, with the following instructions:

"1. Clean up Sicily at all costs.

"2. Supreme authority there is yours.

"3. The central government will accord any assistance you ask.

"4. None of your acts will be questioned.

"5. Report only to me.

"6. Act quickly, not considering position, financial power or political adherence.

"Lastly, instruct your men to shoot to kill wherever necessary."

Sig. Mori went to Sicily and tracked down band after band in their mountain lairs, arresting gangsters and their supporters by the wholesale. Those who resisted were shot down.

The gangsters who were arrested are being prosecuted in the regular courts. Each is being tried for each crime committed, and whole gangs jointly for responsibility in associating for criminal purposes.

When insufficient evidence has been obtained to send a gangster to the penitentiary, but there is reasonable ground for suspicion, measures to deport him will be applied.

Girl, 16, Drops Behind in Her Studies, Kills Self

Beaver, Pa., Nov. 26.—(AP)—Despondent because ill health had forced her to drop behind her friends in school, Jean Wetzel, 16, Beaver High school student, shot and killed herself today.

MRS. LILLIENDAHL TO FACE MURDER TRIAL TOMORROW

May's Landing, N. J., Nov. 26.—[Special.]—Here with only one day remaining before she goes to trial, charged with the murder of her husband, Mrs. Margaret Lilliendahl expressed confidence in her acquittal in her cell in the Atlantic county jail today. Willis Beach, her reputed admirer and co-defendant, was also reported as holding similar confidence.

On the other hand, the prosecution, headed by Prosecutor Louis Repetto, has voiced the opinion that both Beach and Mrs. Lilliendahl will be convicted of murdering the woman's husband, an elderly doctor who was slain on a lonely road near Hammonton on Sept. 15.

Mrs. Lilliendahl's attorneys, who include Robert H. McCarter, leading defense counsel at the Hall-Mills trial, have been putting the final touches to the plan of defense outlined for the doctor's widow. Mrs. Lilliendahl still clings to her original story that her husband was killed by two Negro holdup men.

BRITAIN UNCOVERS NEW EVIDENCE IN ESPIONAGE CASE

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

LONDON, Nov. 26.—The case of the alleged spies, George Hanson, German student, and Wilfred Francis MacCartney, a Briton, was carried a step further today as a result of the investigations made since their arrest last week.

It was said that the charge of collecting information calculated to be useful to a foreign power will be supplemented by a charge of inducing a Briton, George Montland, to commit an offense against the official secrets act.

Meanwhile, a further search of the lodgings of the suspects and questioning of their landladies reveals that they were in touch with Berlin. MacCartney possessed a receipt for a deposit on a ticket purchased for Berlin.

The prisoners were remanded to custody until next week.

SHANGHAI, China, Nov. 26.—By the capture from northern forces of the town of Hsuchowfu, in northern Kiangsu province, at the junction of the Tientsin, Pukow and Lunghai railways, which was effected today by troops of the Nanking Nationalist army, combined with those of the Christian general, Feng Yu-hsiang, the Nationalist government obtains complete control of the Lunghai railway, running from the Yellow sea to Western Honan province, a distance of 600 miles.

The northern troops, allied to the Peking government and under the command of Marshal Sun Chuan-fang and Gen. Chang Tsung-chang, now are retreating northward and planning a final stand for the defense of Shantung province at Tsinan, capital of Shantung. A Nationalist report regarding the engagement said Gen. Chang Tsung-chang, tupan of Shantung, was shot through the leg in a battle at Tsining, necessitating his retirement to a hospital at Tsinan. Tsining was reported captured by the Nationalists.

Maps Drive on Peking.

Gen. Feng announced today, following capture of Suchowfu, that he is dispatching an army northward along the Peking-Hankow railway, from Chengchow, Honan province, for the purpose of coöperating with Gen. Yen Hsi-chan, the tupan of Shansi province, in a direct drive on Peking.

The Nationalists claim that with today's victories they have swept the northerners out of Honan, Anwhei, and Kiangsu provinces.

To Reorganize Nationalists.

Wang Ching-wei, former chairman of the central executive committee of the Nationalist government, who now is in Shanghai preparing for the fourth plenary conference of the Kuomintang, told the press today that complete reorganization of the Nationalist government must be effected, with stringent limitation of the powers of the political and military committees and a restriction of government expenditures, limiting the military costs to two-thirds of the national revenues.

Efforts are being made toward reuniting the various Nationalist factions.

150 ARRESTED IN 100 BOOZE RAIDS AT NEW ORLEANS

New Orleans, La., Nov. 26.—(AP)—One hundred and fifty persons, including several women, were arrested here today during a series of raids on more than 100 restaurants, cafés, and soft drink stands by prohibition agents, recruited from five states.

The raids, which had been carefully planned for several weeks, were directed by O. D. Jackson, prohibition administrator for the Tenth district, over long distance telephone from Jacksonville, Fla.

Armed with 131 search warrants, the federal officers, assisted by local policemen, set out shortly after noon to dry up the city and continued their activity the remainder of the day, despite some determined opposition reported to have been encountered. The arrests were so numerous that the United States commissioner had to move his office from the post office building to larger quarters in the court house.

U. S. LODGES HELP CLOTHE CHINA'S WAR SUFFERERS

Rotary Club and Mission Societies Aid.

BY CHARLES DAILEY.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

[Copyright: 1927: By The Chicago Tribune.]

PEKING, China, Nov. 26.—American fraternal organizations and other foreign societies are helping greatly to relieve the suffering of the Chinese people this winter, as the whole country is torn by civil war. They are doing what the Chinese rulers are leaving undone, for the latter are spending money for munitions only.

I am connected with several foreign and Sino-foreign societies and know at first hand some of the calls that already have been made, and the winter has only begun. The Rotary club is quietly buying by the hundreds wadded cotton garments. The several Masonic bodies are placing their funds where they will do the most good. All the missionary societies are arranging to open soup kitchens and are daily canvassing for subscriptions.

At a recent meeting of International lodge of Free Masons (Massachusetts constitution) no fewer than five distressing appeals from well organized Chinese societies were received. The American association, the Anglo-American association, the Western Returned Students' club, and countless other organizations are similarly besieged.

Foreign Trade Slashed.

Foreign trade is reduced to a minimum because of heavy taxation and the fact that the buying capacity of the people is almost nil, and yet the calls increase. And, what is most discouraging, the worst is yet to come.

The municipality cannot even pay its police. Last year the Scottish rite Masons secretly bought and anonymously donated some hundreds of sheepskin undercoats for unpaid policemen, which were distributed by a Chinese member.

The most distressing feature is the coal famine. Most of the mines are closed; the others can operate only part of the time because the freight cars have been confiscated by the military. On such cars as may be had there is a series of taxes often as high as $100 a car. This money goes into the pocket of some general. There will be thousands of homes without coal in Peking this winter.

Thirty gruel kitchens under the direct control of the Peking police headquarters were opened on Nov. 15. The money for their upkeep comes from subscriptions, often from among the policemen themselves. Many of these have not been paid and have mouths to feed at home. Twenty of these kitchens are within the city walls, and ten others are in the suburbs, outside the main gates, where the poorest of the poor live in hovels. The opening this year was much earlier than usual, due to the generosity of the Peking Banking union.

Peking faces a mutton famine, not only due to the lack of railway transport and excessive freight charges, but due to the action of the military commanders in seizing sheep to feed their armies. Eighty thousand sheep paid for by Peking mutton dealers and on the way to the capital were seized by Shansi army commanders. The mutton dealers suffered a loss of $200,000. In mid-November only two weeks' supply of mutton remained in Peking and nothing was coming in. The price had risen within a week from 68 coppers a cattay to 112 coppers. [A catty is a pound and a third.]

Poor Unable to Buy.

Of beef, there is virtually none. Poultry and grains are being received in meager quantities. The poor will be utterly unable to buy.

Another result of the war and of the martial law in Peking is the effect on amusement enterprises, restaurants and hotels. In the public gardens, such as the Winter palace, the Central park of the Forbidden City and like places, the many tea houses virtually are deserted and the concessionnaires are suffering heavy losses. Some have gone into bankruptcy. Famous restaurants, where epicures gathered in former years, are now deserted, especially at night.

Another tragedy of the war is the roundup of the nontreaty nationals, affecting chiefly the Russians. These homeless individuals, many of the women driven to a life of shame and men forced to beg, have been rounded up by the police and thrown into the cold, insanitary Chinese prisons. There they are dying. Almost daily the body of one of these unfortunates is carried out and buried under a thin covering of earth in the Potter's field, which faces the moat outside the wall of the Tartar city to the west of Hsunchimen. Here before the burying squad is out of sight the jackal dogs scratch up the newly made mounds.

Such Chinese in Chihli and Shantung provinces as can leave are emigrating to Manchuria, the fastest developing section in all China, where there is work in the summer, and, while the winters are severe, there is food to be had at a normal price.

Dies 14 Days After Drinking Bottle of Nerve Medicine

Benton, Ill., Nov. 26.—[Special.]—After being unconscious for fourteen days as a result of drinking a bottle of nerve medicine, Harmon Cook, 49, died here today.

BORAH DIFFERS WITH DOUBTS OF COOLIDGE ON OUTLAWING OF WAR

Washington, D. C., Nov. 26.—[Special.]—President Coolidge's belief that plans to outlaw war would come in possible conflict with the constitutional provision authorizing congress to declare war does not accord with the ideas of Senator Borah [Rep., Idaho], chairman of the senate committee on foregin relations.

In the view of Senator Borah, who expects to reintroduce a resolution for the outlawry of war, a treaty to preserve peace would not take away the constutional power to declare war. It would merely create, he thinks, a condition where it never would be necessary to exercise that power.

Senator Borah agrees with the President that there would be great difficulty in defining an aggressor nation and that the proposal to refuse to give any aid to an aggressor nation would not be workable.

Michigan Man, 100, Sets Record as Cornhusker

Buchanan, Mich., Nov. 26.—[Special.]—Although 100 years old, John Koenig, who resides on the farm of his daughter, Mrs. Albert Schmaltz, near Glendora, can husk more corn than many men of half his years. A community celebration in the Glendora German Lutheran church marked his birthday, followed by a reception at his daughter's home. Despite his age Mr. Koenig does his share of the farm work and has had little experience with doctors. His wife died recently at 93.

SUPREME COURT SPEEDS WORK OF CLEARING DOCKET

Washington, D. C., Nov. 26.—(AP)—The success which is marking the efforts of the Supreme court to prevent congestion of its docket is shown by the record it has made at the present term, when, in less than two months, it has disposed of one-half of the pending cases.

With one more opinion day remaining before it completes two full months of the present term, the court has disposed of 320 cases and has 320 remaining. This is an increase of 67 in the number of cases disposed of at this term over the corresponding period of the previous term.

Copy of Rare Kipling Work Is Auctioned for $14,000

New York, Nov. 26.—(AP)—One of the remaining six copies of the rarest and most valuable of Rudyard Kipling's works, "The Smith Administration" has been sold for $14,000. The price was the highest ever paid for a book by a living author. The book was published at Allahabad, India, in 1891 and was one of a number of rare editions sold last night at auction to the Rosenbach company. The Rosenbach company also purchased a copy of Kipling's "Echoes" for $6,000. On the fly leaf of this book is an unpublished poem by the "Bard of India" signed "Ruddy."

PORT AU PRINCE, Haiti, Nov. 26.—[U.P.]—Nineteen inches of rainfall within twenty-four hours was reported today from Limbe, North Haiti, in the worst storm and flood in the history of the country. It is reported that an area of 500 square miles was swept by floods, and that a quarter of a million persons were homeless. Two deaths have been reported.

RIMINI MAKES OPERA FALSTAFF JOCUND RASCAL

Great Musical Comedy, Critics' Verdict.

BY EDWARD MOORE.

"Falstaff" at the Auditorium yesterday afternoon was a succession of highlight spots, and Conductor Giorgio Polacco beamed more and more delightedly as the curtain fell on each successive scene. He was fully entitled to all his pleasure, for the work takes a lot of doing, and got it.

Giacomo Rimini in the name part was both Verdian and Shakespearean. He was up on every note and every inflection of the score.

A Shakespearean Falstaff.

In addition I suspect him of having gone outside the score to some able Shakespearean commentator for his information. Certainly the irrepressible way that he bounced back into good nature after every misadventure, the humor with which he expounded his philosophy and spun his plots meant something a good deal deeper in the character than merely putting on a fat man's makeup and singing notes.

And if he was a mountain of fun, Rosa Raisa was a delight as Mistress Ford. Never was there a prima donna easier on the eyes, never did Verdi's music sparkle and crackle with more zest. She was as well defined and accurately thought out a character as Falstaff himself.

Praise for Edith Mason.

There are many memories of the performance, and not the least is the one of the exquisite, ideally lovely song by Edith Mason in the last act. No wonder Fenton eloped with her immediately afterward. If he had not, it would have been a dramatic and operatic outrage. Antonio Cortis was the Fenton, by the way, and a good one, with youth and smiling high spirits.

But these are only four. There was Irene Pavloska as Mistress Page and Maria Claessens as Mistress Quickly, Giovanni Polese as Ford, Lodovico Oliviero and Virgilio Lazzari as Bardolph and Pistol, José Mojica as Dr. Caius, all contributing their deft bits of music and humor to the general proceedings.

Gorgeous Musical Comedy.

If you want to hear one of the finest bits of comedy in music ever written, and gorgeously performed, go the next time "Falstaff" is announced and listen to the episode in the second scene of the first act, where the women's quartet sings on one side of the garden wall and the men's quintet on the other. It will almost reconcile you to the opera's not being given in English.

JUDGE ENTERS JUDGMENT FOR GAMBLING DEBT

A judgment for $465, a "debt of honor," was entered yesterday by Municipal Court Judge John H. Lyle against Victor Bork, who attempted to evade payment because he claimed the debt was a gambling debt.

When the case first came before the judge he announced that "welchers" could not expect aid in his court and he reiterated this when he entered the judgment in favor of Harold P. France, 316 West Kinzie street. Bork is the owner of a smoke shop at 400 North Wells street.

France testified that he won $665 in a dice game from John Kosar, a teaming contractor, and lost $200 to Bork. The latter had $1,000 belonging to Kosar and agreed to pay the debt after deducting the $200 he had won.

Touchdowns: Navy—Sloane; point after touchdown, Hannegan [dropkick]; safety [against Murrell]. Army—Wilson, 2; points after touchdown, Cagle, 2 [dropkicks].

Substitutions: Army—Saunders for Perry, Brertnall for Harbold; Hutchinson for Cagle, Elias for Sprague, Pearson for Hall, Dibb for Hammack, Meehan for Nave. Navy—Ceffman for Ransford, Parish for Hannegan, Taylor for Sloane, Beans for Taylor, Wood for Hardin, Wilson for Giese.

New York, Nov. 26.—Outplayed and trailing the Navy by two points at the end of the first half, the Army team came back with a fanatic rush in the third period of their game at the Polo grounds this afternoon and trampled the incipient skippers all over the grounds, to win the game and the right to rip up the goal posts, 14 to 9.

Harry Wilson of the Army back field, playing the last game of a collegiate football career that began these many years ago at Penn State, made both of the Army's touchdowns, and waddled off the field bow legged from the weight of his honors. It looked as though some hearty revivalist had backed young Mr. Wilson into a corner of the locker room during the intermission and slipped a shovelful of hot coal into his hip pocket, because he had shown all the outward characteristics of a noted flop during the first half, and how he came back with such irresistible drive that the Navy line couldn't hold him, and the Navy backs couldn't even catch him.

Cagle's Toe Accurate.

Chris Cagle, Wilson's colleague in the terrific work of stopping the Navy's drive and bending them back, kicked both points after Wilson's touchdowns, bunting the ball over from scrimmage formation each time.

The Navy got a touchdown in the first quarter by a play that will be preserved in the records of this classic strife between the two academies as something on the order of a miracle. Half of the seventy-some thousand cadets, generals, admirals, secretaries, near secretaries, and common or cash customers who saw the game and the parades, before and after, went away still wondering whether they saw Lloyd of the Navy back field drop steadily back, back before the onrush of some Army men filtering through the Navy line and finally, with tacklers plunging at his shanks, heave the ball 45 yards dead to the goal line where Sloane, the left end, with his feet flying out from under him in a skid, enfolded it in his arms and swooned gently on the turf.

The referee was at Sloane's elbow by some prank of chance just as he caught the ball, or else the play might have been too incredible for belief. As it was, Sloane's arms seemed to close over the ball just as his elbows hit the soil, and he fell so that it was a matter of an inch, one way or another, in deciding on the touchdown.

Kick Is Blocked.

Capt. Hanegan of Navy then gave the ball a gentle thump of his toe and looped it over the bar for the Navy's final point.

Earlier in the squabble, shortly before the end of the second quarter, Murrell of the Army, punting from his own goal line, seemed to boot the ball into the struggling tangle at the forward line. However it happened, the kick was blocked and it bounced back of the goal out of bounds, where Sloane recovered it, giving the Navy two points on a safety.

The game turned upside down in the second half. The great Army backfield couldn't gain a single first down from scrimmage in the first two quarters and the Army line, regarded as likely to be the stronger, was falling away before the charges of Ransford and Clifton of the Navy. But after the intermission it was Wilson and Cagle who were tearing through gaps and it was the Navy forward wall that was parting before the assault. The Navy seemed to have put everything into that surprise attack of the first half and the remainder of the game found the Sailors tumbling out of the way as the Army interference swept ahead of the backs, scything the tacklers down.

Penalty Disastrous.

Probably the Navy should have won the game before the Army exhorters had a chance to get at their men in the dressing room and preach the gaudy gospels that football coaches preach to inspire and anger and revive athletes who can do better than their apparent best. Anyway, the Navy had one first down only eight

Tired Victors Take Time Out to Eat, Cheer

BY HARLAND ROHM.

In the sweltering hot dressing rooms under the huge stands of Soldiers' field as tens of thousands of folks stumbled slowly toward the exits, two groups of tired, muddy boys with the bodies of men pulled off soggy clothes, devoured ham sandwiches, drank bad but hot coffee and prepared for the night's dinners and dances.

Under the west stand they prepared to listen stoically to verbal bouquets for their victory and under the east stand they dreaded the words that sound so hollow to youth, words of praise for a glorious defeat. Yet there was little in their actions or talk to indicate which had won and which had lost.

As Notre Dame's squad tumbled into its bare, concrete walled throne room the walls resounded for a minute with "Atta boy" and "Let's go," inappropriate yells of inarticulate youth, but only for a moment. Notre Dame has the spirit of victory, the spirit that accepts victory as its due but rages and swears in defeat. To the thirty-five powerfully muscled young men in that room, yesterday's victory was history, perhaps even something to deprecate because it had been by only one point.

Old Grads Lead Praise.

The noise continued, of course, but old time Notre Dame football men, friends of the players and others, made more of it than the players. Probably few of them were thinking of the "next game" for the next game is next season, but not even the end of football for the year and the end of rigid training seemed to affect them. Only one man borrowed a cigaret.

Some of them moved first to the sandwich box, grabbing a paper cup and holding it out for coffee, seemingly those who were wearing the blue and gold for the last time. Apparently they didn't want to pull off those soggy regimentals for the last time. But for the most part they sat down on the long wooden benches and began to wriggle out of smeared jerseys, rip tape from the skin, pull off sweaty pads and kick off sodden football shoes. Then they moved to the showers or to the sandwich box and coffee pot.

Ray Dahman, who place kicked the point that was the margin of victory, sat with his pants pulled halfway down, a sandwich in one muddy fist and a cup of coffee in the other. Smith held up smeared hands to have an assistant trainer snip the tape so it could be torn off. Flanagan lay on a rubbing table having his leg muscles kneaded. Others sat and stood in all stages of dress.

Trojans Are Disappointed.

Occasionally someone slapped a bare leg or shoulder and said, "Nice work, Eddie," but there was none of the Los Angeles, Cal., Nov. 26.—[Special.]—After playing from the Atlantic seaboard to the Pacific in quest of an intersectional football victory, Drake at last had its day of triumph by drubbing University of California, southern branch, 25 to 6, here today. A crowd of 6,000 watched the game.

Police, Ushers Make Traffic Job Look Easy

The Profits

NOTRE DAME'S and Southern California's athletic departments are each at least $150,000 richer as the result of the game played in Soldiers' field yesterday. Even at low estimates gate receipts exceeded $350,000. Excluding all complimentary tickets and gate crashers, at least 110,000 persons paid from $3 to $7 for their seats. Rental of Soldiers' field was $40,000, and allowing $10,000 for other expenses, the fifty-fifty split of the remaining receipts will net each school $150,000.

BY EDWARD BURNS.

The crowd that saw Notre Dame beat Southern California was, as advertised, the biggest that ever saw a football game in America. It exceeded by 7,000 the gathering that set the previous record in the same stadium at the Army-Navy game just a year ago. The total admission by ticket was approximately 117,000.

An honest chronicler could not use that favorite adjective of all football authors—"colorful." The crowd was not colorful, either figuratively or literally. But it was a fine, well handled crowd of happy persons out for a holiday.

Many thousands present probably knew what it was all about from a technical football viewpoint. There were many more thousands who obviously were of the variety who go to record spectacles just to say they were there.

Crowd Well Handled.

One thing is certain: Everybody got his money's worth with an absolute minimum of discomfort—going, there, and coming home. Traffic jams were inevitable. But with one or two exceptions every copper directing traffic maintained his poise exactly as prescribed in the manual for polite and efficient policemen. The force at Soldiers' field likewise knew its stuff. The customers started at 11:30 o'clock and kept pouring in until many minutes after the opening kick-off at 1:30. And those charged with seeing each reached his seat battled straight through at their task with gratifying efficiency.

The game yesterday didn't play up civic pride and all that sort of thing as much as it was played up in connection with the 110,000 gathering at the Army-Navy game and the 146,000 at the Tunney-Dempsey uplift. But there was just as much reason for Chicagoans to be proud of the coun-

2,200 PERSONS FETE ROCKNE AND TEAM AT DINNER

Knute Rockne, commonly accepted as head coach of football at Notre Dame, confided in 2,200 persons last night that there is a second head coach at the Indiana school. "Hunk Anderson," said Rockne in a speech at the dinner in honor of Notre Dame's and Southern California's football teams by the Notre Dame club of Chicago, "is head coach on the Saturdays we lose."

Rockne sat like a buddha puffing a cigar while the toastmaster threw bouquets at him for five minutes and then arose with the remark that he "was glad his wife was there though she wouldn't believe it anyway." He proceeded in the same manner saying Anderson coached the team, Tommy Mills did the scouting and all he (Rockne) had to do was "blow up the ball."

Rockne's talk closed a program after the dinner which included speeches by Coach Howard Jones of Southern California; the Rev. Matthew J. Walsh, president of Notre Dame; George E. Cryer, mayor of Los Angeles; William H. Thompson, the Rt. Rev. Edward F. Hoban, auxiliary Roman Catholic bishop of Chicago, and Edward J. Kelly, president of the south parks commissioners, all of whom congratulated both teams.

Splendid records of Illinois and Minnesota, the two undefeated football elevens of the Western conference, were brought about by team balance rather than by the individual prowess of one or more players. It is true that Minnesota placed a lot of confidence in Capt. Joesting, but he was supported by ten other players who fitted into a well molded machine which clicked with clocklike precision at the close of the season.

Smart coaches of the country are more eager to develop team play than the individual. They know the handicaps they labor under when they have stars. They seldom get the desired work out of such players, who rarely fit into the team play. In many cases all the star can do is carry the ball.

Such a player would be worthless were it not for the support rendered by his teammates. Stars seldom render the necessary assistance to other ball carriers by doing their share of blocking in the interference. In the majority of cases they are poor defensive players. In others, publicity given their gridiron achievements not only has a demoralizing effect upon the players themselves but also on other members of the team.

Illini Well Balanced Team.

This year Coach Zuppke of Illinois developed a team which improved with every game. With the exception of Capt. Reitch, the center, the members of the squad were not looked upon as good enough to make a team which would win all its conference games.

Coach Zuppke, however, had an inspired group of players who wanted to learn and who would do anything to carry out the instructions of their coach. Under such conditions it was comparatively easy for Zuppke to impart his ideas to his pupils. They grasped these ideas quickly and were just as prompt in putting them into execution on the football field. It was this team spirit coupled with confidence in their coach that made Illinois the 1927 Western conference champion.

Practically the same situation existed at Minneapolis, where Coach Spears developed the best Gopher eleven since 1919. The Old Gold and Maroon coach had a great player in Capt. Joesting and another in Shorty Almquist, but these warriors were different from the usual run of stars. They practiced just as diligently as the poorest scrub on the team. Their application of the teachings of Coach Spears was an inspiration to other members of the squad.

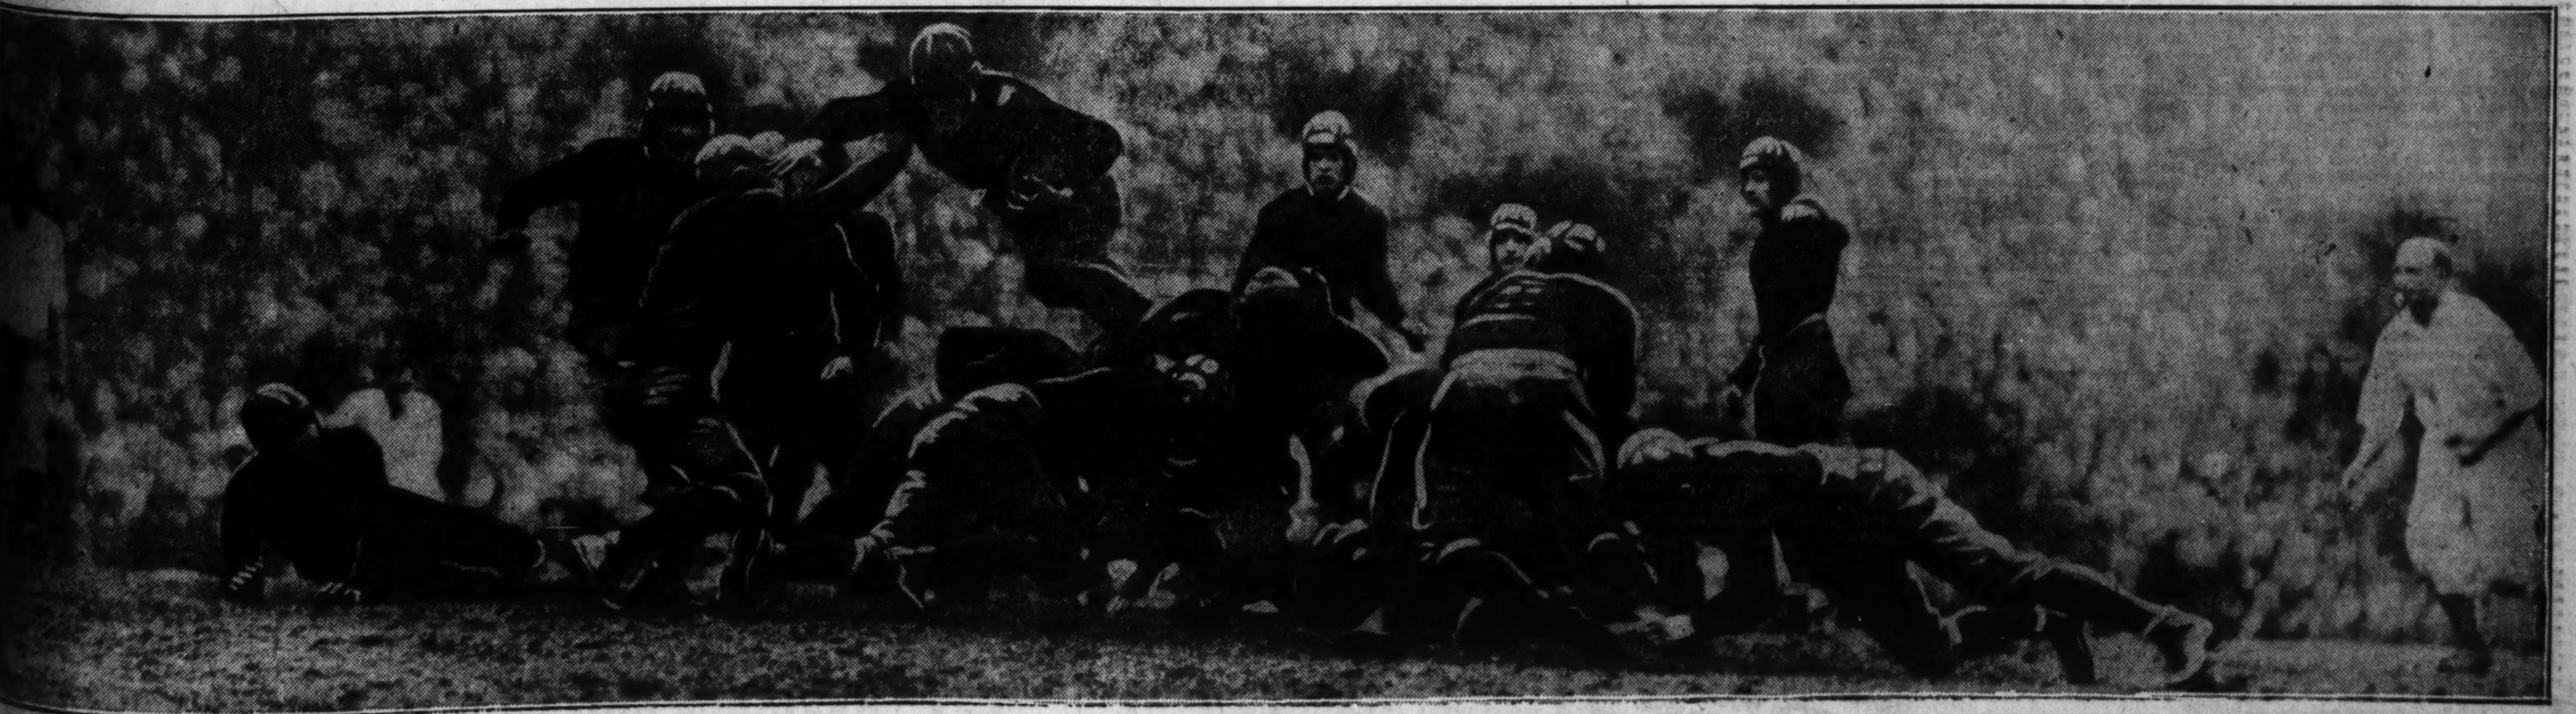
Rely on Team Play.

Like Illinois, Minnesota depended upon team play. The ball carrying responsibility was distributed to such an extent that the Gopher offense was extremely intricate at the close of the season.

Some of the other teams in the conference were weakened when their stars were removed. Michigan was not at full strength against Illinois because Gilbert, the punting full back, was kept from the game owing to an infection on his arm. Tiny Lewis, the Northwestern full back, was injured in the Illinois game and his loss hurt the Purple in its remaining struggles. Capt. Wilcox of Purdue hurt his team's chances by suffering an injury early in the season, with the result the Boilermakers were weakened offensively.

Before going into detail regarding

WYNNE, NOTRE DAME FULL BACK, GOES UP AND OVER



Elmer Wynne, Notre Dame full back, takes off for a short hop over the Trojan line. In the third quarter of yesterday's game at Soldiers' field between Notre Dame and the University of Southern California Wynne was called on to plunge the center of the line and, finding [illegible] of the Trojans had the ground level well blocked, he went up and over. Wynne is a good defensive man behind the line, and his work yesterday kept the Notre Dame linesmen on their toes ready for the well known Morley Drury of the west coast. [TRIBUNE Photo.]

the selection of the Western conference honorary elevens, I want to say a word about Tiny Lewis of Northwestern and Cotton Wilcox of Purdue, two splendid players. Both were handicapped most of the season by unfortunate injuries, and had they been able to play consistently both would have been named for positions on the first selection.

Players chosen for these teams have not been selected for their work in one or two games. The warriors honored are those who have played consistently all year and have proven equally valuable defensively and offensively. The backs have not been selected merely because they can carry the ball. They have been chosen because they can block and tackle also.

In the selection of these teams one must take into consideration the same points a coach does when he surveys his squad at the beginning of the season. The teams must be fortified with forward passers and receivers, punters and field goal kickers, end runners and off tackle drivers, and a full back who can make a yard when it is needed.

But most of all the line must be given thorough consideration, for the best back in the world cannot run behind a weak line. A strong forward wall has made many a back, but a ball carrier never brought a lineman into the spotlight. Still these forwards, who bear the brunt of the battle offensively and defensively during the hour's play, seldom receive due credit. Practically every big game is decided by the general play of the two lines but the men who carry the ball always receive the credit.

Joesting Named Captain.

Capt. Herb Joesting of Minnesota is made captain of the honorary first eleven and placed at full back. This selection should meet with the approval of all who have seen this sterling player in action. He is a terrific line crasher, an excellent blocker and accurate forward passer. On defense he backed up the line in superb fashion.

Bennie Oosterbaan of Michigan is placed at left end, a position he rightfully deserves. There is little about wing play which this player does not know. In some games the opposition sent two players to take him off when runners were sent around his end.

As a forward pass receiver there is none better in the country. Bennie's catch of the pass which scored Michigan's touchdown in the Minnesota game was phenomenal. He is just as effective throwing the ball and the combination of Gilbert to Oosterbaan and vice versa was one of the strong points of the Wolverine offensive. Oosterbaan covered punts splendidly and took care of an opposing tackle in the desired manner.

The other end position is given to Haycraft of Minnesota, another fine forward pass receiver. This player caught one of the passes in the Michigan game for a Gopher touchdown. He stopped Wolverine plays sent at him and was a strong defensive player throughout the season. He makes an ideal running mate for Oosterbaan.

Shorty Almquist, the fiery Minnesota back, is placed at quarter back and given the added responsibility of directing the team's attack. Almquist is a natural football player. He is a sure catcher of punts, handles the ball cleanly and his generalship has been faultless most of the season.

Gilbert, Timm at Halves.

Gilbert of Michigan is selected for left half back. This player was one of the best punters in the country. His kicks were well placed and put Michigan in scoring positions many times. He was also an accurate place kicker. He carried the ball well on end runs and off tackle slants, did his share of the blocking and played a strong defensive game.

The right half back position is awarded to Timm of Illinois. The Orange and Blue back, while not of the flashy type, was in every game doing his bit on every play. He was about the best ball carrier on the Illinois team and although his ground gaining attempts did not net many yards they were made consistently. He was one of the best blockers on the team and always gave his best efforts.

Raskowski of Ohio State and Nowack of Illinois are given the tackle positions. The former should be rated among the best tackles in the country. Following the Ohio game with Princeton, Coach Bill Roper of the Tigers stated that Raskowski was one of the best forwards he had seen in recent years.

Nowack Placed at Tackle.

Nowack was the mainstay of the Illinois line and with another year's experience should rate with the leading line men of the nation. Against Northwestern, Chicago, and Ohio State this player performed like a veteran of years' experience. No matter where the ball was, Nowack was close by and either mixed up in the tackle or waited for a fumble. He was unusually aggressive and continually varied his charges.

The guard positions are given to Matthews of Indiana and Baer of Michigan. Coach Pat Page of the Hoosier eleven claims Matthews is one of the best guards he ever has coached. His work in the Minnesota and Notre Dame games was faultless. Coach Rockne of Notre Dame said he was one of the best linemen on the field in his game with Indiana.

There should be no question of Baer's selection. He has played consistently all season, while his work in the closing game with Minnesota was pleasing to follow. On Michigan kicks he was down the field with the ends and made several tackles of the Gopher ball catchers. Many times he broke through the Gopher line and tackled the Gopher backs before they could get under way. He is one of the outstanding guards of the middle west.

Rouse at Center.

Capt. Rouse of Chicago is placed at center, although the Maroon was closely pressed all season by Capt. Reitsch of Illinois. Fifty per cent of Chicago's victories this year have been due to the excellent playing of the Maroon captain. He played open center and in this roving position he covered the wings and intercepted short passes over the scrimmage line.

He was an inspiration to his team in every game. In fact, many fans believe he is the equal of Shorty Des Jardien, the best center who ever wore the maroon.

Reitsch was an excellent player, but did not play through most of the important games. Like the Chicago center, Reitsch covered a lot of ground on the defense and tackled effectively.

This eleven would be strong in all departments of offensive plays. Almquist and Gilbert could be used to run the ends, with Timm driving off the tackles and Joesting crashing through the line. Either Joesting or Gilbert could hurl forward passes to Oosterbaan or Haycraft on long tosses, or to Almquist, Gilbert, or Timm on short tosses. Blocking in the interference would be perfect, while the defensive strength of the eleven speaks for itself.

HERE'S PLAY BY PLAY STORY OF EAST-WEST EPIC

All Scoring Done in First Quarter.

BY IRVING VAUGHAN.

Threats against the hostile goals, barring the two passes that led to touchdowns, were neither numerous nor serious in yesterday's fight between Notre Dame and Southern California on Soldiers' field.

After each goal had been crossed in the first ten minutes of the opening period, the battle settled into a tussle of limited yardage, and of two threats made by the westerners and three by Notre Dame, the most impressive was one put on by the victors in the last minute of play, when they battered their way to the Trojans' 17 yard line.

The Californians made a bid for touchdown late in the second period when Saunders' pass from the 11 yard line over the Notre Dame goal was incomplete. The Trojans suffered similarly when Riley broke up a pass from the 24 yard line in the third period, the ball rolling over the end zone for a touchback.

Notre Dame put on its most impressive advance at the start of the fourth period, when the Rockne pupils ran and pushed their way 40 yards to California's 32 yard line, where Dahman was forced to punt. Shortly after this Notre Dame moved up 24 yards, only to lose the ball when Flanagan fumbled on California's 28 yard mark. The threat that ended on California's 17 yard line when the final pistol shot was fired had its inception on the Trojans' 30 yard line, where Dahman intercepted a pass. The detail play follows:

FIRST PERIOD.

Capt. Smith of Notre Dame won the toss and elected to defend the south goal. Capt. Drury of Southern California kicked off to Elder who came back 10 yards to Notre Dame's 30 yard line. Elder made three yards off left end. On third down, Elder punted poorly, the ball going out of bounds on Notre Dame's 40 yard line. Drury hit the line for four yards. He followed with two through left tackle. Drury shot between Notre Dame's left end and tackle and raced to Notre Dame's 11 yard line, where Elder tossed him out of bounds. Edelson hit center for two yards. Drury went through Notre Dame's left guard for two yards. Drury was nailed by Walsh without gain. Drury then heaved a long pass to Saunders behind the Notre Dame goal for a touchdown. Drury's attempt at placement was wide. Score: California, 6; Notre Dame, 0.

Notre Dame Replaces Three.

Three new men went into the Notre Dame lineup. Dahman took Chevigny's place at half, Flanagan went to Elder's place at the other half, and Riley replaced Brady at quarter. Drury kicked off to Flanagan, who came back to Notre Dame's 25 yard line. Flanagan and Collins hit the line for nine yards. Dahman failed at center. Dahman punted out of bounds on Notre Dame's 40 yard line, but the play was recalled and California penalized fifteen yards, giving Notre Dame first down in midfield. Flanagan failed to gain at his right end. Flanagan went inside California's right tackle for six yards. Collins hit the same spot for two. Dahman punted and the ball was downed on California's five yard line.

Drury tried Notre Dame's left end but lost two yards. Drury punted to Riley who slipped and fell as he caught the ball on Notre Dame's 48 yard line. Flanagan made three yards at left tackle. Flanagan stepped through an opening at his right guard for 11 yards, giving Notre Dame first down on California's 40 yard line. He smashed inside tackle for seven yards. Riley ripped through for first down on California's 28 yard line. A short lateral pass, Riley to Flanagan, grounded. Riley heaved a long forward pass to Dahman over the California goal line for a touchdown. Dahman place kicked for the extra point. Score: Notre Dame, 7; California, 6.

Drury Makes 16 Yards.

Dahman kicked off to Edelson, who came back 5 yards to his own 37 yard line. Saunders made 3 yards at left tackle. Drury went inside his right tackle and picked his way to Notre Dame's 44 yard line, a gain of 16 yards. Drury was thrown for a 2 yard loss. Lloyd Thomas failed to gain in a line drive. Hibbs punted and the ball was downed on Notre Dame's 10 yard line. Collins made two yards. Flanagan added 5 at his right tackle. Collins was good for a yard. Dahman punted to Drury, who returned 6 yards to California's 41 yard line. Drury hit tackle for 3 yards. Wynne went to full back in place of Collins for Notre Dame. Lloyd Thomas failed in a crisscross at Notre Dame's right guard. Drury punted, the ball bounding dead on Notre Dame's 33 yard line. Wynne gained a yard in a plunge. Dahman picked up two yards at his left end. Flanagan went around his right end for first down on Notre Dame's 46 yard line as the period ended. Score: Notre Dame, 7 Southern California, 6.

SECOND PERIOD.

Flanagan bucked through his right guard for 3 yards. Wynne smashed center for three more. Dahman ran his left end for a yard. Dahman punted and the ball bounced out of bounds on California's 17 yard line. Drury fumbled a bad pass from center but recovered for a five yard loss. Drury fumbled again but recovered for a loss of two more yards. Hibbs punted to Riley who ran out of bounds on Notre Dame's 47 yard line.

Dahman failed to advance on a delayed smash at center, Anthony making the tackle. Flanagan shot through his right guard for 7 yards. Wynne failed on a plunge. Dahman punted and the ball was downed on California's 8 yard line. Drury ran Notre Dame's left tackle for 5 yards. Drury shot through center for 4 yards. Edelson hit center for first down on California's 19 yard line. Edelson hit his left tackle for 4 yards. Drury broke through his right guard and had a clear field but as he shifted his stride he slipped and fell, the ball being on California's 33 yard line for a first down. Colerick went in at left end for Notre Dame.. Drury made a yard at Notre Dame's left tackle. Drury picked an opening in the line for 2 yards.

Notre Dame Penalized.

Hibbs punted to Riley who made a fair catch on Notre Dame's 23 yard line. Wynne gained 2 yards inside his right tackle. Flanagan made 3 at his left tackle but the play was recalled and Notre Dame was penalized five yards for offside. Wynne gained a yard at his left guard. Dahman punted and Fredericks downed the ball on California's 47 yard line. Drury went around left end for 2 yards. He added 2 more at the opposite tackle. Moses went to full back in place of Edelson. Moses hit center for 3 yards. Drury punted to Riley who caught the ball on Notre Dame's 5 yard line and ran out of bounds on the 6 yard line. Dahman punted and it was the Trojans' ball on Notre Dame's 24 yard line.

Drury made 4 yards at his right end. Moses plunged through center for 5 yards. Moynihan went to center in place of Fredericks and Law to right guard in place of Leppig. Moses failed in a line plunge.

Drury's pass was ruled as completed by the officials, putting the ball on Notre Dame's 13 yard line. Saunders broke through for 2 yards. Saunders' pass to Thomas was fumbled and Notre Dame recovered for a touchback behind their own goal. The ball was brought out to the 20 yard line.

Colerick again returned as relief for Voedisch at left end for Notre Dame. Moses hit the line for a yard. Drury slipped in a stab at this left tackle and lost a yard. Flanagan shot through center for an eight yard gain but fumbled and Drury recovered on the Trojans' 28 yard line. Hoff replaced Scheving at tackle for California. Elliott went to full back in place of Moses. Galloway went to left guard in place of Anthony in the Trojans' line.

A long pass by Elliott was incomplete. Drury dove through his left guard for three yards. Elliott punted to Riley, who let the ball roll and then picked it up on Notre Dame's 5 yard line, where he was stopped short. Flanagan smashed inside his left tackle for five yards. Flanagan went over his right end for a yard. Dahman punted to Saunders who lost five yards by a temporary fumble and then returned to his own 37 yard line. A pass, Elliott to Drury, was incomplete.

"AND NOW, MR. ROCKNE—"

hysterical praise of one by another. Each had expected every other one to give his best and everyone had, so there was nothing more to say. Except for Riley, whose catching of a punt near his goal line might have led to disaster, and Riley received more slaps on the back than anyone else.

Rockne entered, said a word here and there, shook hands with one or two of the boys and left for his hotel. An assistant manager distributed tickets for the dinner and dance at the Stevens hotel, which was the only indication that it wasn't midseason and the squad had just come in from a hard practice scrimmage.

Across the field in twin rooms another group played the same scene. The Trojans took their defeat like Spartans. Capt. Morley Drury had spoken to Coach Howard Jones as he came in. "I'm sorry, coach. We did the best we could." And Jones gave him the affectionate salute of muscular men, a slap on the back and a smile. One of the boys who had expressed the feeling of the squad before they went on the field, "This muggy weather makes me feel blah" added a prologue after the game. His smile was sadly whimsical as he added: "Physically, I don't feel any worse now than when I started."

Talk of That Touchback.

The lads from California weren't cheerful, of course, and shot through their conversation was a discussion of the touchback in the third quarter, which all of them believed had been an error. Regardless of what the records show, regardless of what the officials decided, the Southern California team will maintain forever that Riley had control of the ball when he intercepted Drury's pass and the score of the game should have been Southern California, 8; Notre Dame, 7.

As half a dozen Trojans tell the play, Riley speared Drury's pass and started to run with it. They declare he had taken at least three steps when Saunders tackled him and the ball popped from the Notre Dame players' grasp and shot over the Notre Dame goal line. Several Trojans touched it in the end zone before it rolled over the side line and McCaslin fell on it, so they firmly believe it should have been a safety.

They weren't crabbing and they weren't "sore"—they could talk of it with a smile—but it did sadden them. A nodding of heads followed the remark of one: "It was a break that went against us; it might as well have happened to the other fellow. It was just as tough a break when Drury was loose and slipped in the mud." And the coach closed that argument when he said:

"I wasn't an official, and what the officials rule stands. If Riley had control of the ball, it was safety; if he didn't have control of it, it was a touchback. It was a great game. I don't think either team showed any strong superiority."

to a battle of the lines, and in this important angle honors were about even. If anything, the shade rested with Notre Dame, which made eleven first downs, to eight for the Trojans. Notre Dame gained 199 yards from scrimmage, against 137 for the coast eleven. Notre Dame completed two forward passes for thirty-one yards. The Trojans connected with three forward passes for a gain of eighteen yards.

Flanagan Biggest Gainer.

In the matter of individual play Flanagan of Notre Dame had the edge. He carried the ball 124 yards in twenty-two attempts and Morley Drury of California toted the oval 100 yards in twenty-eight attempts. Dahman of Notre Dame averaged 44.5 yards on his punts and Drury and Hibbs 49 yards.

Notre Dame was penalized four times for a total of twenty yards and the Trojans were guilty of fouling on two occasions for the same number of yards.

After both elevens had scored in the opening period and Southern California had failed to score the extra point after touchdown, which gave Notre Dame a one point lead, a play came up in the third period which caused some dispute. The decision, although questioned by Capt. Drury and the other Southern California players, was correct.

The decision hinged on a question of judgment as to whether the ball was in control and possession of Riley, the Notre Dame quarter back who had intercepted a Southern California forward pass. The Trojans had worked the ball deep into Notre Dame territory but were held to small yardage close to the Ramblers' goal in three downs.

Disputed Play Explained.

As a last resort, Southern California attempted a forward pass. Riley of Notre Dame leaped into the air in an effort to catch the ball. A fraction of a second after he caught it he was tackled by a Trojan player and the ball struck in the end zone and rolled over the end line. A touchback always results when the ball on any incompleted forward pass strikes the ground in the end zone. The officials, who were on top of the play, ruled that Riley did not have the ball in his possession and under control. Consequently the play went as a touchback and the ball was brought out to Notre Dame's twenty yard line where it was put in play by the Rochne eleven.

Capt. Drury of Southern California and his players asserted Riley had control and possession of the ball and then fumbled. If this had been the case, Southern California would have been given a safety and two points, which would have reversed the result into an 8 to 7 victory for the Trojans.

In the same quarter, Quarter Back Riley of Notre Dame nearly pulled a play which would have duplicated the one made in the historic Michigan-Chicago game of 1905 when the Maroons won from the Wolverines, 2 to 0. Hibbs of the Trojans lifted a high punt which was carried down the field by a fairly strong southwest wind. The ball sailed over Riley's head and bounded along the ground. The Notre Dame quarter back chased it and finally gathered it in on the bound. As he turned to cut back up the field he stepped over his own goal line but managed to get out in the field of play before he was tackled. Had Riley been tackled back of his goal line, a safety would have resulted, giving Southern California two points.

Trojans Score First.

As the game started out, it looked as if Southern California would win by a one-sided score. Notre Dame received the opening kickoff but was unable to gain. Elder punted out of bounds in midfield and it was then that the powerful attack of the Trojans asserted itself. Capt. Drury went to work and, practically unaided, took the oval to the Notre Dame eleven yard line. The Trojan captain crashed through his right guard for four yards, sliced off his left tackle for two more, and on the next play broke loose off his right tackle and was forced out of bounds by Elder of Notre Dame on the Ramblers' eleven yard line.

Edelson then went through his right guard for two yards and Drury hit the same spot for two more. On the next play Drury was stopped without gain. An unbalanced line formation then was called from the huddle. It started as a running play with the ball being passed to Drury, who faked a run by taking a few steps. Morley stopped suddenly and then shot a forward pass to Russell Saunders, the Trojan back, who had raced clear of the Notre Dame secondary defense and caught the oval on the goal line.

A bad pass spoiled Drury's effort to register the extra point by a placement kick. The score was 6 to 0 in favor of the Trojans and Coach Rockne of Notre Dame then made his first substitutions. Dahman took Chevigny's place in the back field. Flanagan replaced Elder and Riley relieved Brady at quarter back.

Notre Dame received the following kickoff and Capt. Drury of Southern California kicked off to Flanagan who returned to the Notre Dame thirty-five yard line. Flanagan and Collins made nine yards on line drives and Dahman failed in another line thrust. Dahman punted out of bounds on his forty yard line, but Southern California was guilty of illegal use of the hands and was penalized fifteen yards.

Dahman Punts Out of Bounds.

The penalty placed the oval in midfield. Flanagan failed to gain off his right tackle but on the next play drove straight through his left tackle on a delayed plunge for six yards. Collins was sent at the same spot for two more yards and then Dahman punted and the ball was downed on the Trojans' five yard line.

Drury was nailed for a two yard loss when he attempted to sweep the Notre Dame left end. On the following play the Southern California captain punted to Riley who slipped and fell as he caught the oval on his forty-eight yard mark.

Notre Dame then went to work. Flanagan drove straight through his left tackle for three yards. On the next play he found an opening through his right guard and galloped to the Trojans' forty yard line. Flanagan and Riley carried the ball to the coast eleven's twenty-eight yard line on a series of line plays. A running forward pass, Riley to Flanagan, was incompleted.

On the next play, a complicated one in which Riley faked the ball to Flanagan and Collins and then ran back ten yards, a forward pass was hurled by Riley to Dahman, who crossed the goal line for a touchdown. The pass was made over Saunders, the Trojan back. Not satisfied with scoring the six points for the touchdown, Dahman scored the extra point by kicking the goal from placement, making the score 7 to 6 in favor of Notre Dame.

That ended the scoring of the great game. Late in the second quarter, Southern California threatened when Saunders' forward pass from the Notre Dame eleven yard line was incompleted. The Trojans again came close to scoring in the third quarter, when a forward pass was intercepted by Riley and afterward went as a touchback.

Notre Dame had the wind advantage in the fourth quarter and threatened to score on three occasions. The Ramblers took the ball to the Trojans' thirty-two yard line, where they were forced to kick and again to Southern California's twenty-eight yard mark, where Flanagan fumbled. Near the close of the final period, Notre Dame advanced to Southern California's seventeen yard line after Dahman had intercepted a Trojan forward pass.

try's greatest sport arena—Soldiers' field.

University experts are ready to agree that interest in football reached its peak this year, and that the stadia at Michigan, Ohio and Yale [illegible] represent the ultimate in [illegible] sport accommodations. If they are right, the crowd of yesterday [illegible] have set an attendance record that will endure for all time. But who knows—maybe Notre Dame and [illegible] will add a few more thousands next October on the same lot.

Enunciator Aids Fans.

Previous mention has been made of the vast army who attended just to say they were there. It was easy to spot the seasoned fans from those lured by the spell of great crowds. However, those who don't worry about the difference between a [illegible] back and a touchback were [illegible] their enjoyment of the afternoon [illegible] the fact that the enunciators were working far better than [illegible] usually work. And, apparently inspired by this mechanical perfection, the young man who announced from the sidelines, found himself in fine voice, and profuse in detail. When "Flanagan made five yards off [illegible] tackle and was brought down by Drury," the enunciators made it [illegible] for the folks sitting over near the Field museum to know just what had happened.

Perhaps the day was a bit too muggy and threatening for one of those "colorful" masses. Thoughts of [illegible] rain unquestionably deterred many of the girls in their plans to don their gayest gowns and their brightest bonnets. Chrysanthemums, the badge of the chronic football enthusiast, were negligible and the few [illegible] to be seen seemed to be suffering from the reaction of the 62 degree temperature, following previous frost bites.

Notre Dame Band on Job.

The usual detachment of notables was present but ceremonies were few. The Notre Dame band did its best to supply pomp—but somehow Notre Dame's isn't that kind of a band. Not that they didn't try hard. But at Notre Dame there always are many more backs than piccolo and saxophone players, which is tough on the band numerically, at least.

Not all the boxes were occupied by notables and society folk, for the gangsters and detectives called off their shootings until after the game and were out in almost full force. A few, who didn't have tickets [illegible] were left in jail, but all the "big shot hoodlums" were there, behaving just like gentlemen.

No disorder was reported on the field and very few grads or undergrads appeared inebriated. One grad was observed with a jug of wine. He explained to neighbors that the grape was being consumed as a tribute to California as the greatest wine producing state in the Union. None of the participants in this little courteous ritual got what you actually could call stiff.

Fleets of Taxis Aid Crowd.

The game ended at 3:47 o'clock and fleets of taxis were there to meet the flood, all headed south on the outer drive. All traffic had to turn east on the drive in front of the museum where it forked north and south on the outer drive. The stream was continuous in each direction from that intersection, however. After the rush of public vehicles, car owners had reached their private autos in the various parking spaces some distance from the gates.

A half hour after the final gun Soldiers' field and the immediate adjacent area was virtually cleared. Whether the surge was worse after the game or just before was difficult to determine from the individual experience of spectators. It seemed a matter of breaks in luck. Some there are who say they had a tough time arriving, but getting away. Others had the opposite experience. But all said it was worth the effort. Which makes it unanimous for Soldiers' field, regardless of the score.

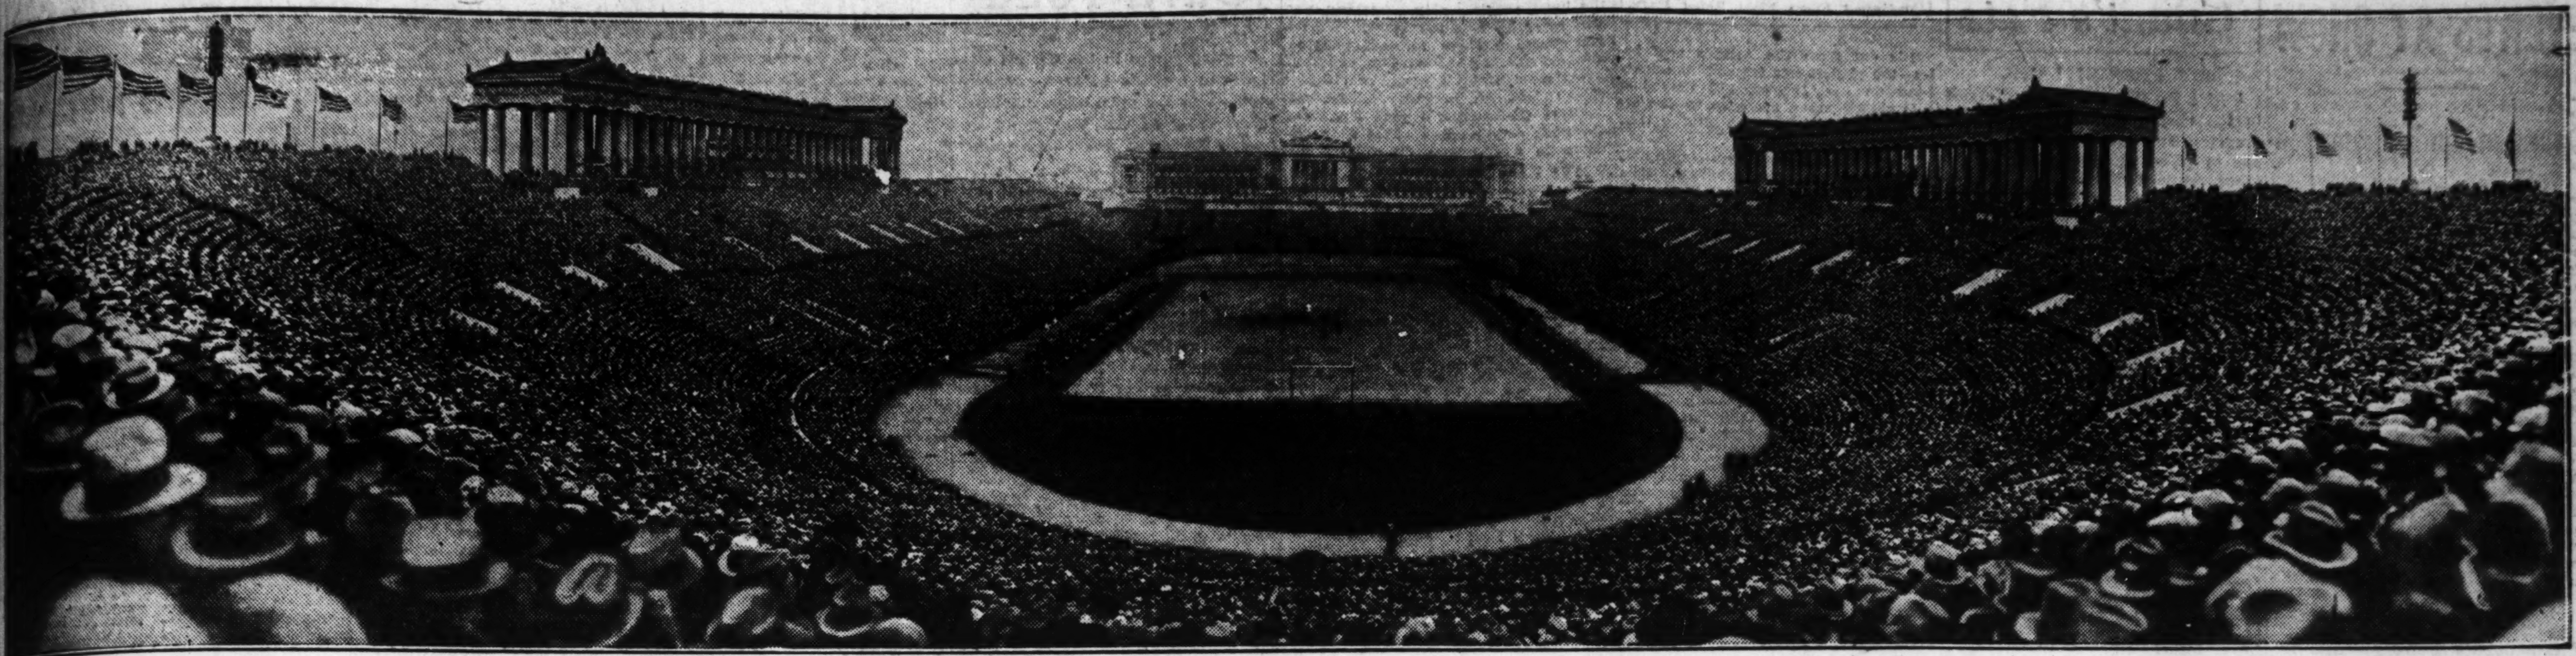
Notre Dame Defeats Southern California, 7-6, Before Record Crowd of 117,000



ONE HUNDRED AND SEVENTEEN THOUSAND PERSONS, FOOTBALL'S GREATEST GATHERING, CROWD SOLDIERS' FIELD STADIUM TO SEE NOTRE DAME DEFEAT UNIVERSITY OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA, 7 TO 6. The previous record of 110,000, set at the same field one year ago, when the Army met the Navy, was broken. All seats were occupied and hundreds lined the sides of the field, while other hundreds were atop the colonnades and the roofs of the press boxes. A decade ago the crowd at a Yale-Harvard game was considered the last word in football assemblies.

MORLEY DRURY FINDS A GAP IN THE LEFT SIDE OF NOTRE DAME'S LINE FOR A SHORT GAIN. The Trojan captain played up to his reputation. He carried the brunt of the offense for his team and was very difficult to stop. He raced to Notre Dame's 11 yard line in the early minutes of the first quarter and then passed to Saunders for the Trojan touchdown. Drury broke away later in the game, but slipped and fell with a clear field in front of him.

NOTRE DAME COMPLETES FORWARD PASS TO DAHMAN. Ray Dahman, who vied with Christy Flanagan for the stellar role on the offense, grabs a pass with Don Moses of the Trojans clutching the ball at the same time. The pass was ruled completed.

FLANAGAN BREAKS THROUGH THE TROJAN LINE IN THE FIRST QUARTER. Christy Flanagan's gains were instrumental in taking the ball to the Trojan 28 yard line, from where Riley passed to Dahman for the touchdown. Dahman followed it up with a place kick for the winning point.

NOTRE DAME'S STAR BALL CARRIER AGAIN KNIFES THROUGH THE CALIFORNIA LINE FOR A SHORT GAIN. Christy Flanagan, playing his last college football game, averaged approximately five yards each time he carried the ball. Great work by Southern California's backs kept him from going far beyond the line of scrimmage on this play.

FAMOUS 33 TRIES AGAIN, AND MODESTLY TURNS HIS BACK TO THE CAMERA. You've guessed it. No. 33 is Christy Flanagan, who showed the world's largest football crowd how half backs are taught to run at Notre Dame. Some of Christy's best work was done in the third quarter, but the drive was halted by a fumble which Drury recovered.

CHICAGO HORSES TAKE CLOSING EVENTS AT SHOW

Lehmann and Thompson Win Blue Ribbons.

BY FRENCH LANE.

Shortly before midnight taps ended Chicago's horse show at the Riding club. The same old English character who handled the trumpet on opening night sounded the blasts which closed the parade of prize equines.

Only champions paraded in review before a near record crowd at the final session. Horses had been in the tanbark arena almost throughout the day, for morning, afternoon and night sessions were held.

Only the fine showing of Otto W. Lehmann's horses in the championship stakes kept Chicago color bearers from almost being wiped out in the last series of sweepstakes.

Loula Long Combs' Kansas City ponies were supreme. Herbert M. Woolf's three and five gaited horses romped away with the blue ribbons in these classes. George Peak of Winchester, Ill., who shouts louder than a quarter back calling signals, also accounted for another championship.

Lehmann Takes High Honors.

Not until the harness horse class was decided late in the night session did Chicago colors come to the front. Then Field Marshall, representing Mr. Lehmann, stepped high and fancy and took away the highest honors. Field Marshall is 9 years old. He is an English horse purchased by Mr. Lehmann four years ago. He has won numerous championships on the turf in this country but not until last night did he go at his best form on the tanbark in an indoor arena. He took the difficult turns perfectly. He was easily the best in his class, although Ovation, owned by Loula Long Combs, offered plenty of spirited competition.

During the morning and afternoon sessions Chicago horses and ponies all but made a complete sweep of 16 events that were decided. They won 14 blue ribbons.

Show Is Financial Success.

There was a battle on in the hackney pony classes between John R. Thompson Jr. and Mr. Lehmann. They divided honors. Fire Lass, from the Thompson stable, was the winner in the riding class, and Princess Mary, the Lehmann color bearer, took down the harness honors.

Officials of the Riding club announced last night that the show had been a financial success.

Summaries for last night's events were as follows:

Montreal Maroons Beat Ottawa Hockey Team, 1-0

MONTREAL, Que., Nov. 26.—(AP)—The Montreal Maroons defeated the Ottawa Senators in a National league hockey match tonight, 1 to 0. The winning tally resulted from a splendid passing rush by Stewart and Phillips early in the first period. Ottawa came near evening matters when the Maroons on two occasions were playing four men against six.

Ancestry May Govern Reigh Count's Fate

BY FRENCH LANE.

During the turf season which closed in the north yesterday, the curtain dropping at Lexington in Kentucky and at Bowie in Maryland, most interest centered in the showing made by 2 year olds who will furnish the thrills in the Derby, Preakness and the great handicap events of next season.

And in the strangest race juvenile thoroughbreds ever have staged for a championship, Reigh Count, owned by Mrs. John D. Hertz of Chicago, has been proclaimed the champion.

He started 14 times, won four races, finished second three times and was out of the money in the other seven trips he made to the barrier. His total earnings was $56,030, not so much when it is considered that his own 2 year old stable mate, Anita Peabody, won twice that amount.

Going back a few years the startling discovery is made that Reigh Count's daddy, Sun Reigh, started eleven times and never won a race. He was second once and three times third. He had won the insignificant total of $550 when he was retired to the stud. Just as startling is the fact that his dam, Sweet Briar, never got to the races.

But the mating of Sun Reigh and Sweet Briar represented a master stroke for those best versed in thoroughbred breeding. Willis Sharp Kilmer, the well known eastern breeder, evidently did not recognize it but John D. Hertz of Chicago did. Mr. Hertz bought Reigh Count late in the summer season from Mr. Kilmer for $12,500, and gave him to his wife. Reigh Count won three of his four races after going into the Hertz stable.

That it was an exceedingly good buy is best indicated by an offer Mrs. Hertz received recently from an eastern millionaire for the colt. He offered $100,000 for him and Mrs. Hertz turned down the bid.

To take a look at this big chestnut as he loafs and plays about the Leona Farm paddocks these fall days most people wonder why $100,000 should be refused for him.

They don't stop to consider his fine lines, those long graceful legs which denote speed, muscled shoulders and hips which denote power and strength, short square rump which indicates an ability to pack weight over a long distance of ground, and his heart, which has carried him from far behind to the lead and victory in all the races he has won this year.

And they don't stop to consider that if he is as great as a 3 year old as he has been as a 2 year old he may win $250,000 in stakes.

He is very masculine, with a fine head and neck set onto a body that one can see will develop. He has sturdy feet and legs and in his rich chestnut color there is a sprinkling of roan hairs, which western horsemen say denotes toughness and ability.

Reigh Count is strictly an Englishman, but the rough treatment he received in most of his races as a 2 year old has probably thoroughly Americanized him. He represents the most scientific in-breeding lines known in America. His sire Sun Reigh is of the old Vedette line, so is his dam Sweet Briar. Vedette got Galopin and Galopin was the sire of St. Simon, the unbeaten English horse, which was also a great sire.

With Sun Reigh of the Vedette-St. Simon line, Reigh Count on his dam's side comes down through the Vedette-Bend Or line. The mare Shotover, in this line, won the English Derby, while Hermit, Orion, and others were all great horses, able to run far and fast. Their sons and daughters were the leaders on the English turf.

On the dam side ahead of Sweet Briar were all great race and brood mares. Presentation, dam of Sweet Briar, won the Astley Plate in England and other big races; Dubia, the dam of Presentation, threw the English winners Preservation, Lord Wick, and His Reverance, while Miss Middlewick, the dam of Dubia, got many winners. And Violet, still another generation ahead, was a producer of winners that were far better than the ordinary horse.

Reigh Count's sire, Sun Reigh, was a full brother to Sun Briar, which is now a successful sire in Kilmer's stud. Sun Briar enjoyed a brilliant racing career. Sun Reigh also might have been a magnificent racer, but his legs were brittle and out of kelter most of the time. This accounts for his bad showing as a 2 year old, where his racing days ended.

Some experts say that Reigh Count's lines indicate extreme speed more than staying ability. But when you go back to St. Simon, Bend Or, Shotover, Orion and others in his ancestry, stamina, courage, and route running ability is found in abundance. And Reigh Count's habit of coming from behind to win his important 2 year old races stamps him as of that type.

BADGERS' RECORD CLEAR.

Madison, Wis., Nov. 26.—[Special.]—Wisconsin's cross country team, which captured the Big Ten title for the fourth consecutive time last Saturday, has not lost a dual meet since 1923, which Michigan turned the trick.

Army Defeats Navy, 14 to 9, in Annual Service Battle

yards out from the Army's goal before the players had worked up a dewy bead on their brows, but they lost this chance when someone on the attacking side didn't do something that he hadn't ought to of.

The young Annapolis gentleman and the young West Point gentleman who were supposed to be relaying the detail of the battle to the press section were too busily occuppied caroling warlike airs ending in "fight team Rah" to explain who did precisely what in this intricate maneuver, but it seemed that some one on the Navy side failed to pause in a shift. The score board related that No. 3, which was the diminutive Ransford, had misbehaved somehow, but at any rate, with the ball eight yards from the Army's goal and a first down after a rush of 34 yards by line-attack, the Navy was set back fifteen yards and the opportunity vanished.

Makes Lucky Catch.

Bagdanovitch and Burke, the Navy's left tackle and left guard, had been bumping Seeman and Perry, the opposite numbers in the Army defense, wide apart for the charges of Clifton and Ransford, but after the penalty it took three bucks to gain four yards and Ransford with one down left and nearly twenty yards to go for the touchdown, was pulled down half way there.

Toward the end of the second quarter the Army's free kick after the safety gave the Navy the ball at the Army's 45 yard line. Lloyd whirled off the Army's left end and found two tacklers grabbing at him, whereupon he flung the ball wildly in an apparent attempt to ground a pass and avoid a loss of ground. But Ransford leaped out of a cluster of assorted Army and Navy men, took a ball that never was intended to be caught at all, and scuttled to the Army's 25 yard line. Clifton then went through a hole opened by Bagdanovitch for a gain of 9 and one-half yards and gained the other half yard for the first down at the Army's 15 yard line on the next plunge. Ransford and Lloyd again got 9 and one-half yards in two plunges and again Clifton bumped his way forward with mere inches required to a first down only four yards from the Army goal.

Stopped at Goal.

Clifton's next slam gained half the distance. Again Capt. Hanegan called on Clifton for a headlong attack and Clifton gained another yard. Now the Army line grovelled in the turf and the Army back field drew up close as Lloyd was launched in a drive at center. He gained a half yard.

The Navy huddle nominated Clifton again. He went to the scramble head down to gain a half yard against a defense that had wielded him ten yards at a plunge out in the field. But as he hit, both lines came together in an unyielding struggle and the surge washed Clifton to the top of the pile, but when he came down he was still 18 inches short of the touchdown and the ball was the Army's just before the half ended.

The Navy kicked off after the intermission, and, where the Navy defense had been impregnable against line attack in the first half, Cagle began the second half with a nine yard plunge through the Navy's middle, followed by Murrell in a seven yard gain. The Navy stiffened and Murrell punted to the Navy's five yard line. Lloyd promptly punted back to Wilson at the Army's 45 yard line, and Wilson, for the first time this afternoon, gave the crowd some inkling as to why they set such store by him at West Point.

Army Forges Ahead.

He was under way as the ball hit his arms, and he hip-swayed away from a couple of tacklers as he gathered speed. They didn't stop him until he had reached the Navy's 30 yard line, and on the next play he turned the Navy's left end for a gain of 12 yards. Now, with a first down at the Navy's 18 yard line, it was Wilson through the Navy's right tackle for 7 yards, and then it was Wilson through the same spot for another plunge, again to the one yard line, where Lloyd mauled him down barely short of the goal. On the next play Wilson went over center for the touchdown and the Army went ahead, never to lag again.

There was a lot of fumbling after the next kickoff, and the truth of the story is that there was quite a lot of frowsy football intermixed with the hard, reckless play. Anyway, not long after his first touchdown, Wilson intercepted a Navy forward pass at midfield and, with several unidentified Army men falling in ahead and alongside to smooth his way, thundered back to the Navy's 4 yard line. On the next play he was off to a touchdown in a slantwise charge off the Navy's right tackle.

Then the Army cadets scrambled down out of the stands behind their horn blowers, tossing their caps over the goal bars until the goals came down with a crash, and Curtis D. Wilbur, the secretary of the navy, and Admiral Eberle, the boss man of the Navy Brass-Hats, sat still and took their razzing from the dancing, sprinting mob in gray.

That victory dance, by the way, seemed just a little bit forced, as though the boys were determined to be collegiate against their better judgment. When they lined up in front of the Navy side they seemed a little embarrassed, as though they didn't know what to do or why any one should do anything as foolish as that.

Statistics reveal that the Navy outpassed and outplunged the Army by 38 and 55 yards, respectively:

20 Games on K. of C. Cage Card Today

Opening games in the Central division and contests between unbeaten quintets in the other four will mark today's play in the Knights of Columbus Basketball league with twenty battles on the day's card.

The Central section will again play at the 131st Regiment armory, 16th street and Michigan avenue. Two new teams, Quigley and Lafayette, will make their debut with today's card, the former meeting Hughes, while the ex-northsiders take on Leo XIII.

Bishop Ketteler and Oak Park councils, winners in their opening games, will collide in one of the headliners on the Southwest division card to be played at the St. Ignatius gymnasium, Blue Island avenue and Roosevelt road.

The first meeting of the year between Auburn Park and Calumet, ancient South division rivals, features the card of that section at the Eighth Regiment armory. Perez and Loyola-Hyde Park will also furnish a few fireworks, as both are undefeated.

Public Disagrees as to the Most Valuable Gridder in the Big Ten

BY HARVEY WOODRUFF.

Diversity of opinion as to what Big Ten player was of greatest value to his team during the season of 1927 exists among football followers who have written to THE TRIBUNE on that subject. These letters, while possible to influence directly only two votes and perhaps indirectly some of the others, have in the past been a pretty good criterion of the ultimate selection.

Award of THE TRIBUNE trophy is determined by a vote of twenty-one persons—all the Big Ten coaches, nine officials (including Walter Eckersall), Commissioner John L. Griffith, and the writer. First choice counts two points and second choice one point.

Name First and Second Choices.

In the letters sent out to this committee last week, in which the members were invited to coöperate in making a fair and impartial award, coaches were told: "We do not ask you to name the 'greatest player,' but the player who has been of greatest all around value.

"We ask you to name your first and second choices. You are privileged to name a member of your own team; in fact, we hope you will be able to do so, for either first or second choice, the other choice to be a member of some other conference eleven."

Thus if every Big Ten coach named a member of his own eleven for first choice and the officials who worked in the games also should divide equally on the choice, the final award would be determined on the second-choice votes. In the three awards previously made, however, it has so happened, even in the closest contest, that first choice votes have determined the result. Either way is fair. It is obvious that if several coaches agree on one man on another eleven as second choice, that man must be a pretty valuable player.

Public Choices Varied.

In the absence of any official votes as yet, the opinion of the public is interesting. Among the suggestions are Reitsch, Nowack, and Timm of Illinois, Rouse and Mendenhall of Chicago, Lewis and Fisher of Northwestern, Crofoot of Wisconsin, Oosterbaan and Gilbert of Michigan, Joesting and Almquist of Minnesota, Nelson and Armil of Iowa, Wilcox and Welch of Purdue, Bennett and Randolph of Indiana, Raskowski and Rowan of Ohio State.

Several of those naming others said their choice would have been Wilcox, Lewis, or Gilbert if those young men had been in all games. This probably also will be a factor in the official ballots.

Grange Won First Trophy.

The committee which THE TRIBUNE has invited to assist in the award—previous silver footballs, actual size, have been won by Red Grange of Illinois, Tim Lowry of Northwestern, and Benny Friedman of Michigan—consists of:

Prof. A. A. Stagg, Chicago [Yale].
Robert C. Zuppke, Illinois [Wisconsin].
Richard E. Hanley, Northwestern [Washington State].

Dr. C. W. Spears, Minnesota [Dartmouth].
Glenn F. Thistlethwaite, Wisconsin [Earlham].

Burton A. Ingwersen, Iowa [Illinois].
Elton Wieman, Michigan [Michigan].
James M. Phelan, Purdue [Notre Dame].
H. O. Page, Indiana [Chicago].
Dr. J. W. Wilce, Ohio State [Wisconsin].

1927 FOOTBALL CAMPAIGN REAPS TOLL OF 17 LIVES

List of Serious Injuries Shows Decrease.

New York, Nov. 26.—[Special.]—Seventeen football players died of injuries received on the gridiron this year. This is a higher fatality than last year, when eight were killed, but short of the 1925 total of twenty, which is the record for the modern game.

The list of those receiving injuries which required hospital care is shorter than those of recent years, only about [illegible] cases having been reported. Last year 200 major injuries were listed.

Two Boys, 15, Killed.

The average age of those who died as a result of football injuries is just short of 19 years. The oldest player killed was 22 and the youngest was 15, two boys of this age having died. It is noteworthy that not one New York public school boy was seriously injured and that none was killed. Following is a list of those who died from football injuries:

Ernest E. Farquhar, 21, a freshman at Texas A. and M. college, died on Nov. 18 of internal injuries received Nov. 15 in practice.

Raymond Lundberg, 18, Salem, N. Y., died on Nov. 18 of peritonitis which developed after he had been injured in scrimmage on Nov. 15. He was a half back on the undefeated Woodbury High school team.

Charles Marsico, 18, Sharpsburg, Pa., died on Nov. 19 of blood poisoning which developed from an injury received in a high school football game. He was captain of the Sharpsburg team.

Internal Injuries Fatal.

Alfred Knutson, 15, received internal injuries in a game of high school football at Stoughton, Wis., on Oct. 28 and died in a hospital the next day.

Haskell Lucas, 21, played for the Murray State School of Agriculture at Ardmore, Okla., on Nov. 24 and received internal injuries from which he died on Nov. 25.

John Murray, 18, played his first game of football on Nov. 11, was injured and died on Nov. 17. He lived in McCook, Neb., and played on the high school team there.

James B. Swezey, 19, Ridgewood, N. J., played on a Brooklyn school team last year and received a severe head injury. He was warned not to play the game again, but he joined other boys in a game of tag football on Nov. 1. Swezey was tagged on the spot of his old injury and he died on Nov. 6.

Killed in First Game.

Harry Kernan, 17, died on Oct. 30 of injuries received on Oct. 29. He was playing his first game on the Columbia High school team of South Orange, N. J.

Harold Walker, 21, Pittsburgh, Okla., star player on the Eastern Oklahoma college eleven, received spinal injuries in a game early in October and died at McAlester on Oct. 31.

Fred Masculli, 18, Philadelphia, was playing full back for Southern High school on Oct. 27, when he was tackled and knocked unconscious, in which state he remained for twenty-four hours. An operation was performed, but he died on Oct. 28 of internal hemorrhages.

Richard B. Stellhorn, 15, Fort Wayne, Ind., received a medal during the summer for saving the lives of two women at Lake James, Ind. On Sept. 10, playing in a game for his high school, he was struck on the chin by a football. A slight cut resulted, but poisoning set in and he died on Sept. 19.

College Gridder Breaks Neck.

Harry Boski, 19, star half back on the Har-Brack High school team of Natrona, Pa., died on Oct. 17 of internal injuries suffered in a game on Oct. 15.

George Rice, 22, quarter back and end on the University of the South's football team at Sewanee, received a fractured neck in the tackling pit on Sept. 14 and died on Sept. 16.

Clay Holley, 17, received internal injuries in a McComb, Miss., high school practice on Sept. 13, and died Sept. 16 of internal hemorrhages.

Donald Morey, 21, right guard on the Manhattan college eleven of New York, collapsed during a game on Oct. 1 and died Oct. 2. The game was played under an excessively hot sun.

John Seleger, 20, was playing in a neighborhood school in Chicago on Oct. 2 when he was tackled roughly and received a fractured spine. He died the following day.

Fred Burridge, 19, played in a semi-professional game in Chicago on Oct. [illegible] and received internal injuries, from which he died on Oct. 9.

Ex-Jayhawk Coach Stands Pat in Kansas Grid Row

Lawrence, Kan., Nov. 26.—(AP)—Dr. [illegible] R. Kennedy, former University of Kansas football coach, has "no apologies to make" for his part in the Missouri-Kansas game, he declared today commenting on reports that he had scouted Missouri plays prior to the annual Missouri-Kansas clash here Saturday.

Reports of the scouting of the Missouri-Ames game in violation of the Missouri Valley rules, became current shortly after the resignation Wednesday of Coach Franklin C. Cappon and three assistants. Cappon today denied he had any connection with the scouting, and both he and Dean [illegible] W. Arant of the athletic board declared scouting activities had no bearing on the resignations.

FOOTBALL CAPTAINS.

OHIO STATE will not elect a football captain for the 1928 season. Instead a temporary captain will be appointed for each game. At the end of the schedule an honorary leader will be chosen. The object of this radical innovation is to do away with the ill feeling often engendered in selection of a leader.

This experiment will be watched with interest. It may be adopted elsewhere, especially at schools where the choice depends upon fraternity politics.

There are disadvantages as well as advantages. Most elevens are inspired to better play by the leadership of a popular fellow. Illinois and Chicago particularly, in the season just ended, derived inspiration from the efforts and direction of Bob Reitsch and Ken Rouse. In our opinion, they would not have been as good teams with temporary captains appointed for each game.

On the other hand, there were three Big Ten elevens to whom popular rumor ascribed lack of harmony or spirit of coöperation. Perhaps these rumors were overdrawn, but two of the teams certainly did not play anywhere near the standard expected of them.

If the most deserving and the most inspiring man can be chosen captain The Wake hopes the present system may continue. If fraternities want to play politics, or members of elevens want to play favorites with their ballots, then action such as that taken by Ohio State is advisable.

"Player of Greatest Value."

Dear Wake: If THE TRIBUNE trophy is awarded with strict adherence to the principle of "the player of greatest value to his team" it would be inevitable for Nowack of Illinois.

By the margin of one point Illinois won the conference title. That one point was the successful goal kick after touchdown in the Illinois-Northwestern game. Nowack kicked it. Therefore, cannot it be said that Nowack's playing, more than the playing of any other one man, won the title?

Incidentally, Nowack's playing generally throughout the entire season does not detract in any degree from his merits as candidate for the trophy.

H. H. C., Illinois, '08.

350,000 FANS PAY $1,000,000 TO SEE HARVARD ELEVEN

Cambridge, Mass., Nov. 26.—[Special.]—Despite the failure of Harvard to develop a winning football team this year, a total of more than $1,300,000 has been taken in at the Harvard football games this season, it was announced today. The exact figures have not been announced, but the approximate figures show that about 350,000 persons attended the Harvard games and that the receipts were a bit over the $1,000,000 mark.

The Pennsylvania game at Philadelphia had the largest attendance, about 60,000. The Yale game came next with 53,900 paid admissions, while the Dartmouth game was only a few hundred behind.

Harry Leibold New Boss of Columbus Association Nine

Columbus, O., Nov. 26.—(AP)—Harry [Nemo] Leibold has been made manager of the Columbus baseball team of the American association, it was announced today by Joe F. Carr, president of the club. He succeeds Ivy Wingo, recently released.

BY FRANK SCHREIBER.

The Chicago Blackhawks and Detroit Cougars fought through seventy minutes of fast play at the Coliseum last night to a scoreless tie in their National Hockey league game. Three regular twenty minute sessions ended without a goal and the teams failed to count in the ten minute extra period.

While the match was fast, there were few penalties. Only three players were sent off the ice, all in the second period. More than 5,000 saw the match.

There was little action in the first period. The Cougars led the attacking, but Gardiner put up a strong defense of his goal net and repelled all of Detroit's charges.

Former Hawk Stars for Detroit.

Keats and Hay led the play for Detroit. Hay, who last year was a member of the Blackhawks, especially showed some fine work in stick handling.

Corbet Dennenay, a new member of the Hawks' squad, showed to good advantage on offense while Wentworth and Trapp put up a strong defensive game.

Duke Keats, one of Detroit's outstanding forward stars, caused a stir in the second period when he engaged in verbal war with some of the fans at the rink, finally making a smash at an usher with his hockey stick. The usher was standing behind the rinkside box occupied by President Frederick McLaughlin of the Hawks, and his wife, the former Irene Castle, and Keats narrowly missed hitting Mrs. McLaughlin and Robert A. Gardner with his wild swing.

Ruled Off Ice.

Referee Dave Ritchie immediately put Keats off the rink inflicting a two minute penalty and warned the Detroit manager not to play Keats in the third period. Ritchie will make a report of the case to the commission.

After the match Keats declared the offending usher and two of the fans were abusive in their talk and that he also would make a report to the league president.

Except for the Keats incident the action in the second session was limited. The third period brought the most action of the night. Both teams opened up with everything they had and tried desperately to score, but without success.

In the overtime session, the players skated cautiously and took long shots at the net. Gardiner made five stops and Holmes three, but all of them were ordinary.

McKay, Dennenay, McVeigh and Wentworth were the outstanding players for the night. Detroit's stars were Traub, Hay, Keats, Walker and Johnny Sheppard.

Toronto Mapleleafs Beat Pittsburgh Pirates, 2 to 1

Pittsburgh, Pa., Nov. 26.—(AP)—The Toronto Mapleleafs defeated the Pittsburgh Pirates in a fast overtime National league hockey match here tonight, 2 to 1. Drury scored Pittsburgh's goal in the first period. Bailey of Toronto tied up the contest with a shot that found the net in the second period. A scoreless third period left the teams deadlocked, but the match ended after only 44 seconds of overtime play, when Bailey again scored for the Leafs.

THE MAN WE WANT
isn't looking for a job.

He is 30 to 40 years old—
Probably university trained—
And is successful

He has had several years with a progressive company selling and directing sales by modern sales and advertising methods.

He believes that sales management is his forte, and is ambitious for a larger opportunity.

He is mentally alert and has proved in his relations with real business men that he has sales instinct of the highest order, and can handle and inspire the men he directs.

He will be interested in a change only after he hears of our organization; its world-wide activities; its record of sound success; its need for him, and the opportunity that it offers.

Salary to be discussed later, but we do not want a man who has not proved to the satisfaction of others that he is a producer.

Just one answer is what we want. Make it in detail. Be sure it will be treated in confidence. Address it to Mr. Frank B. Whalen, Loomis-Potts Adv. Agency, 1004 Baltimore Ave., Kansas City, Missouri, who is representing us in this quest for a man.

Only written applications will be received, but if your reply is considered favorably an interview will be arranged for at a mutually convenient time and place.

The Question.

Whom do you consider the greatest individual football star in the Big Ten this year?

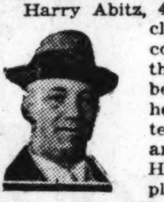
Where Asked.

Jackson street viaduct, Grant park.

The Answers.

C. F. Koschuh, 64 West Schiller street, court clerk—Lewis of Northwestern. He is what one could call a big man in the game. He is extremely aggressive and a good all around player. He can plunge, pass, and kick with the best and is an intelligent player. It is a pleasure to watch him during a game.

Alvin Nelson, 7958 Princeton avenue, student—It would be hard to improve upon the work of Herb Joesting, the Minnesota captain. He is one of the greatest line plungers in the game and his able leadership was an inspiration to the Gophers. Joesting proved his versatility by passing to Walsh for a touchdown against Notre Dame.



Harry Abitz, 4810 Berenice avenue, clerk—"Cotton" Wilcox of Purdue. He was the real driving spirit behind his team. When he was in the game his team was on its toes and playing football. His team won when he played and lost when he was out. He is one of the flashiest players I ever saw.

Stanley Lewy, Madison Park hotel, railway track equipment — Well, there's nothing wrong with Louis Gilbert of Michigan. I may be partial to Gilbert since I am an alumnus of Michigan, but I consider him one of the best players in the Big Ten anyhow. His running, passing and generalship place him as No. 1 in the rating of football players.

Delaine Johnson, 7650 South May street, student—I like young Garland Grange and I believe he is going to develop into a star player. Football seems to run in the Grange family. Young Grange did some fine work and followed the ball like a hawk. His playing in general has won the commendation of prominent men of the Big Ten.

KREMS DEFEATS MARINO IN FIRST BOWLING MATCH

Eddie Krems defeated Hank Marino in the first of a series of match games in the Chicago All-Star Bowling league at the Randolph alleys last night. Krems trailed five games to two in the first seven games of a best six out of eleven series, but won the next four games to pull victory out of the fire. In his last game he opened with a railroad and followed it with nine consecutive strikes, ending with a 275 count. Marino was hitting the pins in the 1-3 pocket but the ten pin was sticking. Krems' total for the 11 games was 2,431, an average of 221, and Marino's total was 2,336, an average of 212 4-11. Scores: Krems—212, 169, 206, 224, 214, 154, 196, 221, 195, 245, 275; Marino—191, 197, 263, 233, 181, 180, 265, 208, 187, 217, 224.

Home Town Gives Bruce Caldwell $1,000 in Gold

BRUCE CALDWELL.

Cumberland, R. I., Nov. 26.—(AP)—The village of Ashton, home of Bruce Caldwell, Yale half back, gave him $1,000 in gold tonight. The gift was made at a testimonial banquet as a gesture of sympathy with the former Yale star whose sensational football career was cut short on the eve of the Princeton-Yale game when he was declared ineligible to play with Yale.

Mayors of four Rhode Island cities, as well as former congressmen and state senators followed Caldwell who sat perched on the rear seat of an automobile through a cheering crowd in the streets.

WHAT THE WELL CLAD HUNTER SHOULD WEAR

BY BOB BECKER.

Dressing for the outdoors is one of the many problems which face the army of hunters each fall and every gunner who wants the maximum amount of sport on a trip afield can well afford to take time to study his needs and select the proper outfit. We have seen many a trip spoiled because the hunter was improperly clothed, as you can't travel far with shoes that aren't made for long distance hiking or sit in a duck blind on a cold day if the mixture of "wool and leather" isn't right.

For cold weather hunting trips there is nothing to equal all wool garments next to the skin, and the wise hunter will lay aside the cotton and wool mixed or all cotton underwear when he starts on a duck, deer, rabbit or other expedition in winter weather. When we were in Alaska, a country where temperatures send the mercury so far down that it almost disappears, we talked with many guides about the clothes question and invariably we found that they put wool next to the body, including all wool underwear, wool socks and wool shirts, then a leather garment (usually smoke tanned caribou) over the wool, as leather keeps out the wind. This is a mighty good formula to keep in mind.

The question of footgear is not easy to solve. If you have to travel in snow (especially slushy snow), we find that it pays to lay aside all leather boots or shoes and turn to footgear that is a combination of both rubber and leather. There is made today a high topped yet light weight boot with rubber bottoms, making them absolutely waterproof, while above the rubber comes 14 to 16 inches of leather which will resist water to a fair degree. With this type of boot you can wade in slush or water and keep dry without any trouble and it was no surprise to us to find this boot popular in the north country early in the snow season when it is wet and slushy. The guides told us that later in the winter when it is bitterly cold and the snow light and powdery they turned to unoiled leather moccasins.

If you are looking around for a combination of wool and waterproofed cloth you'll find it today on the market, and made up in trousers it's a boon for the duck hunter. This garment enables you to sit out in rain or snow and keep dry while at the same time the lining of wool is an aid in whipping the chilly breezes.

ST. LOUIS BLANKS SCHURZ, CHICAGO CHAMPIONS, 11-0

Chicagoans' Attack Wilts at Midfield.

St. Louis, Mo., Nov. 26.—[Special.]— Schurz high school of Chicago, public school champion, bowed today to Roosevelt, St. Louis title winner, 11 to 6.

JAMES EVANS.
[Schurz Captain.]

Wild forward passes proved the downfall of Schurz. Chicago's best work was done in midfield, Gawlinski, right half back, scooting around the ends for big gains.

Schurz's attack wilted after reaching Roosevelt's territory. Stopped at the line, the Chicagoans tried hard to gain through the air, without success.

Roosevelt carried the ball to within one yard of the goal shortly after play began. Schurz braced and held for downs, but its punt was blocked, St. Louis scoring two points on a safety.

Saussele scored for Roosevelt in the fourth quarter when he intercepted a forward pass, shook off four tacklers and ran for a touchdown. A wild pass from center cost St. Louis the point after touchdown.

Both teams engaged in a punting duel after the touchdown, and Schurz was gaining when they lost the ball after a fumble on their own 35 yard line. St. Louis was stopped trying to cut through the line. Richter advanced to the 20 yard line from where he scored from placement.

Only one penalty was inflicted throughout the afternoon. Lineup:

COLLEGE LOSES $90 COURT FIGHT TO CAGE PLAYER

Urbana, Ill., Nov. 26.—[Special.]— A verdict in favor of Lloyd A. and K. S. Manel of Mahomet was brought in by a jury in County court here in the suit against the two by Illinois Wesleyan university for $90. This amount was claimed as tuition for two semesters.

It was brought out that young Manel, because of his ability as a basketball player, was sought by Illinois Wesleyan. He claims that he was offered tuition and the promise of work sufficient to enable him to pay his expenses. University officials deny that he was offered free tuition and claim that his remuneration was to be a $50 scholarship and a job, both of which he was given.

Krem Kos Cling to Lead in Randolph Bowling League

BY HARLAND ROHM.

Changes in league standings in the Randolph Bowling league were few as the result of last week's games, none of the first four changing their relative places, though the Krem Kos and the Mineralites each gained a game.

Though idle, the Mid City bank moved up a place when the Old Nick five lost two out of three to the Dew Drops. The Puritan Malts dropped three places by losing two, while the Acmes and Barrys were winning two each and the Victors were idle. The only other change was the switching of places by the Patterson Pies and Karthuser Dew Drops near the end of the procession. The standings:

Svoma, with a 710 series, jumped his average to 202, and Lehmpuhl moved over the line with 639. Collier was 19 pins short of a 200 average in 30 games. Averages of more than 200 are:

Crowes picked off 3,167 pins, Oh Henry Candy, 3,077; Krem Ko, 3,047, and the Black Acme, 3,000. In keeping with the team scores Art Hein rolled a high serie of 692 and Ed Zajac toppled 286 pins for individual high game.

Mayer Furniture company, clipping along with a team average of 1,022, holds the lead, three games ahead of the Baby Ruth Candy team, the Krem Kos and Puritan Malts. As might be expected with such team scores, individual averages also are skyscrapers, Hank Marino leading the pack with 214 for 36 games. Eddie Krems is four pins back of him and A. Hein, J. CUPID ACTIVE AT ARMY-NAVY TILT; HITS 3 COUPLES

New York, Nov. 26.—(AP)— Cupid made the first score over both the Army and Navy today, as the followers of both arms of the service gathered here for the annual football classic.

Jack Maginnis, a naval officer of Oakland, Cal., and Honorita McGarrity of Philadelphia were married by the city clerk. Jay Paul Hopkins, an army officer of Chicago, and Miss Jessie Howell Zook of Cassopolis, Mich., obtained a license and planned to be married Wednesday. Theodore Roosevelt Wolcott, a naval officer of Gilmore City, Ia., and Catherine E. Dayton of Somerville, Mass., took out a license and said they would be married before the game.

CLEVELAND PRO GRIDDERS MEET CARDINALS TODAY

BY WILFRID SMITH.

Benny Friedman and his Cleveland Bulldogs of the National Professional Football league will meet the Chicago Cardinals this afternoon at Soldier's field.

Benny modestly bills himself as the "world's greatest forward passer," but his one visit to Chicago earlier in the season gave pro fans occasion to believe that Benny was not particularly conceited after all.

Cleveland lost to the Bears, 14 to 12, and since that time has made a creditable record. On Thanksgiving day Benny tossed enough passes against Grange's Yankees to win 30 to 19 and it will be interesting to see just how the Cardinal pass defense will operate today. The Cards were well prepared for the Bears' overhead game at Wrigley field last Thursday and this preparation had much to do with the 3 to 0 victory of the Cards.

The Cardinals now operate under the direction of Ben Jones, quarter back and captain since Chris O'Brien released Manager Chamberlain. Always a good defensive team, the Cards may show something of an offense today, for Mickey McDonnell, Mahoney, Risvold and Lamb can travel in the open field with the best of them.

With Ralph Claypool back at center, which move has shifted Springsteen to end position, for which he is more naturally fitted, the center of the Cardinal line is ready for the best plungers in the league. Claypool also is a good defensive man on passes and this will make Friedman's assignment a bit more difficult.

The second penalty handed the [illegible] less than a yard from the Purple [illegible] line and for the fifth time [illegible] afternoon Ryan dropped back [illegible] his own end zone to kick out of [illegible] der. The ball appeared under a thrashing tangle of players and when Referee [illegible] Schwartz reached the bottom of the heap he found the ample form of Warren McGuirk curled around the leather. Boston took too much time lining up for the kick and was ruled out of the chance to try for the [illegible] point.

GROWING BURDEN OF STATE TAX ON BUSINESS SHOWN

Industrial Conference Reports Increase.

While the federal government is easing up the tax burden on business, the state of Illinois is steadily increasing the load, it is pointed out by the national industrial conference in its new book, "The Fiscal Problems of Illinois."

In state taxes business, as well as the individual, is paying about twice as much in general property assessments as was paid a decade ago, the book shows. Then, in addition, the state taxes business with fees and licenses. This indirect and extra tax on business—on commerce, trade, insurance, finance, and industry—has been tripled in the last dozen years.

This super state tax on business and indirect taxes today are more than was paid on all property by all owners in the entire state twelve years ago, and this does not include the annual millions levied upon auto owners. The automobilists pay their cash for the construction, repair, and maintenance of concrete highways.

This book, which shows the method and extent to which business is hit by state taxes, also indicates the way and the extent to which the general property tax of the state has been juggled.

Two Other Objects.

When a governor is a candidate for reelection, he puts out an exceedingly low tax rate, but when the election is over, the tax rate is very high, it is pointed out. In addition to the obvious purpose of this, it accomplishes two other objects. It makes it difficult for the taxpayers to make comparisons and therefore muddles the public on the subject of taxes. Its other effect is to place large sums of cash in the state treasury, which in turn is deposited in state and national banks, thereby aiding certain bankers and, it is said, putting them under obligations to the state administration.

The industrial conference points out that the state revenue from general property taxes in 1913 was $7,523,440; in 1914 was $18,066,531, in 1915 was $10,120,849, and in 1916 was $14,496,768.

The state's revenue from general property taxes in 1926 was $30,900,073, which shows that general taxes have been more than doubled in the period referred to. The property of business had to carry that burden as well as individuals.

In addition to that boost of 100 per cent in taxation, business has had to submit to a franchise tax on corporation, incorporation charges, a percentage of the gross premiums of foreign insurance, nonbusiness license fees, inheritance taxes, and other miscellaneous charges.

These super taxes in 1914 totaled $5,750,000. In 1925 they totaled $15,312,000—nearly triple. This $15,312,000 is comparable with the state's average revenue from all general property taxes of the whole state in 1913-14-15-16 of an average of $12,551,000. The larger part of these extra taxes on corporations hit Chicago directly because most of the larger corporations of the state are in this city.

The growth of the general state tax on all property and of the supertaxes on business is set forth by the industrial conference board in the following table to show the state revenue annually from the general property tax and the supertax on business for ten separate years:

Year.	General taxes.	Super business taxes.
1914	$18,066,849	$ 5,757,471
1915	10,120,531	6,679,147
1916	14,496,768	5,489,958
1917	19,312,812	7,345,382
1918	22,658,417	8,626,796
1921	15,594,551	14,473,261
1922	13,221,496	14,613,588
1923	21,512,378	17,276,388
1924	13,675,426	17,476,289
1925	30,831,689	15,312,944

The industrial conference was unable to get complete figures for 1919, 1920 and 1926.

The book shows that the revenue of the state from both direct and indirect taxes was 188.8 per cent higher in 1925 than in 1915. In addition the bonded debt of the state last year was $139,226,500 as compared with $252,500 in 1915.

The industrial conference board attempts to show the defects in the state's fiscal policy and the remedies.

SPAIN AGREES TO BUY HALF ITS OIL NEEDS IN RUSSIA

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

PARIS, Nov. 26.—Spain has signed an agreement with the soviet naphtha syndicate to buy fifty per cent of Spain's oil consumption, which exceeds 100,000 tons annually, from Russia, for a period of from three to five years. Premier Primo de Rivera placed the oil requirements in the hands of a consortium of Spanish banks, which recommended purchasing half from the bolsheviks and the rest in America and from the Anglo-Dutch companies. It is understood that the Standard Oil company will transport petroleum from the Black Sea ports to Spain.

Count von Luckner Here to Tell About Sea Raids

Count Felix von Luckner, wartime commander of the German ship Seeadler, arrived in Chicago yesterday with his wife, Countess von Luckner, for a series of talks here on the topic, "Sea Raids of a Friendly Enemy." He will lecture tomorrow at Orchestra hall, will address the Rotary club on Tuesday at their weekly luncheon at the Hotel Sherman, and will talk the same day over the radio station W-G-N. During the war the commander was credited with having destroyed twenty vessels belonging to the allies.

Forming of Health Habits Urged in County Schools

Formation of health habits among the 100,000 pupils in the Cook county schools outside Chicago was urged yesterday by Edward J. Tobin, county superintendent, in a letter sent to each school. Accompanying the letters were charts on which will be recorded the conditions of health of each pupil. In June the healthiest boy and girl in the county will be chosen, Mr. Tobin

100 WITNESSES FACE SINCLAIR AND BURNS IN CONTEMPT CASE

Washington, D. C., Nov. 26.—[Special.]—Subpœnaes calling for the appearance of 100 witnesses to testify in the Sinclair-Burns contempt of court proceedings scheduled for Dec. 5, were being prepared today by U. S. Attorney Peyton Gordon and Neil Burkinshaw, his assistant.

Disclosure of this development apparently confirms reports that the contempt hearings will be protracted for many weeks. It has been predicted that this case together with the new Fall-Sinclair conspiracy trial set for Jan. 6 and the contempt proceedings instituted against Harry M. Blackmer, will keep the "oil litigation" before the public eye for at least three months.

The prosecution plans to subpœnae virtually every witness whose testimony contributed to the citing for contempt of Harry F. Sinclair, New York oil magnate; William J. Burns, the investigator; Henry Mason Day, oil man; Sheldon Clark, Chicago sportsman and confidante of Sinclair and the other two persons named by Justice Siddons in his contempt citation.

Sinclair, Clark, Day, and the four others named in the citation must appear before Justice Siddons to show cause why they should not be sentenced for contempt of court in connection with the alleged jury tampering plot which resulted in the ordering of a mistrial in the original Sinclair-Fall conspiracy case.

Witnesses who testified before the grand jury during its four weeks' investigation of the jury tampering include former Gov. Gifford Pinchot of Pennsylvania, Donald Woodward, Washington merchants, member of the Fall-Sinclair trial jury and C. G. Ruddy, manager of Philadelphia branch of the Burns Detective agency.

Baby, 9 Months Old, Never Cries; Confounds Experts

NUNEATON, England, Nov. 26.—(AP)—This town claims to posses one of the world's wonders in a nine months old girl, "Happy" Boulestridge. She has never been known to cry. "Happy" is attracting the widespread attention of baby experts who are confounded because she is otherwise normal and, theoretically it is impossible for a baby to be normal without crying occasionally. "Happy" laughs a great deal of the time.

WOMEN HERE PAY MORE FOR HOSE THAN FOR FURS

$24,485,500 Sales in Year, Survey Shows.

BY OSCAR HEWITT.

When Chicago's history of this decade is written, its most interesting chapter will probably be about stockings. With one exception, that of outerwear, hose is the item which involves a larger cash outlay than any other in woman's dress, according to the federal census of Chicago wholesaling for last year, being made public by the Association of Commerce.

Judged by jobbers' sales, women spend more for hosiery than for their underwear. It may not be surprising that women spend more for stockings than men spend for furnishings and haberdashery. But who ever suspected that women spend more for hosiery than for furs, as these federal figures assert? These same figures proclaim farther that women spend more than two and a half times as much for their hats as do men and boys, but women spend fifty per cent more for stockings than for millinery.

More cash is spent with wholesalers for stockings by a fifth than for bread, pies and other bakery goods and four times as much as for all of the coal, gas, oil and electric stoves sold at wholesale in the Chicago area.

Costs More than Cement.

All of the cement for concrete roads and the plaster and lime for the vast building operations in the Chicago area is a fifth short of being as much as is spent for women's hose. All the wholesale cash spent for ice, ice making machines, typewriters, calculating machines, art goods, and antiques is only a little more than 40 per cent of what women spend for hosiery.

Excluding shoes, boots, and other footwear because there is no census separation between men's and women's costs in the census, the wholesale cost of dressing the average woman is more than twice as much as for the average man. These figures indicate that women require 117 per cent more for clothes than men, excluding footwear for both.

Excluding outerwear, there is nothing which costs so much in women's dress as stockings, silk, woolen, cotton and mixtures. Incidently, some of the fine, soft yarn for women's sport hose is of British manufacture from Australian wool.

$24,485,500 For Hosiery.

The following table shows the sales by jobbers last year of the sundry items in clothing as reported by the census of Chicago wholesale houses:

Clothing.	Sales.	Per cent of total.
Women's outerwear	$ 37,145,000	14.6
Women's hosiery	24,485,500	9.6
Women's underwear	20,371,700	8.0
Fur goods	19,143,100	7.5
Millinery	16,389,300	6.5
Boys' and men's clothing	28,698,500	11.3
Men's furnishings	21,289,200	8.4
Boys' and men's hats	6,037,200	2.4
Children's and infants' wear	6,634,800	2.6
Boots, shoes, footwear	29,508,900	11.6
Trunks, leather goods	44,609,000	17.5
Totals	$254,303,200	100.0

BUSINESS GETS 2D REBUKE FOR TAX CUT POLICY

Green Calls Demands Worst Kind of Rashness

Washington, D. C., Nov. 26.—[Special.]—The chamber of commerce of the United States, which drew a sharp reprimand yesterday from President Coolidge, was criticized for its tax reduction policies today by Representative W. B. Green [Rep., Ia.], chairman of the house ways and means committee.

The suggestion by the chamber, which is urging a $400,000,000 tax reduction, that it is immaterial whether or not a deficit results, represents "the worst kind of policy," according to Mr. Green.

"The United States chamber of commerce has acted without information upon the subject," he said. "It seems to base its demand for a reduction of upwards of $400,000,000 on previous occasions when the treasury underestimated receipts and also on the claim that it is immaterial if the reduction should create a deficit in the treasury.

Reasoning Unsound, He Says.

"It is true that the treasury has heretofore underestimated the government receipts, and I was one of those who, at the time of the consideration of the former revenue bills, predicted that the receipts would be larger than had been estimated. It was, however, at that time extremely difficult to make correct estimates for the reason that the receipts from non-recurrent items such as back taxes and indebtedness to the government from various sources could not be calculated with any degree of accuracy.

Propose $235,820,000 Cut.

"We are now getting down to a normal condition so far as corporation and individual income taxes are concerned and the treasury estimates for the last fiscal years were approximately correct on these items. On the items that are not current but which may be paid at any time, we are now in a position to make fairly accurate estimates.

"The $235,820,000 reduction already provided by the committee is, in my judgment, too large to leave a proper working balance in the treasury in the fiscal year of 1929. Only one half of the proposed reduction will apply to the fiscal year of 1928, consequently we will have a good sized surplus for that fiscal year. It is the subsequent years that must be provided for."

DEMANDS INQUIRY INTO LOBBY TO CUT INHERITANCE TAX

Washington, D. C., Nov. 26.—(AP)—An inquiry by the house ways and means committee into reports that $50,000 had been used to pay expenses of witnesses recently appearing before it in favor of repeal of the federal inheritance tax was demanded today by Representative Johnson [Rep., S. D.].

The South Dakotan said that he had advised Speaker Longworth of the report that "a well financed anti-inheritance tax lobby" had been operated in the capital.

He stated that an investigation "could undoubtedly prove that this group paid off those hired to be in Washington to make the demonstration before the committee." He added "that approximately $3,500 was paid to Oregon men alone and that $700 to one man from Arizona."

Grade Separations Will Mark New South Park Drive

Elimination of Cross Traffic Also Developed in North Boulevard.

BY PUTNEY HAIGHT.

CHICAGO is leading the country in the development of highway grade separations in connection with its street improvements. The state and county highway departments are also committed to grade separations at crossings of country roads in the county surrounding Chicago.

Six newly announced street grade separations figure in the plans for the new South drive below 18th street. Two grade separations have been included in the extension of the North Shore drive between Sheridan road and Montrose avenue. The latter are completed and will be open to the public within a few days.

The south park commission will build grade separations on the new drive at 23d street, 31st street, 35th street, 39th street, 43d street, and 47th street, it was disclosed yesterday. Final details of the treatment of the separations at the various locations have not been fully determined as yet, but the engineering department of the commission expects to complete the last of its specifications within a few weeks. Several are already finished.

Inclusion of separation work in the new South drive will create an approximate motorway of the highest engineering type extending from 67th street on the south to Montrose avenue on the north, with the exception of the existing cut around which compels traffic to leave the park route at Randolph street and travel Michigan avenue to Oak street, where the shore route resumes.

Officials of the south park commission formally adopted the policy of building an unobstructed through highway some time ago. Although at present there is little indication of a heavy cross traffic to the lake shore east of the new drive that is to be surfaced next year, the commission felt that the astonishing developments of motor traffic at this time warrant provision against the future. In some cases only the west half of the ramps will be constructed at this time, but they will be built so that the east ramps may be added without trouble in the future.

Tentative drafts of the separations indicate that the cross-overs will be elevated and the through boulevard stay at grade. Treatment of the crossings will differ at different locations on account of physical conditions, but it is expected that a uniform plan will be approved finally as to general outlines.

This development is not in the distant future, but is of current construction plans, Chief Engineer White stated, and in one or two cases the foundation work is now going in in anticipation of more complete plans for superstructure.

The south park commission is endeavoring to avoid material defects, such as has resulted with Lake Shore drive at North avenue, where convergence of two boulevard branches at the north of the separation has brought about a problem in the crossing over at grade of two streams of traffic on the main boulevard.

The new separations at Irving Park boulevard and Montrose avenue in the Lincoln park system accommodate traffic without any crossing of lines, and for the present northbound traffic will underpass to the west at Montrose.

According to his progress report to the county board last week, Maj. George A. Quinlan, superintendent of county highways, will have completed by Dec. 1 a plan of the first proposed county highway grade separation. The plan is being developed as a model separation structure, and the location for it has not yet been recommended. Two or more sites at which the county owns or could acquire the property adjoining the intersections exist as possible demonstration sites.

The state of Illinois has confirmed plans for a grade separation at the intersection of 79th street and Archer avenue road. Cook county is to provide the ground necessary for construction, and the details of purchase have not yet been completed. It is the official intention to have this structure built next summer. Another state highway grade separation is planned where the new 40 foot Kankakee road intersects South Western avenue near Homewood.

Many Roads Opened as County Highway Season's Work Ends

OPENING of a number of newly paved connecting roads in the county highway system was announced last week. Contractors, it was said, are finishing up the season's work rapidly, and few of the projects of last summer will go over to next spring for completion.

Schmadka road from Crawford avenue to Olympia Fields golf course is now open for use. Connecting, a section of pavement on Kedzie avenue and from there to Lincoln highway, is also complete and can now be used for traffic.

Forty-seventh street has been completed from Fifth avenue (La Grange) to Bluff avenue, and traffic now is detoured on Bluff avenue to Ogden.

Rexford road, Crawford avenue and [illegible]7th street are now open for traffic [illegible] the result of the completion of the intersection at 147th street and Crawford avenue.

Harlem avenue, between Division street and North avenue, is completed as to pavement and opened to traffic.

Pavement on 135th street between Cicero and Central avenues, has been completed, but 135th street between Central and Harlem avenues is still under construction. Detour is provided for 135th street traffic.

New pavement on 159th street, between Halsted street and South Park way in Thornton township is completed and the section open to traffic.

HUNTSMEN who favor the toothsome mallard and noble canvassback are taking the roads to the haunts of the wild ducks along the valley of the Illinois river. Scouting has disclosed the fact that hunters who are destined for points in the neighborhood of Beardstown will be able to same some time and mileage as a result of the opening of a newly constructed highway from Canton to Beardstown and Rushville, which cuts south a short distance west of Peoria. The best goose hunting is west of Carbondale on the Mississippi river. The state highway system provides hard roads as far as Carbondale, but it is said that the roads to the river, which are not paved, are in good condition, or at least good enough to satisfy enthusiastic nimrods who are philosophical when it comes to minor hardships on a hunting tour.

Lincoln Highway Gaps Eliminated, Report Declares

THE gaps and jumps which have characterized the development of the Lincoln highway across the continent, gradually are being eliminated the report of the highway association for the end of 1927 season declares. A detailed report of the existing line of travel has been compiled by the highway officials, and while there still remain long stretches of unpaved, though improved, road surface, the conclusion is stated that the pioneer of trunk lines offers fair passage to motor vehicles from coast to coast.

An interesting feature of the final 1927 report concerns the by-pass at Philadelphia, a facility that the Cook county highway officials have borne in mind in regard to Chicago. Cook county highway authorities have been working on a temporary by-pass for a year or more and now believe that by next fall Harlem avenue will be developed sufficiently to bear a heavy burden of through traffic routed to evade all Chicago traffic. The northern portion of Harlem is to be 40 feet in width as far south as Berwyn, but south of that only 20 feet for the present.

In view of the fact that hundreds of thousands of touring automobiles travel from points east of Chicago to the northwest, the problem of routing around Chicago has been an important subject among highway authorities. A year ago there was proposed a superhighway which would extend from middle Wisconsin, skirt Chicago and continue into Indiana and to the east. This enterprise is still in the process of development, with certain portions of it within Illinois definitely provided for and other portions still in the promotional stage. In the meantime, it was believed that the development of Harlem avenue would serve the double purpose of taking care of through traffic and serving as a through north and south connecting route for the radial roads converging at Chicago.

The northern half of the road has been included in the building schedule for 1928 and the southern section, with the exception of a few miles, is either under contraction or is in process of survey and planning. Until the completion of this highway no direct line of travel exists connecting the north and northwest converging highways with the south and southeast highways,, west of the city. The Mannheim road and the Des Plaines river roads are north and south connections, but both fail to reach a connecting line at the southwest of the city. They are therefore worthless as by-pass arteries.

The log of the Lincoln highway shows the condition across the country as follows:

New York to Pittsburgh, 377 miles. Excellent paving entire distance. Unless intending to stop in Philadelphia use around city route, well marked.

Pittsburgh to East Liverpool, Ohio., 40.5 miles, via new route of Lincoln highway. All paved except three miles of cindered new road in West Virginia.

East Liverpool to South Bend, 330 miles. All hard surfaced except good detours around new construction between Upper Sandusky and Beaverdam.

South Bend to Clinton, Iowa, 238 miles. Paved; follow U. S. 30 through Elkhart and between South Bend and La Porte.

Clinton to Council Bluffs, 358 miles. Two hundred and thirteen miles concrette paved except 3 miles of graveled road.

Omaha to Cheyenne, 505 miles. Omaha to Ames. 42 miles paved; Ames to Cheyenne mostly well graded gravel.

Cheyenne to Salt Lake City, 459 miles. Mainly excellent gravel.

Salt Lake City to Reno, 578 miles. The Lincoln highway is reported in good condition on this date but the section in western Utah is impassable when wet and a storm at this time of year will render it unsafe until the spring of 1928.

Both roads between Reno and Sacramento may be closed by snow for the season, almost any day.

Reno to Sacramento, via Lake Tahoe, 162 miles. Reno to Carson City, 30 miles concrete; Carson City to the California line, fair.

Reno to Sacramento, via Donner lake, 154 miles. Reno to California line, concrete; Nevada line to Auburn, good gravel; Auburn to Sacramento, paved.

Sacramento to San Francisco, 119 miles. All paved.

News and Views of the Auto Trade

A NEW Chrysler, to top the achievements of that manufacturer, was placed on the market yesterday. It is the new Imperial 80, characterized by 112 horsepower rating, an overall length of 191 inches, many refinements for operation as well as points of luxury and comfort in finish. There are five custom built body models, the town sedan, five and seven passenger sedans, sedan-limousine and roadster. A new idea is a glass partition disappearing into the back of the front seats, by which the car may be converted into a chauffeur car in a moment. The usual manufacturers' insignia is absent from radiator shell and hub caps.

G. V. Orr, until Nov. 1 manager of the Willys-Overland Chicago branch, has been appointed northwest regional manager for that company. The regional territory includes ten states from Wisconsin and Illinois on the east to Montana and Wyoming on the west. Claude H. Paxton, formerly on Chicago's automobile row and more recently Willys-Overland manager at the Twin Cities, succeeded Mr. Orr on Nov. 16. Mr. Orr was originally from Iowa and has been with this company fourteen years.

The only remaining official endurance and speed record for stock cars not held by Studebaker was acquired recently when Studebaker cars set a new record for 2,000 miles. Each of the cars broke existing records, the fastest maintaining an average of 73.3 miles per hour.

The Chevrolet Motor company has announced the opening of a new parts and service building at Flint, Mich., costing $625,000, which completes a $2,000,000 parts and service development program during the last year. The warehouse becomes the central Chevrolet parts distribution and storage point. The major supply depots now are maintained at Janesville, Wis.; St. Louis, Buffalo, and Norwood, O.

The Moon Motor Car company began exhibition of its new line of cars, the 6-72 type with 120 inch wheel base, last week. The new model is different in design from any of the previous creations of the company with a larger and more powerful engine equipment and many improvements in coach work. The deep and narrow cellular type of radiator is used in the model.

An open cabriolet car, which may be converted into a closed type of car within 23 seconds, characterizes a new product of the Auburn Automobile company. The cabriolet is built on three chassis models, one a six and two eight cylinder jobs. A rumble seat increases passenger capacity from three to five or six.

Financing of automobile purchases on the time payment plan is appearing in volume in Europe, according to C. W. Nash, president of Nash Motors, who returned from the London and Paris motor shows recently. Mr. Nash states as his belief that auto finance methods in Europe will be a great factor in increasing per capita ownership of cars from one person in eighty, as now prevails in France, to something nearer the American ratio of one in five and a half. He believes that Europe will absorb an increasing quantity of cars of American manufacture in the near future.

MAYOR HEADS GUESTS FOR MOTOR CLUB'S BIG ANNUAL PARTY

MAYOR WILLIAM HALE THOMPSON is to be the chief guest of honor at the annual party of the Automobile Club of Illinois, which is to be held at the Rainbo gardens on the night of Dec. 1. Among other distinguished guests, according to the club, announcement, are Richard W. Wolfe, commissioner of public works; Judge Joseph Sabath, Senator John Dailey, C. S. Peterson, city treasurer; Judge William Helander, Thomas Wallace, and Senator Roy C. Woods.

In view of the reservations made to date by club members, which were announced at more than 3,000, it is expected that the gathering will be the largest of the club's series of annual affairs.

Si Mayer, president of the club, is to act as master of ceremonies and announces that a number of professional stage people playing in Chicago will help in the way of entertainment.

School Teaches Motoring.

The public schools of Houston, Tex., have made arrangements for conducting classes in automotive training, where boys over 14 years are strong enough to take up work of this kind may receive training. Pupils enrolling for this work for the first year will devote 50 per cent of a six hour day in shop practice, 35 per cent to the study of blueprints, mechanical theory and mathematics, and the remaining 15 per cent to academic subjects.

New Lincoln Drive Extension Ready for Traffic Dec. 1

LINCOLN PARK engineers reported the new two way north extension of the lake shore drive from Sheridan road turn to Montrose avenue as nearly completed at the end of the week. The foundation work had been finished on Monday and the paving gangs had been started the next day on the work of laying the top strata.

Unless unforeseen difficulties arise, it was said at the office of David H. Jackson, president of the Lincoln park commissioners, the new portion of the drive will be opened to the public on Dec. 1.

Completion and opening of the new section of the shore drive will serve to lengthen the uninterrupted boulevard journey north by nearly another mile. At present the portion of the extension north of Sheridan road turn continues on the ground level to Irving Park boulevard and traffic uses that street for the turn to get on to Clarendon avenue which continues to Lakeside place.

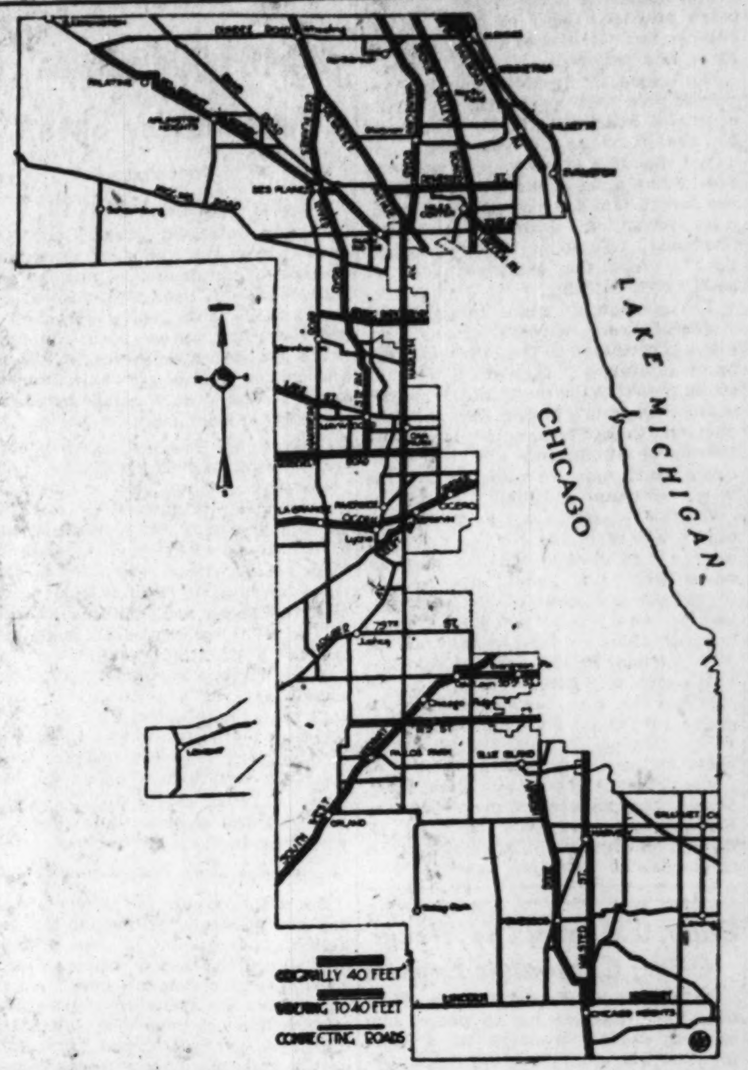
Traffic over the new extension northbound will continue north to the right of Sheridan road turn, an elevated roadway to Montrose, where the turn to Clarendon avenue will be made. The new route will eliminate considerable confusion which has existed at Irving Park boulevard and Clarendon avenue, especially during rush hours, and reduce running time from downtown to Montrose and Clarendon possibly several minutes.

Although the new section will complete a route over perfect pavement from as far south at 23d street along the lake, the condition of the pavement on Clarendon avenue is such that traffic will be definitely slowed up between the junction of Clarendon avenue and Montrose and Lakeside and Sheridan, where traffic returns to Sheridan road.

It was suggested by the park autharities that the city would be able to prevent a continuous congestion during peak hours at Montrose and Clarendon by cutting back the curbs at the intersection and paving to a new line that would permit easy turning of motor vehicles.

The surface of the pavement along Clarendon avenue is also considered in defective condition, although it was said at the city bureau of streets that some repairing and filling of holes would immediately be started. Temporary repairing of the street was promised within the next few days. More permanent improvement requires deliberation, it was stated.

Cook County's 1928 Wide Road System



HIGHWAY construction work to be done in Cook county in 1928 under plans approved by the county board's citizens' advisory committee, assures a system of about 70 miles of 40 feet roadway by the end of the year. Sixty-one and a half miles of the wide road is the project set for the county highway department during the coming building season. About ten miles of that width highway was completed, or nearly so, by the state this summer within the county.

The new construction plan, which is translated into map form in the accompanying illustration, is scheduled to come before the board of county commissioners tomorrow for formal approval. Under the arrangement made between the board and the committee the commissioners agreed to accept the recommendation as final in regard to the designation of road work for 1928.

The map indicates that 40 foot highways will converge at the city limits from many directions. There will be two 40 foot north and south arteries in addition, which will make possible the skirting of Chicago by through traffic from or to the north and northwest.

A portion of the 40 foot road is to be newly built as such, a portion is to be widened from existing 20 foot concrete, as indicated by the legend. The principal connecting highways, which are of 18 and 20 foot width are shown by narrower lines to indicate possibilities for short cuts for local traffic and the lines upon which express traffic may originate.

Roosevelt Highway, Short Cut to East, Will Open Tuesday

CHICAGO-New York motor journeys will be materially shortened as to time and greater ease of traveling assured by the opening on Nov. 29 of the new Roosevelt Memorial highway from the level of Lake Erie to New York.

The road has been cut through the Allegheny mountains for a greater part of the distance and is considered an outstanding engineering feat. It has cost the state of Pennsylvania nearly $16,000,000. It rises by easy stages from the lake level to a gap in the Alleghenies 2,400 feet above sea level, near Port Allegheny, and then slopes gradually down to the level of Delaware water gap on the way to the seaboard.

Dedication services are to be held Tuesday near Wyalusing and Twin Cuts, in an impressive setting, with the Pennsylvania mountains as a background and the gorges of the Susquehana river below. The location for the ceremonies is a little west of Wyalusing where the heaviest piece of construction of any Pennsylvania highway work was done. At this point twin cuts through rock to a depth of 69 feet are joined by a fill of 290,000 tons of rock.

When this barrier was overcome the most direct highway between New York and Chicago was declared complete.

Single Detour Mars Fourteen Main Roads in Chicago Territory

ONE four mile detour alone exists in all the mileage of fourteen state highways radiating from Chicago, within the distance of fifty miles, according to a report issued by George N. Lamb, engineer in charge of state highway operations in the first district.

The existing detour is on Roosevelt road just at the county line, where it intersects the Butterfield road. At that point it is necessary to detour to the southwest for two and a half miles and then north for a mile and a half to the divided highway, which is No. 6 of the state system.

Those roads reported as clear of detours are Nos. 1, 4, 4A, 5, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 42, 42A, and 46 of the state highway system.

A detour which was in existence for several weeks on Roosevelt road in Maywood was eliminated a few days ago.

Closes Itself when your motor needs heat.

Opens Itself when your motor needs cool air.

WHEN the first snappy morning comes, and you must drive a few blocks with the "choke" out—watch out! That's a vital warning that your motor is in danger from cold.

Authorities say the "choke" habit is the greatest of all factors contributing to premature motor wear. And cold brings the "choke" into excessive use.

Here is what happens

You pull the "choke." Instantly your cold-stiffened motor is flooded with raw gasoline. It sprays the oil from smooth metal surfaces, bringing grinding friction. Excessive dilution follows, fouled spark plugs, high gas consumption, extreme carbonization, corrosion and rapid cylinder wear,

Winterfront ends these dangers—automatically

With a Pines Automatic Winterfront on your car you "warm up" in seconds. You lose the dangerous "choke" habit because Winterfront removes the need for it. And you side-step completely the dangers of cold. You enjoy a noticeable increase in gasoline economy—snug warmth inside your car—summer-time smoothness and flexibility in your motor.

Put on in ten minutes

We'll put a Pines Automatic Winterfront on your car in ten minutes. Remember—it's automatic. Demand the original. Cold is too serious a menace to take chances with. Hogs cleared quickly at steady to 5c lower prices on the week-end session, with only 2,000 pen holders remaining at the close. Top dropped 5c at $9.35, with general average off 5c at $8.70, but prices still show 35c advance since last Tuesday, the low day of the year. Ten local packers entered the market, and with outsiders taking 1,000, some orders were unfilled at the close. Larger packers were among the best buyers, the Armour and Swift houses obtaining a total of over 3,000.

Week's Receipts Smaller.

A let up in offerings of underweights and pigs following several days of demoralizing price cuts, coupled with the Thursday holiday, reduced last week's receipts to 153,000, against 206,865 the previous week, and 150,562 a year ago. Weights were slightly heavier but below normal for the time of year. Last week's estimate weight at 226 lbs. compares with 224 lbs. the preceding week, which was within 3 lbs. of the lightest since 1921. Hogs a year ago averaged 232 lbs., and two years ago, 239 lbs.

The week's market as a whole was lowest since November, 1924, prices averaging $8.60, against $9.05 the previous week. Weekly averages in 1923 were as low as $6.65, the lowest since 1915.

Cattle Prices Fall.

A break in medium classes of cattle carried the week's general average for good beef steers down to $13.75, lowest since week ending Oct. 15, against $14.30, the previous week. Top kinds, however, established new peaks for the last seven years, prime 1,375@1,491 lb. averages bringing $18.65, with 1,210 lb. averages at $18.50 and 1,090 lb. yearlings at $18.25. Baby beef heifers reached $15.50. Cattle are selling nearly $4.00 above the average for the five corresponding weeks from 1922 to 1926, inclusive. Chicago receipts this month are running 70,000 behind November, 1926, with the year to date total 300,000 smaller than a year ago.

Sheep Receipts Small.

Buyers ran into another shortage in sheep receipts at all leading market centers last week, but successfully averted a sharp advance in prices on the strength of reports of only moderate activity on dressed lamb. Gains of 15@25c were cited, with aged and yearling stock firm at the previous week's high point. Natives and fed westerns reached $14.25, with handy yearlings at $11.50 and old ewes up to $7.00. Chicago sheep receipts thus far this month at 238,000 compare with 261,035 the same period last month and with 295,753 a year ago. Receipts for Monday are estimated at 21,000 cattle, 57,000 hogs and 18,000 sheep, against 21,977 cattle, 48,820 hogs, and 3,110 sheep, a week ago, and 27,611 cattle, 47,058 hogs, and 25,253 sheep, the corresponding day a year ago. Next week's receipts are estimated at 66,000 cattle, 210,000 hogs, and 85,000 sheep, against 63,150 cattle, 178,846 hogs, and 8,119 sheep, a year ago.

Lake Shore T. & S. Bank Makes Increase in Stock

Although less than eight years old, the Lake Shore Trust and Savings bank is planning a second "melon" for its stockholders. The directors have voted to increase the capital stock from $500,-000 to $600,000. The new stock will be offered to stockholders of record Oct. 13, last, at $150 a share in the ratio of one new share for each five shares held. The current market price of the stock is around 320. The new stock will be issued Jan. 2.

The Lake Shore Trust and Savings bank, located at North Michigan avenue and Ohio street, began business in May, 1920, with $300,000 capital and $60,000 surplus. The capital was increased to $500,000 in 1924. Through the sale of stock and earnings the surplus has been increased to $200,000 and undivided profits now are about $170,000. Through the present sale of stock and transfer of undivided profits the surplus will be brought up to $300,000 and undivided profits still will exceed $100,-000. Deposits now exceed $10,000,000.

W. J. Myers Receiver for Robbins & Myers

Springfield, O., Nov. 26.—Wilbur J. Meyers was appointed receiver for the Robbins & Myers company in the Common Pleas court today. F. S. Hunting, chairman of the company, stated that the receivership had become necessary because of the inability of bank creditors and bondholders to agree upon a basis under which business could be continued. Mr. Myers was granted authority by the court to continue operation of the company's business.

Interest in the company's 7 per cent bonds falls due next Thursday. It is not likely that this will be paid. These bonds, an original $3,000,000 issue offered in 1920, are largely held in Chicago. Following the bonds there is an issue of $1,500,000 cumulative 8 per cent first preferred stock, $2,066,100 cumulative 7 per cent preferred stock, and 40,000 shares of common stock.

FINANCIAL NOTES

NEW YORK, Nov. 26.—(AP)—Operations of the newly organized General Cable corporation, which absorbed five wire and cable companies, are at 75 to 80 per cent of capacity. Current business is at about the same rate as in the last few months, but the price situation is stronger.

The lumber industry last week took the lead over the corresponding week last year reports from 461 mills to the National Lumber Manufacturers' association showing larger orders, with production and shipments almost the same. Increases in all three factors were noted in comparison with the preceding week, and a good gain in new business. Unfilled orders of 225 southern pine and west coast mills were 556,721,896 feet, against 422,-359,990 feet for 217 mills the week before.

The healthiest division of the automotive parts industry is the replacement parts section, which has been doing a record volume since midyear, the Motor and Accessory Manufacturers' association reports. Generally the industry is in a strong position.

Production of lead in October by countries that furnished 90 per cent of the world's output is put at 138,688 short tons, against 134,761 in September and 135,784 in August, the American Bureau of Metal Statistics reports. The month's production of zinc, including estimated output of nonreporting countries, was 125,300 short tons, against 118,900 in September and 121,900 in August.

Iron ore shipments from Lake Superior are expected to end tomorrow when the last boats will leave the Great Northern docks at Allouez bay and the "Soo" docks at Superior. Total shipments for the 1927 season are estimated at about 51,000,000 tons, more than 7,000,000 less than the 1926 total.

Commercial failures in the United States this week are calculated at 381 by R. G. Dun & Co., against 442 the week before and 397 a year ago. Bank clearings in 23 leading cities in the United States this week totaled $8,819,921,000, an increase of 19.7 per cent over the same week in 1926.

Common shareholders of the Standard Gas and Electric company will be offered the privilege of subscribing, on or before Dec. 28, to additional common stock at $50 a share to the extent of one-tenth of their holdings of Dec. 6. For this purpose the directors authorized an increase of 10 per cent in the outstanding common stock, the proceeds of which will be used for additional investment in public utility companies.

WALL STREET NOTES

NEW YORK, Nov. 26.—(AP)—Week-end profit taking, which developed in the early dealings, appeared to have run its course in the last half of today's bond market and prices again headed upward. A few hitherto inactive liens were selected by traders and bid up sharply. Among such issues Chicago, Indianapolis and Louisville general 6s stood out with a gain of more than a point to a new peak. Continental Bag and Paper 6½s also were carried into new high territory by brisk bidding.

Responding to announcement of the merger with Republic, Trumbull Steel 6s jumped 2¼ points to 101¾, the highest of the year. Republic 5½s advanced fractionally. Julius Kayser 5½s again reflected heavy buying, selling as high as 107⅛ for the first time. Oil issues such as Shell Union 5s and Standard of New York 4½s were subject to realizing pressure.

St. Paul liens continued to mount, the convertible 5s and refunding 4½s selling at their best prices of the year and some others advancing a point or more. Missouri Pacific 4s were taken in large amounts above 81, just under the year's peak. Erie 5s were heavy.

United States treasury issues developed sudden strength in the last few minutes of trading, some of them selling within small fractions of their year's peaks. Profit taking clipped away a fraction of the recent gain of Peruvian 7s. Easing tendencies also were noted in French, Italian, and some of the German securities.

Burlaps were firmer, due to active business in goods for South American shipment during the week.

RAILROAD NOTES

Railroads were authorized by the interstate commerce commission to delay until Jan. 10 the effective date for the 13c per 100 lbs reduction in rates on California fruit other than apples and citrus varieties moving to the eastern half of the United States. The commission, in a recent decision, refused to change its ruling of last summer requiring the rate cut, but railroads have announced their intention to appeal to the courts in their endeavor to stop the reductions.

A rate increase on sugar from California points to Portland, Ore., which railroads proposed to make effective tomorrow was ordered held in abeyance by the interstate commerce commission, and present rates maintained until June 28, 1928. Meanwhile an investigation into the contemplated rate change will be made.

"October earnings reflected the heavy peak business of the Great Northern during the fall," said Ralph P. Budd, president of the Great Northern. "Business at present is lighter than last month. It appears that while gross revenues for the year will be larger than 1926, net operating income will be less, due to increases in wages and to the increased price of coal. In 1926 gross revenues totaled $117,383,900, and net operating income was $31,280,429."

The Seaboard Air Line in the first nineteen days of November handled 122,630 revenue freight cars, against 138,055 for the same period last year. The Atchison handled 35,887 revenue freight cars in the week ended Nov. 25, against 42,181 in the same week last year.

COTTON IN SMALL DECLINE

Cotton prices were under pressure practically from the start to the finish and closed at around the bottom. This was in the face of an advance of 5@8 points better than was expected in Liverpool and, while the market opened unchanged to 5c higher in America, there was a weak undertone on scattered liquidation, combined with New Orleans selling. Trade reports were less favorable, with production in some mills being reduced. Fall River sales for the week were only 30,000 pieces of cloths.

German consumption of cotton continues at a higher rate, and mill books are well loaded with orders.

At the close Chicago was 12@17 points lower on futures, with other markets off 13@19 points. Spots lost 15 points, with New York 19.75c and New Orleans 19.43c, Houston at 19.55c, and Galveston 19.60c. Prices follow:

NEW YORK, Nov. 26.—(AP)—STEEL—Prices unchanged.

CHICAGO CURB MARKET

Bank stocks were the center of attraction in the local unlisted securities market last week, with trading being evenly distributed among a great many issues. The trend of prices was upward. The outstanding exceptions to this trend were Chicago Trust and National Bank of Commerce, which continued to react from the high levels reached at the time of the merger announcement. Chicago Trust was offered down 10 points to 420 without attracting buyers at better than 410, while National Bank of Commerce was in supply at 295.

Stock of the new Continental National Bank and Trust company was active at advancing prices in the late trading, reaching a high of 535, up 30 points for the week. This is equivalent to 749 on the old stock. Illinois Merchants was steady and somewhat better between 901 and 904. First National was neglected and about 5 points lower, being offered at 845, with bids at 840. State Bank rallied about 5 points to 582 bid, 586 asked. A rise of 10 points to sales at 507 in National Bank of the Republic was explained by the declaration of a special extra dividend of 2½ per cent. The bid price for Standard Trust and Savings improved to 445 without attracting sellers below 450.

Although Central Trust Company of Illinois changed hands at 470 in the early trading, it showed a slight loss for the week, closing at 462@465. Union bank was in exceptionally good demand at 385 bid, up 45 points for the week. Bank of America had a sharp advance of 25 points to a high and last sales at 350. Stock Yards National was actively dealt in, closing sales at 340 representing an improvement of 10 points. Peoples Stock Yards State rose to 305 in the late trading.

Trading in the industrial group was on a limited scale. Acme Steel Goods was firm at 73½ bid, 74½ asked. Transactions in Beatrice Creamery were within a narrow range, between 67½ and 68. The preferred continued to improve, moving up to 109 bid. Bortman Electric was in supply at 29. Chicago Rapid Transit was actively traded in, but showed little change around 15. Congress Hotel was in supply and offered down 10 points to 215. Cudahy Packing preferred moved up a full point to 101 bid. Dawes Bros. preferred lost a point to 78½@79½. Dolese & Shepard displayed a good tone at 104 bid, 107 asked, up 2.

Elgin National Watch changed hands at 64. Fansteel was reactionary, declining from opening and high sales at 37⅜ to closing sales at 35¼. Federal Electric preferred was in supply, with trading on a limited scale. It declined about 4 points, being offered at 53, with best bids at 50. First State Pawners Society changed hands at 135. A good demand was in evidence for Goodman Manufacturing at 52@53, up 1. Kellogg company common added another 17 points to its previous 18 point advance, closing at 142 bid. McCord Manufacturing common was offered as low as 7. The debenture and class A issues were steady at 17½@18½ and 63@66, respectively. Numerous buyers were noted for Northwestern Yeast at higher prices, 185 being freely bid, with cheapest offerings at 190.

TRADE ASPECTS OF SMITH BOOM FOR PRESIDENT

BY HARPER LEECH.

In estimating the bearing of the coming presidential campaign on business, the superficial view would be that the prospect of the nomination of Gov. Al Smith of New York foreshadows a campaign devoid of economic issues—therefore of less than the usual business significance.

This view, however, overlooks certain facts. Gov. Smith, a stanch libertarian as to sumptuary laws, has a record which commends him to many of the groups which favor state socialism in some degree or other. He has the support of the urban masses of the east, because he is a worthy champion of personal liberty. In the south he will have the support of the Jeffersonians of the hills and the Bourbons of the valleys—groups which have been largely stay at home in recent years through disgust at clerical politics and office broking by professional rings—but which also have occasionally asserted themselves victoriously in state politics. Nomination of Smith will be a signal for a rising by them.

But the "New Tammany" also has the support of the state Socialists, welfare workers and high hat reformers of the east, who made the city administration of John Purroy Mitchel America's outstanding urban venture in paternalism to date. Here are some of the reasons be commanded that support:

1. Gov. Smith stands for state ownership and operation of hydro-electric power plants. His supporters east and west include the groups most interested in federal ownership and operation of power plants. A power issue will, of course, feature any campaign in which Gov. Smith is a candidate. It may take on a state rights tinge and rally local support in many places. Gov. Smith opposes the export of power from New York state. Ownership by the state would probably get around the interstate commerce clause of the federal constitution and the West Virginia natural gas decision of the United States Supreme court.

2. Gov. Smith has just secured a constitutional amendment in New York authorizing cities to condem land in aid of housing schemes. This makes an issue of interest to real estate and construction people, especially in view of Britain's experience in that line. But it also cements the support of the professional social welfare groups who see in it a step toward their ideal of housing urban populations in state subsidized and regulated barracks.

3. Gov. Smith has just secured an amendment lifting the debt limit of New York by $300,000,000, to aid the construction of more municipal subways—no new policy in New York, but it also gives the city a club in any negotiations to oust the existing operating companies and undertake municipal operation—a policy probable if not imminent.

These three big items are only parts of a list of similar acts and policies which will become of interest in a presidential campaign.

In the west Gov. Smith has the sympathy—even the prospects of support under certain contingencies—of one or two corn belt senators—of the variety elected by farmer votes who in Washington represent the ideas of one "rural community"—Greenwich Village—almost exclusively.

The corn belt yeomanry probably have little interest in municipal subways and model tenements—which will inevitably increase the overhead of the urban tax bill on the national income.

Convertible Bonds.

Frequently we have stressed the importance of safety of principal in any investment.

We have pointed out the fact that a bond, by its very nature, is a safer form of security than a stock.

There are, of course, good bonds and bad bonds, just as there are good and bad stocks, but as a type a bond, being a formal promise to repay money loaned with fixed interest thereon, and being secured by certain valuable assets, contains elements of safety which are entirely lacking in a stock, which represents not a loan, but part ownership in a business and which has no maturity date, fixed interest, or pledge of assets to insure repayment of principal—repayment, in fact, not being contemplated or expected.

Many investors are inclined to dispense with the element of safety in bonds for the chances of greater gain in stocks through the possibility of increased dividends and appreciation in market price.

Sometimes they profit thereby and sometimes they lose, but always their principal is unprotected.

There is, however, a form of security that combines the safety of a bond with the speculative possibilities of a stock.

This is a convertible bond.

Convertible bonds have the advantage of being secured by pledge of fixed assets, having a definite maturity date, and bearing fixed interest payable on certain specified dates, but, in addition to this, they give the holder the privilege of purchasing a number of shares of the company's stock at certain fixed prices.

If, during the life of the bond, the stock never becomes worth as much as the option price, the bondholder still has his bond with its regular interest and security.

If, on the other hand, the stock increases in value and rises above the option price, the bondholder has an opportunity for additional profit.

He can exercise his option and purchase the stock at the fixed price and then either sell at the higher market price or continue to hold it for further advances.

However, as the conversion privilege of the bond naturally increases in value in proportion as the stock rises above the option price, the market price of the bond will closely follow the advance in the stock's price.

By refraining from exercising his conversion privilege, the bondholder may thus enjoy the increase in market price of his security while enjoying the protection of a bond.

It is, of course, true that this form of security is not often issued by strong companies except under special conditions, but such conditions occasionally arise and from time to time convertible bonds are issued by strong companies.

When really high grade convertible bonds are available, they form a very attractive form of investment.

WORLD'S GRAIN MARKET NEWS

With a reduction in the short interest in wheat, there was more of a bearish feeling in expectation of increased liquidation by December longs, and it was said that unless the buying support develops a lower range of prices is expected. One of the largest pit traders, who has been bullish, was a large seller of wheat and expressed himself as bearish. A good part of the selling here throughout the day was attributed to the northwest.

Country marketings of wheat in western Canada Friday were 3,603,000 bu, against 2,342,000 bu last year. Country loadings were 2,438 cars, against 1,553 cars last year. Of the 2,174 cars of wheat received at Canadian points on Friday there were 8 cars of No. 1 northern, 1,347 cars No. 2 northern, 504 cars No. 3 northern, 310 cars No. 4 northern, 108 cars No. 5 northern, 65 cars No. 6 northern; no grade, 917 cars; others, 130 cars.

It is said that the deliveries of cash wheat and oats on December contracts the first few days of next month are likely to be 2,500,000 bu each. Most of the oats will be No. 3 white. Hard winter wheat is being transferred from private to public bins so that it can be delivered on December sales, and part of the receipts for No. 2 hard winters, which have been canceled the last few days, are understood to be nearly transferred for delivery purposes. There is 110,000 bu of No. 2 hard winter to be loaded out for shipment to Buffalo for winter storage.

Expectations are that the visible supply of wheat and corn will show little change for the week. Duluth wheat stocks are expected to decrease around 1,500,000 bu, Chicago will show little change, Minneapolis increased 425,000 bu, and Kansas City decreased 250,000 bu. Last year the visible increased 386,000 bu. Corn visible last year decreased 138,000 bu. World's shipments of wheat for the week are estimated at 17,000,000 bu, as compared with 14,038,000 bu last year.

LARD MARKET EASY

November and December lard were sold by commission house longs the more extensive way, and shorts were the principal buyers. Deliveries were 50,000 lbs on November contracts. Prices had a small range and closed 2½ to 5c lower, near deliveries being the weakest. Lard in Liverpool was unchanged for spot and 3 to 6d lower for futures. Export clearances were 2,335,325 lbs.

Short ribs were unchanged at $10.60 for November, and 5c lower for December at $10.20. November bellies were unchanged at $11.55, and December 7½c lower at $11.60.

Shipments of meat for the week were smaller than the previous week and larger than last year. Lard shipments were less than the previous week and last year.

Hog prices were steady to 10c lower. Prices follow:

Louisiana & Arkansas R. R. Sold to Couch Syndicate

Texarkana, Ark., Nov. 26.—(AP)—The Louisiana and Arkansas railway, a 300 mile road, yesterday changed hands at a price reported to be $10,000,000. H. C. Couch of Pine Bluff, Ark., and associates announced in New York that the purchase of the road has completed and control will be taken over on or before Jan. 15. The northern terminal of the road is at Hope, Ark., the southern at Alexandria, La. Purchase of the railway is Mr. Couch's first venture in railroad ownership, but in his career that started as an Arkansas farm boy, too poor to get an education until almost of age, he has owned telephone companies, electric companies, light plants and other concerns.

New York, Nov. 26.—[Special.]—Prices were churned about in bewildering fashion in the New York stock market in today's week-end session. The market boiled with activity and total transactions expanded to 1,324,100 shares, making one of the most active two hour Saturday sessions in recent months.

There was a wavering tendency shown in many stocks in the first hour, although this was offset by advances in other issues in which pool operations were being conducted. Then the market gathered strength under active buying of the steel and rubber issues. But profit taking followed the advance and closing quotations were irregular, although favoring the up side.

News of Day Is Mixed.

News of the day was mixed. The successful conclusion of the merger of the Republic Iron & Steel and Trumbull Steel companies, with the possibility that other middle west steel concerns eventually will be taken in, inspired buying of the steel issues.

The advance in brokerage loans in the last week to another new high level was largely disregarded and was offset by the stronger position shown by the weekly report of the federal reserve system. At the close of the market, however, the New York clearing house bank statement appeared, showing a deficit in reserves of $39,408,980, compared with excess reserve of $10,621,630 a week ago.

U. S. Steel Shows Strength.

Among the standard industrials, United States Steel advanced to 147⅝ and closed slightly lower for a new gain of nearly a point. Radio Corporation reached a new peak at 95⅞, with a net gain of 2 points. American Smelting rose to 176 and closed slightly lower for a gain of 3⅝ points.

On the other hand, International Harvester declined 2½ points. General Motors gained a bare fraction and Allied Chemical, American Can, American Telephone, General Electric, and Pullman showed unimportant price changes. Du Pont, which holds a large interest in General Motors, declined 1¼ points.

Rubber Issues Move Up.

In the rubber group, International Rubber led with an upturn of 3⅝ points and smaller gains were made by Fisk Rubber, the Goodrich issues, Miller Rubber, and United States Rubber preferred. In the motor group Federal Motor Truck rose 2⅞ points and smaller gains were made by Studebaker preferred, and Stewart-Warner. Murray Body, however, lost more than a point.

The metal group followed American Smelting upward, with net gains of a point or two in Grenne Cananea, Howe Sound, International Nickel, National Lead, United States Smelting, and Vulcan Detinning. The fertilizer issues also were strong, with American Agricultural Chemical preferred, and Virginia Carolina Chemical gaining a point or more.

Gains in General List.

In the general industrial list, Porto Rican Tobacco A jumped 5¾ and the B shares rose 4¾ points.

Gains ranging from one to 5 points were made by Allis Chalmers perferred, American Home Products, American International, American Piano preferred, American Shipbuilding, American Type Foundry, American Woolen preferred, Arnold Constable, Atlantic Gulf and West Indies, Bush Terminal, Continental Can, Continental Baking A, Continental Insurance, Diamond Match, Detroit Edison, Federal Light and Traction, Gulf States Steel, International Telephone, Jewel Tea, Macy, Mathieson Alkali, Producers and Refiners, National Supply, Shattuck, Standard Gas, Thatcher, Trusse & Williams, and Twin City.

Other Industrials Decline.

On the other hand there were a number of weak spots. Losses ranging up to nearly 4 points were incurred by American Express, American Republics, American Radiator, Bayuk Cigars, Brooklyn Edison, Brooklyn Union Gas, Christie Brown, General American Tank Car, Liggett & Myers, North American, Phoenix Hosiery, Southern Dairies A, the standard Milling issues, Union Carbide, Warner Quinlan, Westinghouse Electric, and Worthington Pump.

The railroad group was weak. Losses of more than a point were shown by Erie, Lehigh Valley, New Haven, and Norfolk and Western. On the other hand, Chesapeake and Ohio, and Delaware and Hudson gained a point or more.

Security for a Safe Investment

The Right Building in the Right Location

LOCATION is of utmost importance in the consideration of first mortgage real estate financing.

Good location means good earning power—good transportation facilities—good light and air. The right location, improved with the proper type of building, is the best assurance of ample income to meet the interest payments and also to reduce substantially the amount of the mortgage outstanding.

The right location, too, means increasing land value, and a continuous high average of occupancy and rentals.

The first mortgage bonds we offer are secured by properties centrally located in the leading cities of the country, where building needs are most urgent; earnings most certain; margins of safety most secure, and appreciation of values most likely.

Presenting America's most ... powerful Motor Car

The new 112 Horsepower

"80"

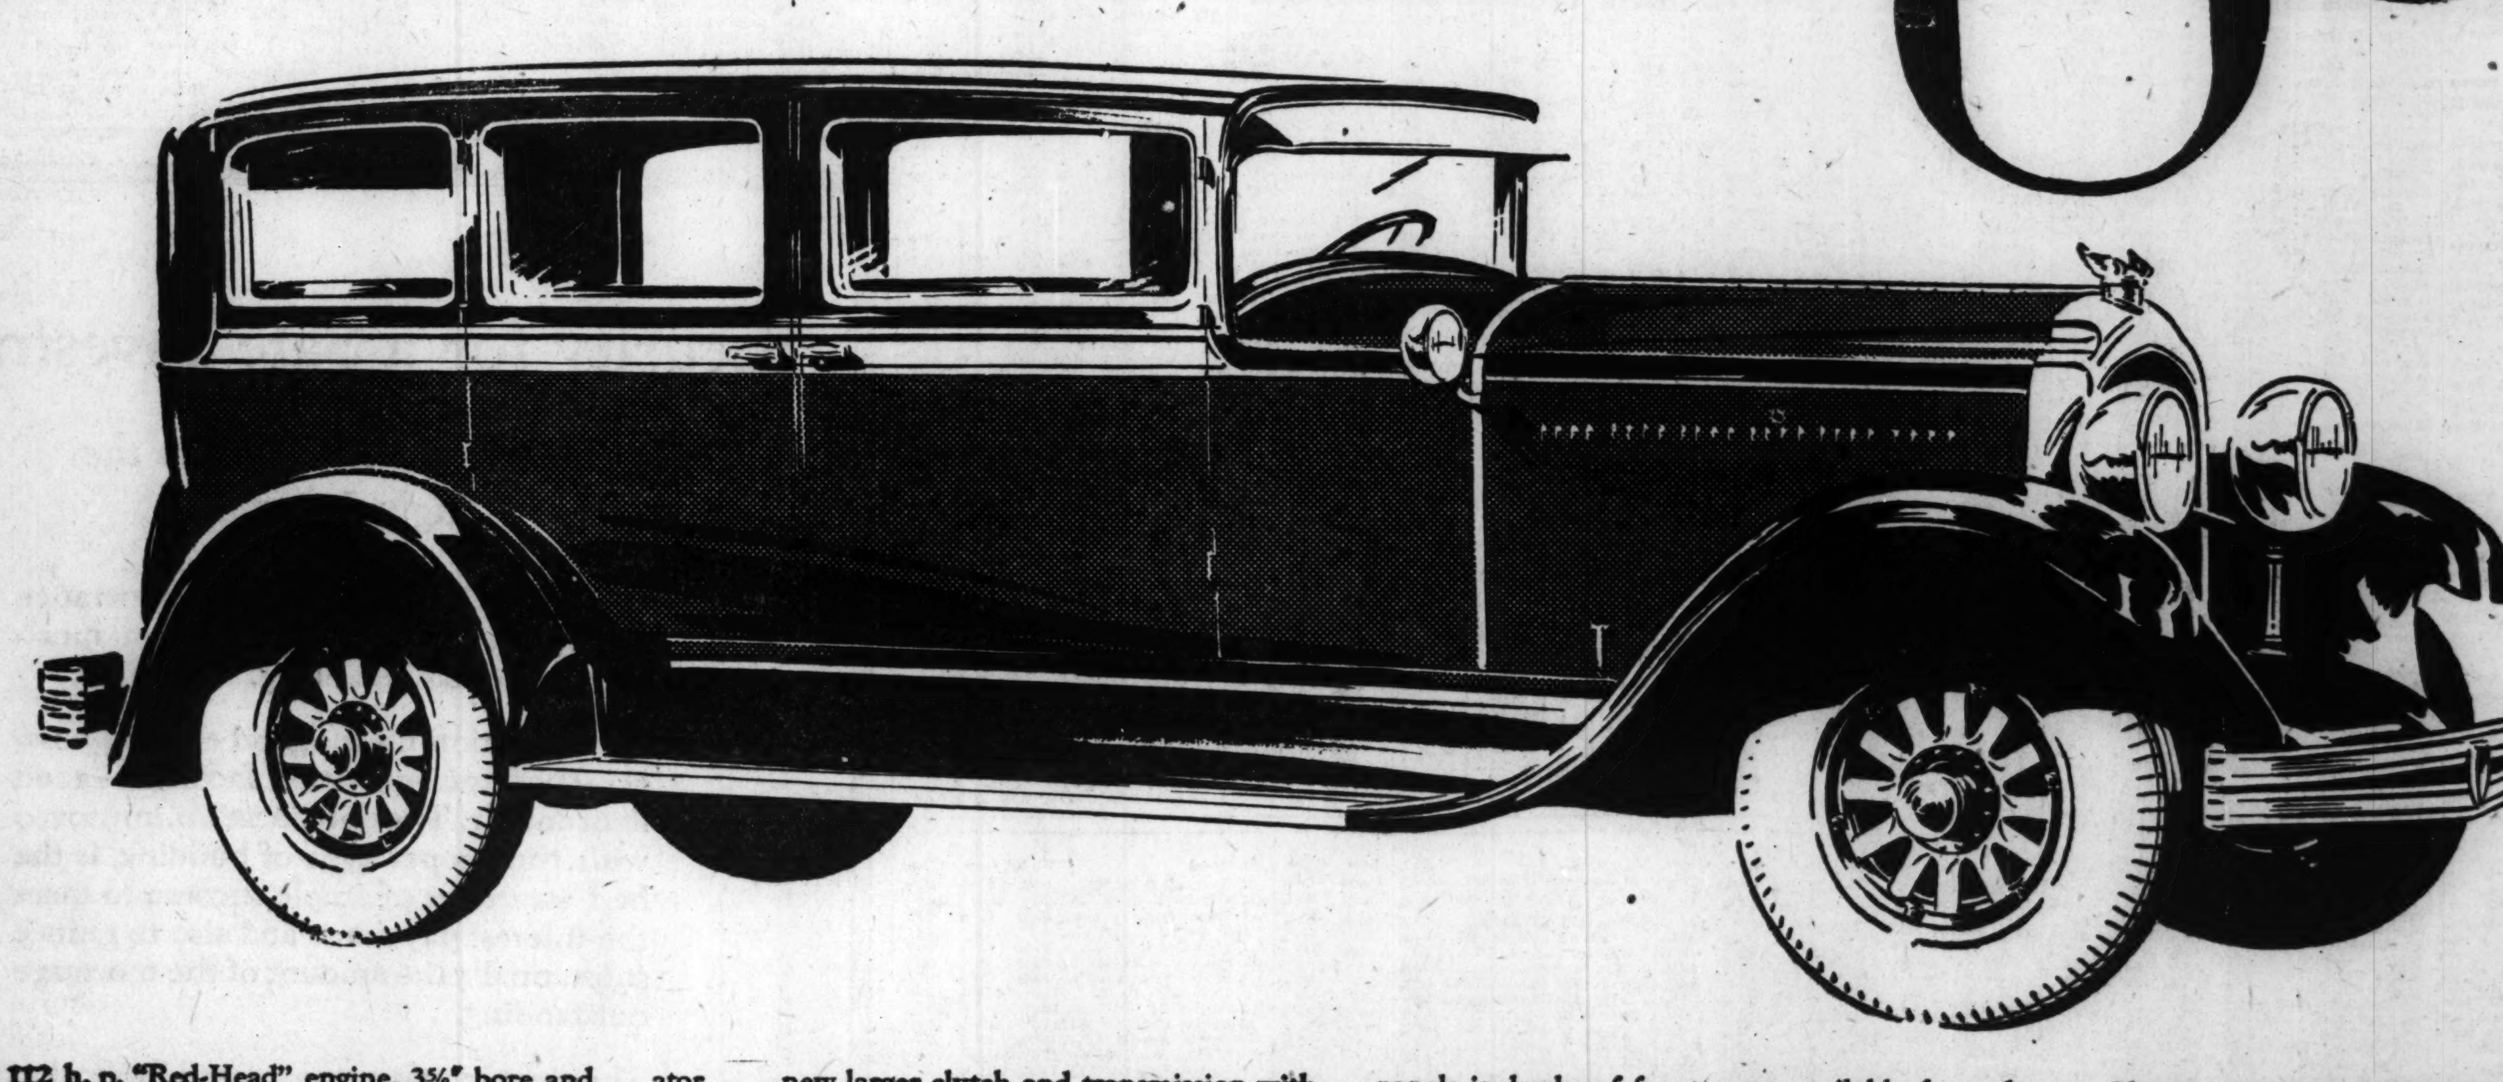
WALTER P. CHRYSLER and his engineers present what they believe to be the most notable car ever produced under Chrysler auspices—the new 112 h.p. Imperial "80," most powerful motor car of quantity production in America today.

This newest Chrysler emphasizes efficient simplicity in engine and chassis, the charm of simple good taste in body and lines.

The combination of the high compression "Red-Head" with the new and larger motor gives fully 20% greater power and torque. Increased length and width of the car, longer springs anchored in blocks of live rubber, and new rubber engine mountings front and rear, confer a luxurious quiet, softness and comfort of riding unlike anything ever experienced.

Leading designers in coach work have developed new and exclusive body styles. In their simplicity of design and correctness of good taste there is not even a hint of that over-ornamentation sometimes mistaken for smartness.

Custom bodies are built by Locke, LeBaron, Dietrich and by Chrysler in a special plant acquired and equipped solely to produce these fine examples of coach work.



New 112 h. p. "Red-Head" engine, 3⅝" bore and 5" stroke .... New design counterweighted crankshaft, new type impulse neutralizer, and new type rubber engine mountings for greater smoothness with increased power .... new Invar-Strut pistons with tungtite piston rings for higher compression .... new design crankcase ventilation .... new larger carburetor with new, specially designed manifold for greater power .... new larger radiator .... new larger clutch and transmission with new type rear axle to accommodate the vastly increased torque .... new longer rear springs. Springs anchored in blocks of live rubber .... new, internal expanding hydraulic 4-wheel brakes .... new bodies, longer, lower and wider, with narrow belt lines .... wide doors and narrow corner pillars for greater driving vision .... new adjustable front seat in sedan models .... new disappearing glass panels in backs of front seats, available for sedan models .... new design nickeled lamps .... new, improved type spark, throttle and headlight controls on new and larger steering wheel .... new, artistic indirectly-lighted instrument panel .... new ideas in body trim of broadcloth, Bedford cord, mohair and leather .... new and distinctive color blendings with fenders in Duco, and bumpers, radiators, trunk and tire covers to match body tones.

"Snow Maiden" Scores for Opera in English

By Edward Moore.

AFTER a good many experiments the Chicago Opera has apparently struck the right idea in English translation. "Snow Maiden" would seem to be on the way to establish itself in the same popularity it had when first sung here as a novelty in French the first season the opera company put the adjective, civic, into its title.

CHARLES MARSHALL
As Canio in "I Pagliacci" this afternoon.
[E. A. Atwell Photo.]

Musically and dramatically it is a fragile piece, depending for its interest on being understood and having a brisk performance. It is on its way in both matters. The performance becomes brighter as the participants become more used to the work, and the patrons in the audience through the medium of the artists' good singing are able to understand most, if not all of it.

That is all one can do in any language. No one gets all the Italian, or all the French, or all the German in operas given in those tongues, no matter how linguistic one may be. No more can be hoped from operas in English. It is enough to be able to keep abreast with the proceedings.

This is not a perfect translation by any means. There is too much "thou shouldst" and "give it me" and similar tags of literary gorgeousness to make it sound quite right. But closely as can be observed, it seems to be singable, at least by the highly competent cast now appearing in it.

Comedies Should Come First.

It confirms one point that this department has long maintained as a theory. This is that the comedies of the operatic répertoire are the ones to be translated first. Tragedies can usually take care of themselves. Their action is obvious enough for the actual words to make little difference. I want to see "Falstaff" added to the translated list. It has become standardized and popular in England where it is sung in English, and there is reason to believe that it would be popular here. "Gianni Schicchi" was sung in translation to great success in England not long ago, and it ought to be a knockout. And I should like, supposing a cast able to speak the words trippingly on the tongue, to hear some of the old comedies, "The Barber of Seville," "Don Pasquale," and a few others in English.

"Snow Maiden" is up again for Tuesday night, this time with Eide Norena instead of Edith Mason in the name part. "The Jewels of the Madonna," with Rosa Raisa singing Maliella, Forrest Lamont, Gennaro, and Giacomo Rimini, Rafaele, is announced for Wednesday, and "Linda di Chamounix" will have its dust shaken off on Saturday afternoon by Toti Dal Monte, Tito Schipa, Virgilio Lazzari, Vittorio Trevisan, and several others, but these will be done in Italian.

Opera in Chicago's Youth.

Russian opera translated into English is a far cry from the kind of opera that Chicago had in its first operatic days. The historian of the Civic Opera company has been digging into old records, and has produced some interesting material. Here is one of his installments:

"The city enjoyed opera as early as 1850," he says, "when, in midsummer—quite in the London fashion—a performance of 'La Sonnambula' was sung on July 30 at Rice's theater. The season which was to have followed upon this 'opening night' was by no means a lengthy one, such as the thirteen weeks of opera which Chicago now enjoys. But, short as it was, it was doomed to curtailment by the burning of the theater on the very next night after its premiere opera performance.

"It was not until three years later that opera was again sung here when, on Oct. 27, 1853, a two weeks season given in a newly built house costing 'the enormous sum of $11,000' was opened with 'Lucia di Lammermoor,' in which the young heroine of the Scott-Donizetti tragedy was impersonated by Rosa DeVries, mother of Herman DeVries, who has been prominent in Chicago musical life for many years and who is today dean of the corps of musical critics.

"Waiting until 1853 for its third opera season, Chicago was rewarded by a double fare. In the fall, the English opera company of New Orleans offered several bills in which, owing to the scarcity of the rare species, tenor rôles were sung by the obliging Miss Georgia Hodson. The operas sung included 'La Sonnambula,' 'The Daughter of the Regiment,' 'Crown Diamonds,' 'The Barber of Seville,' 'The Bohemian Girl,' 'Fra Diavolo,' 'Der Freischutz' and 'Il Trovatore.' Later Strakosch's company, which included the celebrated tenor, Brignoli, doubtless able to replace the entertaining Miss Hodson's fascinations, sang in opera here. The repertoire included, according to Karleton Hackett's 'The Beginning of Grand Opera in Chicago,' 'Lucrezia Borgia,' 'Traviata,' 'Lucia,' 'I Puritani,' 'Rigoletto,' 'Trovatore,' 'Martha,' 'Norma,' 'Sonnambula,' 'La Favorita' and 'Don Giovanni.'

During and After the Civil War.

"The civil war put an end to opera until 1862, when Carl Anschutz brought here a German company in which Jessie Bartlett Davis was a child wonder. The assassination of Lincoln caused the postponement of the opening of Crosby's opera house until April 20, 1866. The first opera given there—for the Auditorium was then twenty years in the future—was 'Il Trovatore,' with Clara Louise Kellogg and Brignoli in the cast. The season also made it possible for fashionable Chicagoans to hear such works as 'Poliuto,' 'Faust' and 'Ernani,' as well as others to which they had grown accustomed to awarding their kid gloved applause.

"Parepa Rosa came to Chicago in 1868, and with her was William Castle, who was later to become a director of the Chicago Musical college. In the famous conflagration of 1871 Chicago for a second time lost its opera house in the burning of Crosby's, the financing of which its astute owner reimbursed himself for, shortly after its opening, by raffling it off on so profitable a basis that he was able to buy it back from the winner of the stupendous gamble.

"Opera, indeed, hardly had achieved a glittering history in Chicago so far as its financial history was concerned. Yet in early days of 'hard money' the prices of best seats for this aristocratic form of entertainment were high, costing sometimes as much as five times the cost of an ordinary theater ticket. But those were the days when one might ordinarily sit on the main floor of a theater for 50 cents, and [illegible] per seat was a magnificent price for the privilege of taking a charming lady to attend the most brilliant form of entertainment, as opera even then was recognized to be."

The American Songbag.

Quite the most complete and most interesting collection of American songs so far is the one just put out by Carl Sandburg under the name of "The American Songbag." The 280 odd items represent a long period of collecting and distribution all over the United States. It comes from the [illegible] of Harcourt, Brace & Co., New York.

For Mr. Sandburg has ranged far afield. He has been to the Kentucky mountains and the Carolina mountains; he has taken down songs from "the big, brutal city," from jails, from the Mexican border, from the plains, from the army. He has songs of labor, ancient ballads, minstrel songs, prison memories, at least five versions of the tragedy of Frankie and her man, including her alias of Josie and Sadie; songs of the five wars, Negro songs, and a whole set of picnic and hayrack follies, close harmony, and darn fool ditties."

The Work of Years.

Any one who could sing a song was at once marked down and trailed by this indefatigable collector, and those who could not sing were interviewed for the name and address of some one who could. Robert M. Lee and Kate Webber

GOOD Morning!

Every so often there comes to the screen a film picturesque and romantic; flashingly vari-colored with young love, gallant deeds, patriotism and adventure; mellow and fragrant with the atmosphere of bygone days. "Rose of the Golden West" is one of these.

MARY ASTOR
is a lovely picture in "Rose of the Golden West."

The story is staged in the period when Spain ruled California—the time just before the west was transferred to American rule—when European feudalism was revived by the Spaniards. The action starts in 1846 and you discover patriots banding together to prevent Gen. Vallero, state's dictator, from selling out to Russia.

The handsome Juan, a brave young patriot of the day, is selected as the one best fitted for doing away with the unwanted general, and he is notified of his election.

A test of patriotism, indeed! For Juan has, at the time of his notification, just come from a tryst with the girl he loves, the charming Senorita Rosita of mysterious origin who, for years has been in charge of the good sisters in a nearby convent—and at this tryst it has been decided that Rosita and Juan shall elope that night and be married.

The lover gallops back to tell his fair lady they cannot wed until he shall fulfill his duty as a patriot. He must go to Monterey to perform his mission.

"If I do not come back in a few weeks," he says to her, "don't wait for me, my darling!"

A Sad Farewell.

Their parting is tear-washed and tenderly beautiful. Certainly no maiden of early days was lovelier in hoop skirts and mantilla than Mary Astor, and, equally certainly, never was there a more stunning gallant than Gilbert Roland makes in the romantic caballero costumes he wears. He was—don't you remember I told you once?—intended for the arena. Yes, he was to be a bull fighter—but the movies got him. I wasn't so sure whether it was a good thing in "Camille." This picture convinces me, however, that the cinema is to be congratulated.

To continuez:

Next morning there comes to see Rosita, none other than Gen. Vallero, who looks at her strangely and lovingly, and to whom she is greatly drawn. Something he says—his manner—causes her to ask eagerly: "Are you my father?"

He hesitates before replying, then tells her that he is her father's closest friend and has come to take her to Monterey.

Accompanied by a rigidly funny chaperon (Flora Finch) they start out—the two women in a stage coach, and Gen. Vallero and escorts accompanying them on horseback.

Suddenly a big old black bear ambles out into the road. The stage horses shy and run, getting beyond control. (Here you will be reminded of a couple of episodes in the last Tom Mix picture.)

Rescued by Juan.

They are stopped by—guess whom? None other, of course, than Juan, who is warmly thanked by Gen. Vallero (whom he doesn't know and therefore fails to recognize as the horrible example he is on his way to put under the sod).

The general urges him warmly to come and be thanked, also, by the fairest rose in California, who, he assures him, is at that moment palpitating in the coach, eagerly awaiting a glimpse of her rescuer.

But Juan says no thanks, he's in a hurry. The two pledge friendship. If you want to know how that was done it was by each taking a sip from a flask, and the grateful party then turning same upside down and letting the remaining contents run out. The general assures Juan that hereafter himself and all he has—even unto his life—are all at the disposal of the young hero. Juan rides away. The coach and escort also continue on their journey.

It's a Beautiful Production.

The picture has been richly produced and thoughtfully directed. It has much that will appeal to the beauty loving and is splendidly acted by a fine cast. Mary Astor, who appeared to have bobbed her hair in "No Place to Go," this time seems to have her own lovely crown back again. Wonder if she DIDN'T cut it, after all! She is a darling as Rosita. Her costumes of the day are gorgeous.

Gilbert Roland, as I said, I liked immensely—so much better than when he played Armand in "Camille." Montagu is a soldierly, humorous, likeable character as Vallero, and folks supporting are all well cast and able.

The action bubbles with intrigue and excitement. The scenery is magnificent. The press sheet says that many authentic locations are used in the picture and that four of the twenty-one missions built by the padres and the natives of western America more than 150 years ago, appear in the film. Also, says the press sheet:

"Gilbert Roland furnished many articles of his costume himself, despite the fact that the story is laid seventy-five years ago. Roland, of Spanish parentage, inherited many costumes from his father, who was a famous toreador of Seville, Spain, and many items among them which he had stored up in his attic were found to be in keeping with the Spanish costumes of California during the end of the Spanish domination."

(It reads well.)

In closing, I can say fearlessly to lovers of beauty and romance: "You will enjoy 'Rose of the Golden West.'"

Bits aBOUTem

PICTURES have been utilized in the legitimate play, "Her Mother's Wedding Gown," a Yiddish dramatic production by Max Gobel. In the second act, where there is a chase to make a steamship, it was found that the illusion of ground covered could be better put over by using the screen.

GLORIA SWANSON'S two picture contract with United Artists expires with "Sadie Thompson"—screen adaptation of "Rain." It may be renewed and then again it may not. If not the marquise may arrange for a series of pictures to be produced for Cecil De Mille.

* *

EDMUND LOWE is a star now. Three years he has been playing featured parts for Fox. Now cometh his reward for work well done. His first starring picture will be "Dressed to Kill."

See you tomorrow!

Debates

By H. L. Mencken.

UNLESS I am deceived by press agents, the old taste for joint debates is reviving in the United States, probably as a consequence of the open forum movement. Scarcely a week goes by that I am not invited to attend one in New York, with eminent rhetoricians in the two corners, and not infrequently I am asked to take part in one, or to preside over the ceremonies. I suspect that many of these debates are arranged by entrepreneurs who grab a Rickardian share of the gate money, but whatever their inspiration the fact remains that they seem to attract crowds. When a Clarence Darrow, a Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, or a Max Eastman is one of the gladiators, it is easy to pack the largest hall, especially on a Sunday afternoon.

Fortunately, I am under a bloody oath, made upon the evangels of Almighty God, to refrain from public speaking, and so the fear of hell saves me from taking part in any such debate, either as contestant or as referee. What keeps me from going as an auditor and spectator is not so binding, but quite as persuasive. It is the belief that public debates, as they are now conducted in the United States, are not debates at all, but simply speechmaking matches. First, the gentleman who has the affirmative orates for an hour, then the gentleman on the other side orates for an hour (or a half, or three-quarters), then the first gentleman is heard again briefly, and then the other gentleman closes.

This dull program is apparently borrowed from the coeducational colleges of the cow belt, where debating is a sport almost as popular as heifer judging or gin guzzling. Obviously, it makes any frank and honest exchange of ideas impossible. Neither contestant is permitted to interrupt the other, and so neither is bound to answer the other's arguments. All the speeches, indeed, are commonly prepared in advance, and sometimes they have scarcely any relation to one another. Each debater simply discharges his rhetoric, glowers at his opponent, and then goes home. The audience is left to put two and two together, and the judges to come to their decision as best they may. If the debate is in New York City they always decide in favor of that contestant who appears to be the wetter, no matter what the actual subject of discussion.

My proposal is that this highly formalized and undecisive scheme be abandoned in public debates hereafter, and that the scheme in use upon the floor of the United States senate be adopted in its place, of course with certain modifications. The essence of the senate plan is that it produces a genuine conflict of minds, and hence of ideas. Only too often, to be sure, those ideas are idiotic, but nevertheless they are ideas. In the midst of his most flowery periods a senator may be interrupted by another senator, and forced to give a rational account of himself. He may be asked questions. He may be corrected in misstatements. He may be frankly laughed at.

In other words, there is machinery for holding him to the subject of the debate, for subjecting his ideas to instantaneous analysis and refutation, and for exposing him when he attempts obfuscations or concealments. It is quite true that no one may interrupt him without his permission, and that he is not bound to give it, but if he withholds it his divagations and imbecilities become only the more manifest, and he loses the combat by his very fear of losing it. It is true, again, that there is ordinarily no time limit on his whooping and snuffling, but here again he can easily ruin himself by exercising his rights too freely. The jury is directly in front of him, and paying earnest heed to him. If it walks out on him, that is the plainest sign that he has lost.

I believe that this scheme could be adapted to the exigencies of public debate without any substantial change. Let the party of the first part have the floor for an hour—with the party of the second part. subject to the usual senate rules, free to interrupt him and call him to book. Then let the two change places. And then, at the end, let them stand up together and fight it out to a finish.

If public debates were conducted in this fashion instead of being simply series of set speeches, I'd be disposed to attend them—or, at all events, such of them as went on between men of any sense. For there is nothing more stimulating than the clash of two sharp and resourceful minds, just as there is nothing more depressing than mere oratory. Each contestant is inspired to do his best by the visible presence of the other, ready and eager to undo him, and by the certainty that any slip, however trivial, will be detected at once and turned to his disadvantage and dismay. He is on his toes from the beginning to the end, and if there is anything in his head it is bound to come out. But when even the best man makes a set speech, uncommoded by challenge, he becomes merely an actor, and hence an ass.

The common belief that debate in the senate is dull and dry is full of error, as I can testify who have read the Congressional Record for years. The proceedings there, to be sure, are dull and dry when such a windjammer as Senator Heflin of Alabama lets off one of his set pieces, for the other senators instantly clear out, and thus there is no debate. But when an actual debate is in progress, even though so feeble and platitudinous a fellow as Senator Smoot, the Mormon archangel, may be a party to it, there is plenty of drama, and hence plenty of interest. When the heavyweights get into action on opposite sides—say Senator Reed of Missouri and Senator Walsh of Montana—there is a show as exciting as any ever staged by Tex Rickard, and as brilliant as anything ever heard in Athens, all the pedants who teach Greek to the contrary notwithstanding.

It is seldom, in the senate, that a senator refuses to answer questions or to be interrupted otherwise, and so it is seldom that a debate degenerates to the bombastic imbecility of a sermon. Refusing to answer questions, I take it, is regarded there as bad form: a senator who does it always apologizes. Such a refusal, indeed, seldom avails to save him. His colleagues, on one pretext or another, quickly break down his guard, and if what he is uttering is balderdash—something that happens, alas, not infrequently—the fact is soon made manifest.

Debate, it seems to me, is one of the most useful of human inventions. It is the mother and father of all free inquiry and honest thought. It tests ideas, detects errors, and promotes clear thinking. A man cannot stand up before it without exposing his whole intellectual stock of goods. In such an arena as the senate, where free debate still prevails, despite the effort of Vice President Dawes and other such obscurantists to limit it, the fools are separated from the men of sense very quickly and with almost infallible precision. No one who has sat in the senate gallery for even so little as an hour can have any doubt that such a man as Senator Reed has a good head on him, and that such a man as Senator Fess has a muddled one.

Off the actual floor, and especially before popular audiences, the mere orators shine, but they seldom shine to any effect in the senate. The Hon. Jim Watson of Indiana may appear a powerful intellect to the morons of his native state when he harangues them from the stump, but in the senate his place is a lowly one, and he knows it. So with such orators of higher tone as the Hon. George Wharton Pepper of Pennsylvania. Before the Philadelphia courts he appeared to be a master mind, but once he had stood up before Senators Reed and Walsh his stature diminished to nothing.

There ought to be more debates in America, even if it is necessary to let men of enlightened self-interest run them for profit, as in New York. True enough, free debate is prohibited by the laws of certain states, notably Pennsylvania and California, but certainly not by the laws of all. Where it is permitted by the American Legion, the Ku Klux Klan, and the gendarmerie, let it go on! But let it be genuine debate, and not a mere series of ex parte harangues!

Classic Play Given the Reinhardt Touch

By Burns Mantle.

NEW YORK.—[Special Correspondence.]—Being naturally of a suspicious nature, particularly in the theater, I approached the Reinhardt production of "Midsummer Night's Dream" with a cheek full of tongue.

I knew the great German director could do amazing things with spectacles, give him the space and the money. I remembered "The Miracle." I knew he was quite the idol of middle Europe as a producer of startling, weird, and massive effects.

ROSAMOND PINCHOT
plays Helena in "Midsummer Night's Dream."

But why should I believe that he or any other heavy-fisted Teuton could take a Shakespeare fantasy and bring it to life in such fashion as to satisfy an English speaking audience containing a few playgoers at least who knew their Shakespeare?

And yet that is what Reinhardt does. I imagine the translation of "The Dream" into German is pretty terrible. Certainly more funny sounds come out of the text than the great Elizabethan ever wrote into it. Without understanding the language the poetry is gone and you might think without its poetry there is precious little left to "Midsummer Night's Dream."

But what Reinhardt does is to dramatize its external beauties and beautify externally its poetic spirit.

Settings Are All Shakespeare Could Desire.

The setting, for instance, suggests all that Shakespeare could have dreamed for it. The fairies, dwarfed by what appear to be the high, moss-hung walls of the glade in which they romp, become reasonably fairylike in appearance and behavior.

The chase of Helena and Demetrius after Lysander and Hermia becomes a chase in fact, if not uphill and down dale, at least uphill and down toward Broadway and down dale and up toward Eighth avenue. The Century stage takes on new dimensions as Reinhardt has built it up and lighted it.

For instance, there is a straight rise from the edge of the orchestra pit back thirty feet or more. A broken flight of steps, moss green under forest lights, stone brown when the palace set is needed, are in the center. The stairs break into platform terraces here and there. At the sides are ramps, up and down which fairies and mortals both leap and scamper on occasion.

Scenes Show Real Genius.

At the play's beginning Theseus and Hippolyta, preceded by a dozen candle bearers, enter from the orchestra pit. There are high pillars surrounding the scene, and a bench or two give the effect of a palace carved out of the Grecian wilderness.

When the scene is changed to a glade the lights are briefly masked, moss hung walls are silently drawn around the pillars, two huge trees appear at the top of the little hill, and suddenly a limitless sky is studded with stars.

As simply again, when there is need of "a room in Quince's house" for the meeting of the clowning countrymen, the floor of the glade is lifted, fan shaped, and there is the room, with Snug the joiner, Bottom the weaver, and the others entering puffily from below stairs to prepare for their play.

When the fairies are afoot they are preceded by misty curtains of smoke that seep up through the earth and cover their entrance, and, when Titania sleeps, her fairies, bearing leafy branches, artfully screen her presence and their own from the flustered mortals.

When the fairies disappear they seem to burrow their way into the earth in a half dozen rabbit hutches under the stairs and ramps. A bounding Puck appears and disappears, leaps up the stairs, and rolls down them with startling unexpectedness.

"The Miracle," staged in a remade cathedral at the Century, was so impressive a picture none who saw it will soon forget it. "Midsummer Night's Dream" is quite as impressive in a smaller way and twice as ingenious and interesting.

But from the reading of the play we get little. The acting of the German players is naturally limited to the play's demands. Alexander Moissi, for example, has no chance as Oberon to prove that he is, in fact, Europe's greatest actor, the "John Barrymore of Berlin," as they call him.

The Women Are Lovely to Look Upon.

The women of the company are lovely to look upon. Rosamond Pinchot, the tall niece of the Pennsylvania Pinchots, is the Helena. From a chance meeting with the Reinhardts on the steamer that brought them first to America for "The Miracle" she has risen to such prominence as appearance at the Salzburg festival and a regular position in the Reinhardt company give her. How good her German is I do not know, but she acts modestly and well and is a beautiful picture.

Lilli Darvas, the current Mrs. Franz Molnar, is the Titania, and also beautiful, and Marie Solveg, the leading ingénue, is a Hermit of spirit and marked charm.

Wladimir Sokoloff, a small Russian, gnomelike, athletic, and of exceptional talent, is the Puck, and a large, boyish, barrel German comedian, Otto Wallburg, gets much out of Bottom. It is more Reinhardt than Shakespeare, this revival, but an impressive exhibit for all that. The Reinhardts are here for a month and will do a repertory of five or six plays.

Billie Burke in Noel Coward's New Play.

Billie Burke, coming down from Hastings-on-Hudson and the maternal care of young Patricia Ziegfeld to renew her contact with the drama, is playing the heroine of "The Marquise" in three or four rich and handsome eighteenth century costumes.

The costumes are more important than the play, in fact, for all it was written by Noel Coward. And the Burke beauty is its chief charm. She is amazingly like her own daughter might be if she had a daughter of 18. Once she is a vision in brocades, and again a vision in pink. But always a vision.

Her part is that of a ravishing lady come after 16 years to see the father of her child and the daughter she bore him out of wedlock, as the papers say.

She finds the girl, Adrienne, about to marry Miguel, and. of all things, she soon discovers that this cannot be, seeing that Miguel represents another little indiscretion of hers. Three years before she met Adrienne's father she had known his best friend, who was Miguel's father. You know how those things happen in French comedies. And yet her intentions were always of the very best.

It happens, fortunately, that the young people do not really want to marry, not being the least bit in love. So the Marquise fixes everything as it should be, marries the father of Adrienne, and becomes an honest woman.

Nicely staged, carefully cast, with Arthur Byron playing Adrienne's father and Reginald Owen the sire of Miguel, and they also costumed gorgeously from designs by Ben Ali Haggin, I still have little hope for "The Marquise." And again the competition is much too strong in this capital.

The Winter Garden Show.

The new Winter Garden show is a fresh issue of the "Artists and Models" series, a big, garish, spottily handsome, spottily nude, spottily rough music hall entertainment, that has set at least one section of the town cheering.

Not much nakedness in it, but enough to satisfy. The entertainment, as usual, is mostly up to the entertainers. Florence Moore is the mamma of these, and Florence is an amiable lady clown, full of funny sayings, and a great help

This Thing and That Thing of the Theater

By Frederick Donaghey.

THAT he will revive Congreve's "The Way of the World" is stated by the senior William A. Brady, who hasn't been especially active in recent seasons. He adds that he will have three woman stars in the cast; and he doesn't say who they are. The comedy is current fare in London, with Miss Edith Evans and Godfrey Tearle at the head of the cast. A New-York revival in one of the up-an-alley theaters was made two years ago. . . . I should be put to it to lay out a cast capable of acting Congreve from among the native actors now available;—and by "available" I don't mean to confine myself to American actors who happen to be out of employment. The Restoration plays, like the Regency plays, call for a special style; and actors here get no training nowadays in that style. It is a style that, somehow, comes with facility to players reared in England.

ROBERT WARWICK
He's among Mrs. Insull's actors in "Heartbreak House."

And, with respect to players reared in England, they are doing fairly well now—in this country. They seemed, as I recently looked over the plays in Manhattan, to be in possession of most of the important jobs there. Leslie Howard headed a cast wellnigh wholly English in "Escape." Basil Rathbone, Henry Stephenson, Miss Violet Kemble-Copper, and Ferdinand Gottschalk were in "The Command to Love." Basil Sydney had his name in lights as a star in the ready-made-clothes version of "The Taming of the Shrew." Reginald Owen was one of Miss Billie Burke's two leading-men in "The Marquise." O. P. Heggie and other English players were hired to help Miss Pauline Lord in "Spellbound." Eric Blore and H. Reeves-Smith were in "Just Fancy!" A. E. Matthews, Arthur Wontner, Charles Dalton, and Arthur Lewis were among the British players of "Interference." Robinson Newbold had the rôle designed by George M. Cohan to be of most importance in "The Merry Malones." Richard Bird and other Londoners had been imported for "The Fanatics." Another imported cast was in "Dracula." Miss Constance Collier had been brought from London for "John." Wallace Eddinger was the only American hired for "And So to Bed." Lionel Atwill was making ready to perform in "The King Can Do No Wrong!" Philip Merivale had a star's type and a star's lights in "Hidden." Miss Katharine Cornell had a hand-picked cast of English players in "The Letter";—and I cheerfully add that she had done some bad picking! Lyn Harding was hired for "Out of the Sea," by the native Don Marquis. . . . There were English performers in "The Mikado," in "The Trial of Mary Dugan," and in about everything else save "Porgy" and "In Abraham's Bosom," both of which were performed by Negroes.

Another Letter About the Princess Theater.

> SIR: This isn't to argue about "Saturday's Children," which is all you say it is, and something we should all go to see; nor about the location of the Princess Theater, which I, as you, regard as highly advantageous for ninety percent of playgoers. But I think you stacked the cards when, the other day, you ran a list of plays that had been immensely successful there. Isn't it reasonable to think that their success, regardless of the theater, was due to the fact that all of them were brought here after well-advertised New-York runs, and with the original New-York casts, and not with what you euphemistically term "Chicago casts"?
> JOHN L. KLEINE.
> Chicago: November 24, 1927.

Hardly, Mr. Kleine. Two plays I listed, "The Deep Purple" and "Grounds for Divorce," had not been given in New-York when shown in the Princess. I'm not certain as to "The Ruined Lady": I was out of the country at the time. Neither "Bought and Paid For" nor "Bunty Pulls the Strings" was given here by the actors used in New-York. "The Bat" had a "Chicago cast." . . . And none of the listed plays first shown in New-York had at the time been through so many weeks there as "Saturday's Children"; and that good piece had, save for a change that certainly was not detrimental, the cast used there forty weeks.

A Letter About Gentlemen and the Like.

> SIR: I took the liberty some months ago of coming here to attend to business of my own, leaving you to attend to your column about the drama. Owing to my having stuck to my habit of reading it, however, I've had difficulty in restraining myself from trying again to help you out. Your observations of November 13 regarding the settlement of the ticket-brokers problem here compels me to break through all restraint, and set you utterly right. I've been here since August, you see, so that I know.
> Well, the matter of the brokers' charging merely a fifty-cent premium on all tickets was a gentlemen's agreement between them and the United States District-Attorney here, Mr. Tuttle. You admit that ticket-brokers are not imbeciles. You'll hardly argue against me when I say they are not gentlemen—not even when, as in Chicago, they are ladies. The question of whether a United States District-Attorney may be a gentleman is open: myself, I am suspicious when they meddle with liquor and theater-tickets. But, giving Mr. Tuttle the benefit of the doubt, it stands to reason that the ticket-brokers simply couldn't keep the agreement, not being gentlemen. Not being imbeciles, they didn't even try.
> What's true here is, of course, true in Chicago. Ergo, why the lunatic intervals in which the authorities there solemnly make agreements with them? . . . I trust you're duly grateful.
> GABBY LA BRUNE.

Miscellany.

Of the new things last week in Manhattan, "The Doctor's Dilemma" and "Funny-Face" appear to be successes; "The Racket" may grow into one: "People Don't Do Such Things!" is reported a failure; and the "notices" for "Take the Air!" wherein an attempt is made to make a star of Will Mahoney, are tepid. . . . "The King Can Do No Wrong!" was thrown away last night, adding another to the list of failures with Lionel Atwill in them.

Max Reinhardt, whose American venture with "A Mid-Summer Night's Dream" is said to cost $31,000 weekly, is to follow it half-way through this week with "Everyman." . . . Otto Kahn is writing the deficit-cheques for Reinhardt.

The Theater Guild is to stage O'Neill's "Marco Millions" early in January, with Mr. Lunt, but not with Miss Fontanne, who, it is thought, may soon thereafter be put into Rolland's "The Game of Love and Death," given last season in the Goodman Memorial.

Mr. Ziegfeld is said to have outdone himself with "Show-Boat": the accounts I get are so chaotic with sheer ecstasy that I find it rather difficult to learn from them just what it is all about. . . . And 'tis told by Jed Harris that he is shutting down two "Broadway" troupes because the small-town inhabitants don't buy tickets, although the play is prosperous in all the larger places.

The man who backs "The Ladder" in New-York, after losing what is said to be $700,000, is now letting the public in for nothing; but attendance continues to be slim.

Snow Maiden Scores for Opera in English

By Edward Moore.

of THE TRIBUNE staff are among the contributors. Having acquired them, Mr. Sandburg then assembled a staff of some fifteen arrangers to construct accompaniments. Edward Collins, Ruth Porter Crawford, Alfred G. Walthall, Leo Sowerby, Charles Farwell Edson, Arthur Farwell, Henry Joslyn, and Thorvald Otterström are a few of these. It has been the work of years, and Mr. Sandburg admits that he would like to have taken ten or twenty or thirty more in the preparation.

But as it stands it is an important work, containing many songs that we all know and a lot that most of us never heard of. Some, as in every collection of music of the people, are almost unbelievably primitive, but others are not. The first song of the book, "He's Gone Away," in Mr. Sowerby's arrangement has a note of lonesome, wistful pathos that it would be hard to equal by the most expert technician of the art song composers.

It would seem to be a variant of an old-time ballad, with a recurring line, "But he's comin' back if he goes ten thousand miles." There is a similar idea in several other emigrant ballads from Great Britain, and it makes one wonder whether when Robert Burns wrote "My Love Is Like a Red, Red Rose" he was not indebted to some ballad of his own time.

Importations.

Imported folk songs make a curious study in evolution. Some in this book are obviously of the same parentage as certain other British ballads, but transplantation has many times changed them greatly. There is a version of "Barbara Allen" here, for instance, with the words somewhat altered and the tune bearing not the slightest resemblance to the accredited "Barbara Allen" from England.

Probably much of the alteration comes from lapse of memory in transmission. Thus "The Pretty Girl Milking Her Cow" is only half as long as the original tune in "The American Songbag," and the refrain of the grand old "Turkey in the Straw" has its rhythm badly messed up. One wishes, by the way, that it had been possible to include more old fiddlers' tunes, though there are quite a number transferred into songs. Incidentally, the accompaniments are the best I have ever seen in such a collection.

Importations, native American, grave and gay, sentimental and slightly ribald, there are specimens of all kinds, though Mr. Sandburg has found it necessary to Bowdlerize to some extent. Toward the end there is an army song from the Philippines which carries the life of "A Filipino Hombre" in a lively cachuca:

There once was a Filipino hombre
Who ate rice pescado y legumbre.
His trousers were wide, and his shirt hung outside,
And this, I may say, was custombre.

It runs to a joyous and somewhat Rabelaisian end:

When his pueblo last had a fiesta,
His family tried to digest a
Mule that had died of glanders inside—
And now his familia no esta.

With the Melody Makers.

Fernand Ansseau and Vanni-Marcoux are now on the ocean, headed in this direction. Their first appearances of the season will be as members of the cast in Mary Garden's first appearance, not yet named, but announced to take place during the next fortnight. She is in New York making some records, and will sing one or two concerts before coming here. It is also being told that Kathryn Meisle, formerly a member of the Chicago Opera, will rejoin the company after the first of the year to sing Azucena in "Il Trovatore" and Amneris in "Aïda."

In telling the plans of the International Society for Contemporary Music a week ago, the name of Adolph Brune was inadvertently omitted from the music committee. The society plans to present some recent works by Szymanowski, Honegger, and Carpenter at an informal audition in December, thus carrying out its intention of offering music by living composers who have already won recognition as well as digging up the unknowns.

Claire Dux, Arthur Dunham and the Gordon String quartet will present the musical program at the memorial concert in honor of the late Fannie Bloomfield Zeisler, which was announced last week. It will take place at Orchestra hall Thursday, Dec. 8, at 4 o'clock.

Welsh folk songs dating back to the thirteenth century will be heard when the Chicago Welsh Male choir appears in concert at Orchestra hall Thursday evening under the conductorship of Dr. Daniel Protheroe, with Gwylim Jones as assisting artist. So far as is known, none of these songs has ever been sung in public in the United States. Among the ditties over which members of the choir have been straining their vocal muscles during the last few weeks for the concert are "Yr Hen Wr Mwyn," "Dacw, Dacw Fuwch," "Y Mynach Du," and "Cadlef Cymru."

Maurice Maréchal, one of the fine cellists of the world, will be the soloist with the Chicago Symphony orchestra on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. He will play the Boccherini Concerto in B flat and Caplet's "Epiphanie." Mr. Stock promises the Bax Symphony, the incidental music and funeral march from Elgar's "Grania and Diarmid," and Glazounow's Second Waltz.

ANOTHER OF THOSE SPANIARDS

MISS HELBA HUARA

THERE'S been no real let-up in the supply of Spanish dancers since the long-ago nights of Carmencita; and it is a fair assumption that they wouldn't come here if they weren't wanted. Most of them, it seems to the writer of these words, have been mainly castanet-soloists. 'Tis said of Miss Huara (whose name might be Japanese) that she's real, and that she gets a great deal of what used to be termed pash into her exhibition. . . . We shall see: she's in "A Night in Spain."

"The Plough and the Stars," by O'Casey, with Miss Sara Allgood, Maire O'Neill, Arthur Sinclair, others who, when under the man agement of the Abbey-Street Theater of were known in this country Irish players. . . . It is hard necessary to identify O'Casey as author of "Juno and the Paycock."

THEY'RE IN THE WEEK'S NEW SHOWS

MISS MARION HARRIS

MISS GENEVIEVE TOBIN

MISS HARRIS is, first of all, a celebrity of the discs: the commercial gentlemen who are interested in the sales of reproducing devices long since put her high on the list of singers whose records are in demand by the general public. . . . She has been heard here in the two-a-day; she was in the New-York performances of "Yours Truly" with Leon Errol, but did not come to Chicago in that show; and she is to take part, starting tomorrow night, in "A Night in Spain," in the Four Cohans.

Miss Tobin was here just a little more than a year ago in the principal feminine part of a bad piece named "Treat 'Em Rough!" She is easily remembered by many Chicago theatergoers for her appearances in "Little Old New-York," although they date back more than five years. Later, she was here in something named "Polly Preferred." . . . And Miss Tobin is again of Chicago interest because she is to be seen tonight, in the Princess, in "Murray Hill."

Chicago's Stage of Other Years

TEN YEARS AGO

(From The Sunday Tribune of Dec. 2, 1917):

FRIDAY'S performance of "Oh, Boy," at Camp Grant was the fiftieth participated in this season by members of the local musicians' union without cost for their services. In the east the managers have had much trouble with the theatrical unions—that of the musicians in particular—which have declined to aid in military performances unless they were paid.

The show business is in dire straits, and although showmen, much less than other merchants, have endeavored to profiteer, their misery evokes few kind words from the public. Lee Shubert blames the newspapers for a share in making the theater an obsolete industry.

"There is a slump in the theatrical business," he says, "and it is due to the false issues that have been raised in Washington and in our daily newspapers. While there is need for the conservation of food, coal, and other supplies, there is no reason why legitimate industries should be paralyzed.

"The theatrical enterprise represents capital and without capital the nation would be in a sorry plight. It is capital which supports the Liberty loans, and capital contributes to charities and other patriotic movements. Capital supports labor and gives employment to the nation's workers. If the industries representing capital are crippled the government will soon feel their loss.

"The theaters give employment to thousands of men and women, assist in raising the country's war loans, and they should have the public's support."

William Faversham looks with no delight on future theatrical conditions outside New York, and he will therefore confine his and Miss Maxine Elliott's appearance in "Lord and Lady Algy" to Broadway.

Arthur Lewis, who played the judge in Barrie's "The Legend of Leonora" with Miss Maude Adams, has been engaged by the Frohman company to act with Miss Ethel Barrymore in "The Lady of the Camellias." Miss Adams' engagement at the Blackstone in "A Kiss for Cinderella" will begin on Christmas eve, the date of the Follies' advent at the Illinois.

Suspecting that the venerable "Camille" may not be as supple in the joints as once it was, Miss Barrymore is having it attended to. Edward Sheldon is the competent masseur.

Three prairie authors will have their works performed tomorrow night in New York by the Washington Square players. The bill will contain "The Girl in the Coffin," by Theodore Dreiser; "Neighbors," by Miss Zona Gale, and Samuel Kaplan's paradox, "The Critic's Comedy."

"Now that William H. Currie is manager of the Garrick theater in Chicago," says Rennold Wolf in the Morning Telegraph, "he has become a regular Chicagoan, shaving the back of his neck and everything."

That the frolics of the chorus in "The Passing Show" may be brought more intimately to the attention of the audiences, a runway will be put into the Garrick tomorrow.

20 YEARS AGO

(From The Sunday Tribune of Nov. 24, 1907):

"Marta of the Lowlands," a translation from the Spanish of Angel Guimera, is the play in which Mme. Bertha Kalich will open her third Chicago engagement at the Grand Opera house tomorrow evening. The drama had its first American production some years ago at the Manhattan theater, New York, with Miss Corona Riccardo and afterward Miss Fernanda Eliscu in the rôle of Marta. Neither actress was happily cast in the difficult rôle and since then Mr. Fiske has kept the matter in abeyance, awaiting the time when Mme. Kalich could be put forward in the play.

"A Poor Relation," the character comedy which Edward E. Kidder wrote for the late Sol Smith Russell, will be revived by the stock company at the College theater tomorrow night. It ranked among Mr. Russell's greatest successes, and the character of Noah Vale was the most lovable in his gallery of portraits.

The Thanksgiving week bill at the Bush Temple theater is the T. W. Robertson comedy, "Caste," which for a long time has been popular with stock companies and amateur organizations.

"McFadden's Flats," old and familiar yet ever new and entertaining, will be offered the patrons of the Columbia this week. This season's production is said to be new and it is vouched that naught of the original remains save the title, the "yellow kids," McFadden, the pig and the goat.

"Young Buffalo, King of the Wild West," a border melodrama teeming with wild thrills and sensations, is the attraction for the week at the Alhambra. In portraying the title rôle Young Buffalo lives again scenes in his own life. A party of Sioux Indians, a cowboy brass band, and a capable company will attend.

Mrs. Patrick Campbell in a repertoire of famous plays, including "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray," "The Notorious Mrs. Ebbsmith," "Magda," "Hedda Gabler," and possibly "The Sorceress," will be among the January attractions at the Garrick, following the engagement of Henry Miller and Miss Margaret Anglin in "The Great Divide."

Prodigies Gain Gotham Laurels

By Alfred Frankenstein.

NEW YORK, Nov. 26.—[Special Correspondence.]—Prodigies hit the trail for New York. We have had three such in the last week. All are violinists. All are of the race that seems to produce most of the violinists. Curiously, only one is named Mischa.

Estimates of the age of Yehudi Menuhin run from 18 months to 12 years. He looks to be about 10. He played the Beethoven Concerto with the New York Symphony orchestra and walked off with all the laurels there are. Before the performance there were some, including the writer, who proclaimed that the Beethoven is, above all, the violin concerto requiring a mature artist to play it. Now, at least, one of these proclaimers says that none but mature artists and Yehudi Menuhin should tackle it.

It is incredible and impossible that this fat baby [he is scarcely anything more] should stand on a stage and play a monumental piece of music with the technical precision and musicianship that many five times his age lack. Thoughts of Svengali flit through one's mind. But the kid laughs and has a great time. Playing the Beethoven Concerto seems to be no more effort and as much fun to him as pulling Herr Busch's coat tails. Not that he did pull Herr Busch's coat tails but I think he would have liked to.

Two Artists Win Praise.

Leopold Auer made his first public appearance in a dozen years when he conducted the Philharmonic orchestra in a concert especially designed to show off the talents of Auer's latest genius, Benno Rabinof, aged 21.

To say, in concert hall slang, that Rabinof has a lot of technique is to state the obvious. What distinguishes him is a distinctive tone, and qualities of personal charm rare in debutants. He managed, on the strength of that ingratiating quality alone, to put something even into the Elgar Concerto.

Mischa Weisbord blew into town unknown and blew out again with a lot of adoring press notices. Weisbord is a speed demon, a musical quick change artist, a person whose fingers do anything and everything, now you see 'em and now you don't. I trust that if he appears in Chicago he will have learned that halls are not jammed by another performance of the Mendelssohn Concerto, no matter by whom performed.

Baritone Acclaimed.

To return to the news. Heinrich Schlusnus, the new baritone of the Chicago Civic Opera company, made his New York debut singing a program of songs set to texts of Heine. The writer was unable to attend, but a more competent critic, Olin Downes, wrote:

"He has a manly and resonant voice, well controlled and capable of dramatic expression. He understands and conceives the beauty of a melodic line and also understands its relation to a text."

There was a lot more in the same vein and echoing laudation everywhere.

WRITES 'EM

FERENC MOLNAR

He's the author of "The Swan," "The Guardsman," "Liliom," "The Devil," and the piece we know as "The Play's the Thing!" Also, of some plays known here not at all. A good example of his especial gift for being mischievous in comedy is "The Play's the Thing!"

Music Notes

John McCormack's request program at the Auditorium this evening, when the Irish tenor will bid farewell to Chicago for a year, discloses a wide variety of tastes and, on the whole, a surprising degree of musical good judgment. Save for the portion contributed by the assisting artist, Lauri Kennedy, cellist, the selections were chosen by the public at large through the medium of mail suggestions. A wide range of composers is represented, reaching from Handel to James Rogers and Dana Burnett, Cleveland newspaper writers, who as a team contributed words and music for what McCormack himself terms the best songs to emerge from the war. It is the last number on the bill—"When Pershing's Men Go Marching Into Picardy"—and is popular with McCormack because of the absence of any element of rancor calculated to give offense in any direction.

William Boeppler will celebrate his fortieth anniversary as a conductor in a concert at Medinah temple next Sunday afternoon, and a resumé of his history shows much activity during that period. He was born in Pferdsfeld, Germany, Feb. 21, 1863; educated at the Universities of Leipzig and Bonn, and conducted his first chorus, the Evangelical church choir, in 1887, at Crefeld, Germany, near Cologne. He came to America in 1894, settled in Milwaukee, and in 1895 organized the A Cappella chorus of that city, besides going back to Germany to be married.

In 1899 he founded the Wisconsin Conservatory of Music and in 1902 the Milwaukee Symphony orchestra, giving up the latter two years later when he came to Chicago. In Chicago his assignments are thus summarized: Nineteen hundred and four, director of the Germania club and Turner Maennerchor; 1910, organized the Chicago Singverein and directed the First National Bank chorus [discontinued during the war]; 1925, became director of the Bethany church choir and the Chicago Bach chorus. He is an honorary member of the Berlin Tone Artists' society and the only American conductor who is a member of the Beethoven House society in Bonn.

Word is relayed that a pleasant musical event is taking place these Saturday and Sunday evenings at the new German theater, Sheffield and Belmont avenues. It is "Hannerl," a sequel to "Blossom Time," and, like its predecessor, with a score drawn from Schubert's music. It is laid twenty years after Schubert's death, with the characters of "Blossom Time" appearing, and even the vision of Schubert himself in one of the episodes. A company of thirty is presenting it.

Classic Play Given Reinhardt Touch

By Burns Mantle.

to all the sketches that first get rough and then rougher.

In one of these Florence, serving as nurse in a surgeon's office, insistently divests Jack Osterman of his trousers before she discovers that he has not called to see the doctor professionally. He had come to get a renewal of his magazine subscription. A new version of an old yarn, but the Winter Gardeners don't care.

It is Florence, too, who tells the one about the loyal tad who stood patiently at the corner of Fifth avenue and 42d street for hours because he refused to cross with the pedestrians. He was waiting for the traffic cop to call the Catholics.

Ted Lewis is present, high hat, squealing clarinet, and a joke or two; Osterman sings of the street called Broadway, the greatest little old street in the little old world, or rhymes to that general effect. Jack Pearl revives the German dialect that turned Jewish with the war, and there are a couple of boys who dance as King and King, who held up the program for several minutes.

Movie Moth Singes Film Writers

By Rosalind Shaffer

HOLLYWOOD, Cal.—[Special Correspondence.]—Lurid tales of the moths and the candle in Hollywood are as numerous as they always have been since it was first the film capital. No one suspected that the casualties existed outside the circle of film celebrities, however.

Now the candle seems to have developed a by-product—not such a gorgeous type as the moth, but more surprising. The last year has seen the collapse or the attempted suicide of five young women film writers, all of them affected by the vicissitudes or contacts of the industry.

The writers' colony had been invaded by sensational divorces as well. One writer, at least, has been mentioned as co-respondent in a case. Another made startling charges against her husband and shortly after divorcing him had her name coupled with that of a well know male star.

Early spring brought the attempted suicide by gas of a fan writer who had been without work due to the merger of several magazines on which she had been employed. Another suffered from a series of nervous breakdowns and bodily ailments caused by a combination of overwork and dieting to get a figure like the film stars.

Succumb to Depression.

A third is still ill with nervous breakdown due to financial difficulties, irregular work, and trying night hours spent gathering material and attending necessary social functions in the colony.

A fourth contracted tuberculosis caused by overwork and irregular hours, with consequent lack of sleep and neglected meals. A fifth attempted suicide, due to being out of work. Being mentioned by a former film star who was suing her director husband for divorce may have helped create the mental depressions that led to the attempted suicide of case number five.

A survey of the situation shows the difficulties to be, briefly, that writers on film subjects are subject to large expense in keeping a wardrobe and in doing occasional entertaining necessary to their association with the enormously higher paid film folk.

While of generally good background and education, the girl writers of Hollywood often find themselves unable to cope mentally with the vast economic difference between their condition and that of less educated but more successful screen personages. They become infected with the same divorce virus as the film stars, develop temperaments and expensive tastes and the "partying around" habit.

Those who blossom into fiction writers can afford these things, but the rank and file of fan writers find it an exacting task to do enough work to make a living without working to the point of overtaxing their strength.

Still another member of the famous Florodora sextette is playing as an extra in pictures. She is Kitty Howard, who replaced one of the very first six, who gradually dropped out to be replaced by still others who make the endless chain of girls who were in "The Original Sextette." Kitty Howard made the tour to England with the original company.

Charlie's Film a Riot.

A pre-view of Charles Chaplin's new comedy, "The Circus," was held this week and judging from the reaction of the audience, which applauded wildly for five minutes by the clock following the fadeout, it is a picture which is apt to excite more popular approval than "The Gold Rush." There are fewer tedious moments of pathos that Chaplin is wont to consider "art" and Charlie's laughs are more consistent through the picture.

The story harks back to the earlier Chaplin tales like "A Dog's Life," "Sunnyside" and others. Sticking to the familiar characterization, Charlie appears as a tramp down and out and cadging a hot dog from an urchin at a street stand.

While trying to escape the police for having stolen goods on him placed there by a hard pressed pickpocket, Charlie stumbles into a circus. Here he balls up the gags of the different performers while seeking shelter from the police.

His scene when he becomes a member of the troupe and learns tight rope walking in a harness meant to keep him from falling, and then loses his harness, is the big laugh of the picture.

Merna Kennedy is not as much of a sensation as had been anticipated about Hollywood. Her name in the picture is always Merna. Chaplin did the same with Georgia Hale in "The Gold Rush."

Judging from the rapidity with which the picture has been completed it must have been nearly finished at the time Chaplin ceased work and removed to New York at the time of his divorce troubles. Charlie, himself, was present at the pre-view, looking somewhat disheveled and quite gray. Merna Kennedy was also present with James Hall.

Up in the Air.

Having just been divorced by his wife, Reginald Denny has found still another way to go up in the air. He has bought three Snipes biplanes from the British air forces and they are now being assembled at the local airport at Angeles Mesa. They will develop 238 horse power and are for use in forthcoming pictures. They are said to be the only three Snipes not owned by the British air ministry.

More aeronautics are going on at United Artists, where they are making "Hell's Angels," with Ben Lyon. A walkout occurred among the hired pilots when they saw the samples of obsolete planes to be flown in war sequences. The movie daredevils took a look at the very planes that had seen service in France in the English, German and French flying corps and refused to take the "flying coffins" off the ground. So several single-seater pursuit and bombing ships are now waiting a hand to guide them.

The Paramount studios are turning out another version of an air thriller. The famous "War Birds" diary published in Liberty certainly started something in films.

After Paramount got through with "Wings," it cast around for another air picture and after letting Wallace Beery and Raymond Hatton do their bit in "Now We're in the Aair," the "Legion of the Condemned" was started. It boasts Lieut. Rudolph Schad, who was with Manfred von Richthofen's staff as pilot and technician in war days.

D. W. Tells One.

D. W. Griffith told one on himself recently. Some one was razzing him about his stentorian voice that seemed to reach above the tumult pervading the set.

"Yes, my father was called Roaring Jake Griffith in the Kentucky cavalry service of the confederate army," said D. W. "He had a voice that went over the din of artillery bombardments, so they say."

This Gen. Griffith was in charge of a cavalry regiment that escorted Jefferson Davis from Richmond at the fall of the confederacy.

George Fawcett, veteran stage and screen actor, is playing the rôle of a Russian czarist officer in John Barrymore's new picture, "The Tempest." Fawcett has a background quite unlike that of most actors of his generation. Born of an old Virginia family, he was graduated from the University of Virginia a year before Woodrow Wilson went there to study law. Family funds failing at the death of his father, George took to the stage. In that era being an actor was declasse. Few actors of his generation were gentlemen of education and family.

Causing a Flurry.

The recent publication, in the California Jewish Voice of an interview with Rudolph Schildkraut proved a sensation in Hollywood. Schildkraut, who was somewhat censured by rabbis and other members of the race for his part in "The King of Kings" in which he portrayed the scheming Caiaphas, answered his critics, according to the interview in the Jewish Voice, by stating that moving pictures and what was in them were not sufficiently important to get excited about.

Placing films "on a par with cheap dime novels," he was quoted as stating that an actor neither thought nor acted, but merely did physical work at the behest of his director.

Funds received from his work in "The King of Kings," Schildkraut was quoted as saying he turned over to his Yiddish art theater in New York.

On being interrogated about the matter, Schildkraut denied he had uttered such sentiments or that they reperesented his opinion. He claimed to have been approached by a person with a written interview which he was invited to sign. Thinking it harmless, after a brief exchange of comment, he signed it and this, he believes, is the foundation for the published interview.

F. W. Murnau, German director, who produced "Sunrise," for Fox films last year, is back in his Hollywood office after his sojourn abroad and is busy preparing for "The Four Devils," adapted from the novel by Herman Bang, a Dane. Part of Director Murnau's troubles concern the search for two girls with perfect figures in classic proportion, for rôles in the picture. Over one hundred tests have been made to date.

ARMS AND LEGS

MISS CHARLOTTE GREENWOOD

She's the big girl with the four long limbs who, after nine seasons in the two-a-day, had the town laughing at her in 1919 in "So Long, Letty!" Miss Greenwood has been back many times since then: she was in the second issue of the Music-Box Revue, in the only issue of Hazzard Short's Revue, and in the varieties. She's headlining this week in the Palace.

My Greatest Thrill

Write and tell us about the greatest thrill you ever experienced, and if we print your letter we'll pay you $1. Make your letters short and snappy. Address them to "Greatest Thrill" Editor, The Chicago Tribune.

A Terrible Scare.

I got a thrill—my greatest one—when I was a child of 12.

It happened in the summer. It was warm and the folks had all gone to bed, myself included. I slept alone and I can remember the bright moonlight streaming in at the window, which was open.

I had just dozed off to sleep when a noise at the door attracted by attention. Looking towards it, imagine my feelings to see a ghostly apparition slowly advancing. My heart almost stopped beating and with the cold perspiration standing out on my forehead, I watched the thing approach until it almost reached my bed.

Then a ghostly hand reached out towards me and my throat loosened. Scream after scream I uttered, and the next thing I remembered the family gathered about the bedside. I finally managed to gasp out what had made me scream.

Mother tried to quiet me and told me that it was just my sister who wanted to play a little joke on me. She had to come to my room to get another pillow and the bright thought occurred to her to throw a sheet over herself and the bright moonlight did the rest.

However, the "scare" was complete. I was all but hysterical and didn't sleep any more that night.

Taken for a Flapper.

I was attending a reception given for our new professor and one of the teachers said, "Who is that young lady over there? I cannot place her in my class room."

"Why, that is Dick's mother, not a pupil," was the reply.

When I was told of it I really felt thrilled as I am 49 and to be taken for a high school flapper is enough to please any one my age.

Moved Just in Time.

One evening as I lay in my hammock I noticed a storm approaching. At the first sprinkle I took the hammock down and laid it on the porch. The rain stopped, so I decided to stay outdoors a little longer. The wind started to blow and gathered up clouds of dust, which soon filled the air. The wind was so strong that I ran around to the sheltered side of the house. The wind increased to a gale, and then suddenly stopped. I returned to the porch.

Glancing where my hammock had been hung, I saw a large tree that had been blow over exactly where I had lain. The big trunk was directly between the two trees that the hammock had been suspended on.

Some thrill. Well—yes. C. G. A.

HARRY K. MORTON

He's a hard-working fellow when he sets out to evoke laughter. He caught Chicago's fancy years ago in something named "The Sweetheart-Shop." He has since been here in "In the Springtime of Love" and "The Lady in Ermine"; and he's in "Countess Maritza."

The Cheekiest Person I Ever Knew

Send us a short, to the point reminiscence of cheekiest person you ever met, and we'll pay you $1 for it if we print it. All letters must be addressed to the Cheekiest Person Editor, The Tribune, Chicago.

Clever Comeback.

The cheekiest person I ever met is a neighbor, Mrs. C. B. She has the habit of borrowing eggs instead of buying them. I always buy the best grade, and Mrs. C. B. knew that, so when she needed any eggs she would come and borrow some from me, and would return the cheapest grade of eggs she could possibly buy.

I saved the cheap eggs she returned, and the next time she came I gave her the cheap ones. The next day, when she returned the eggs she had borrowed, she asked me if I didn't buy the best kind of eggs any more. I told her I had given her the eggs she returned last time.

She walked out, and has not come back to borrow anything more.

M. L. S.

One Ruined Iron.

One morning, while trying to put my house in order, a neighbor came in and asked if I would let her take my flatiron.

I handed her my new shiny electric iron, thinking that, of course, she would do the right thing by it.

Days later I had to go for my iron, and imagine my surprise and disgust when she stuck a ruined iron in my hand.

When I asked her how it happened she just told me that electricity was so expensive she had heated it on her hot coals!

O. S.

Getting It Wrapped.

I am cashier for an express company and into our office one day walked a man with a large package which he asked if we would please wrap and tie up for him.

Of course my boss wrapped it and tied it nicely, and when he started to write him a receipt for same, the man picked the package up and started out with it, whereupon my boss asked him if he weren't going to ship it, and he said, "No, I just wanted it wrapped. I'm going to ship it parcel post," and did not even offer to pay for the wrapping.

That is what I call about the most cheek I ever saw.

SHE SINGS

CLAIRE DUX.

She does not make as many public appearances as she used to before she was Mrs. Charles H. Swift, but occasionally there is a chance to hear the lovely art of her soprano voice. One of these infrequent occurrences will take place on Thursday morning at the Blackstone hotel.

One Person's Comment

Dear Miss Tinée: May I say that I find it much more enjoyable to read screen or dramatic criticism when it is written in a popular style, like yours in THE TRIBUNE than to flounder through a heavy rhetorical style. But don't you think you are overdoing it a little? Your cheery "Good morning!" at the head of your column and your sweet, "See you tomorrow," at the end, really don't improve the review for me, either.

J. W. P.

Editor's Note: One never can tell!

Real Entertainment.

Dear Mae: I hied myself over to be entertained by "The Patent Leather Kid" and "entertained" I was. As a film, it sure is a knockout. And maybe Dick Barthelmess doesn't knock 'em out. The picture is like one of George M. Cohan's musical comedy shows—opens with a bang and closes with a coupla bangs.

The acting of Dick Barthelmess and Mollie O'Day was well nigh perfect—like a bottle of champagne [try'n get it], plenty of "kick," or "punch," or whatever you want to call it. The scene in the Red Cross station hospital behind the lines, where Mollie suddenly recognizes her jilted sweetheart, was one of the finest ever depicted on the screen.

We need more pictures portraying the type of acting in "The Patent Leather Kid." It runs a close second to "The Big Parade" and "What Price Glory."

Sincerely yours, S. C. R.

A Few Words About Many Films.

Dear Mae: I have just seen "The Heart of Maryland." It was a wonderful picture. As you said in your review, "We clapped uproaringly for the blues." And we sure did, Mae! At least, I did. I think Dolores Costello is one of the loveliest actresses I've ever seen.

I also have just seen "When a Man Loves." I shall remember it forever! I never can praise it enough! I thought "Soft Cushions" was darling. Sue Carol is cute, isn't she? I didn't care for "Resurrection." It was too sad and dreary. I like something happy. I'll admit, though, that the acting was superb.

Wasn't "The Unknown" horrible? Haven't as yet seen "Madam Pompadour," but am going to Antonio Mareno, who is my present favorite actor. He is too darling for words! Alice Terry is my favorite actress.

O yes, I mustn't leave out "The Big Parade." A glorious picture! Why wouldn't it be with John Gilbert and Renie Adorée in the cast? See you tomorrow.

The Wrong Shoulder.

We, my husband and I, were just married and were traveling from Chicago to Fort Wayne. Being drowsy, I thought to relax for a moment by laying my head on the back of the car seat. My husband, wishing to add to my comfort, folded his scarf and placed it under my head. This had the effect of causing me to fall into a sound sleep.

My husband, seeing me resting comfortably, embraced the opportunity to go into the smoker to indulge in a cigar. At a country station a husky countryman came into the car and seeing only a single vacant seat, he quietly took his place at my side. Thinking my husband had returned, I turned and placed my head upon my companion's shoulder.

In a moment the tittering of some young people in a nearby seat fully aroused me to the awfulness of the situation.

Of course I was profuse in my apologies, but the good natured farmer just smiled broadly and said, "It's all right. I didn't keer."

CHAIN PROGRAMS FOR RURAL FANS OPEN TOMORROW

Live Stock Show Will Be Broadcast.

The man with the hoe—a large part of the 51,000,000 rural population of the United States—will have his innings in a nation-wide broadcasting service to be inaugurated by the National Broadcasting company from Chicago tomorrow, according to an announcement by Merlin Hall Aylesworth, president of the company. For the first time an event of primary interest to the American agricultural community will be broadcast through a large network of stations to the principal farm areas of the United States.

It marks the entry of the N. B. C., according to Mr. Aylesworth, into a field of special service to the American farmer, when great agricultural events will be broadcast in the same manner as national events are now.

Daily Broadcasts.

The special broadcasting service will begin with the opening tomorrow of the International Live Stock exposition and will take place daily from 1 to 2 p. m., central time, until Saturday.

Following this occasion, the N. B. C. will broadcast another event of great importance to the agricultural community of the United States. This will be the annual convention of the American Farm Bureau federation on Dec. 7, one of the largest farm organizations in the world, with a total membership of over one million. The convention will be featured by an address by Gen. John J. Pershing, to be delivered on that date and to be broadcast from 10 to 11 a. m., central time.

The International Live Stock exposition this year will offer an unusual panorama of farm life activity in the United States. Displays of breeding and fat live stock, crops, meats, government and state exhibits, and boys' and girls' club products will be features of the exposition, while a brilliant horse show will occupy the arena every night except Sunday. Meetings of farm organizations and sales of pure bred live stock will be held daily.

Foreign Experts to Talk.

Every department of the exposition, including the junior activities, will find a place in the daily program to be broadcast. In addition to the awards of the judging in all classes, the various leaders of the agricultural world will be presented to the radio audience by means of the microphone. Leading public figures, including Secretary Jardine of the department of agriculture and Vice President Dawes, will attend the exposition.

Two outstanding judges of foreign countries also will officiate at the exposition this year, Walter Biggar of Dalbeattie, Scotland, and Arnold Caddy of Chandpara, Tylden, Victoria, Australia. Both men will be introduced to the radio audience.

RADIO INTEREST INCREASING IN SOVIET RUSSIA

Washington, D. C., Nov. 26.—[Special.]—Radio fans are multiplying so rapidly in the Soviet union that the government is steadily expanding its effort to keep up with the demand for receiving sets, according to a report from the central statistical administration to the Soviet Union Information bureau here. The number of receiving sets in use has now reached 200,000, as compared with 116,000 on Feb. 1, last, and 30,000 at the beginning of 1926.

Forty-seven radio stations now broadcast daily programs in Russia, where there was only one in 1924 and nine in 1925. A dozen new stations are being built. There is now a broadcasting station in every large city. Moscow has four stations, Leningrad two, and Kharkov, the capital of the Ukraine, has two.

PUREST ENGLISH IS CLAIM MADE FOR COAST MAN

Francis Sullivan, who appears weekly at KFI in Los Angeles for a short literary chat, has the reputation of speaking the purest English on the air. He first came to the notice of KFI officials with brilliant and witty letters summing up announcers' mistakes in diction and grammar. When he insisted that during a football game an announcer use "peenalized" instead of the usual form of the word he was requested to come out in the open and fight like a man, and his Saturday evening chats are the result.

To End Severe Cough Quickly, Try This

For real results, this old home-made remedy beats them all. Easily prepared.

You'll never know how quickly a bad cough can be conquered, until you try this famous home-made remedy. The immediate relief given is almost like magic. It is easily prepared, and there is nothing better for coughs.

Into a pint bottle, put 2½ ounces of Pinex; then add plain granulated sugar syrup to make a full pint. Or you can use clarified honey, instead of sugar syrup. Either way, the full pint saves about two-thirds of the money usually spent for cough preparations, and gives you a more positive, effective remedy. It keeps perfectly, and tastes pleasant—children like it.

You can feel this take hold instantly, soothing and healing the membranes in all the air passages. It promptly loosens a dry, tight cough, and soon you will notice the phlegm thin out and disappear. A day's use will usually break up an ordinary throat or chest cold, and it is also splendid for bronchitis, hoarseness, and bronchial asthma.

Pinex is a most valuable concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract and palatable guaiacol, the most reliable remedy for throat and chest ailments.

To avoid disappointment, ask your druggist for "2½ ounces of Pinex" with directions. Guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction or money promptly refunded. The Pinex Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

PINEX for Coughs

WEEKLY RADIO LESSON FROM W-G-N

THE fifth of a series of twenty radio auction bridge games will be broadcast from W-G-N Tuesday, Nov. 29, at 9 p. m.

Each game of the series features Milton C. Work and Wilbur C. Whitehead, New York experts, in association with players from other cities in America and Canada. The listeners-in are urged to have four players ready with cards and to follow the game bid by bid and play by play with the experts.

The contestants in the fifth game are Mrs. Catherine A. Streeter of Los Angeles, Cal., paired with Mr. Work, and Miss Annie B. Shelby of Portland, Ore., who is Mr. Whitehead's partner. Following are the advance hands for game five, a summary of which will be printed in The Chicago Tribune next Sunday:

Mr. Work.
Spades: A, Q, 10
Hearts: Q, 10, 7, 6
Diamonds: A, Q, 6
Clubs: K, 8 spot, 5

Miss Shelby.
Spades: K, J, 8 spot, 7, 2
Hearts: 5, 4, 3
Diamonds: 7, 4, 3
Clubs: 3, 2

N.
W. E.
S.

Mr. Whitehead.
Spades: 9, 4
Hearts: K, J, 8 spot, 2
Diamonds: K, J, 10, 9
Clubs: A, Q, 4

Mrs. Streeter [the dealer].
Spades: 6, 5, 3
Hearts: A, 9
Diamonds: 8 spot, 5, 2
Clubs: J, 10, 9, 7, 6

The proper use of the informatory double, that stumbling block for so many bridge players, was exemplified in the radio bridge game broadcast on Tuesday from station W-G-N. These were the players and their cards:

Wilbur C. Whitehead, dealer, south: spades, Q, 8, 3; hearts, 8, 6; diamonds, 7, 6, 2; clubs, 10, 9, 7, 4, 2.

C. J. McDiarmid of Cincinnati, O., west: spades, J, 5; hearts, J, 9, 4, 3; diamonds, Q, 10, 8, 5, 3; clubs, J, 5.

Eugene R. Buss, Cincinnati, north: spades, A, 10, 9, 7; hearts, Q, 7, 5, 2; diamonds, K, 9; clubs, A, Q, 3.

Mr. Work, east: spades, K, 6, 4, 2; hearts, A, K, 10; diamonds, A, J, 4; clubs, K, 8, 6.

Mr. Whitehead and Mr. McDiarmid passed. Mr. Buss, north, with three suits surely stopped and the fourth probably stopped, held high card strength that justified his third hand bid of one no trump.

Mr. Work, east, doubled informatorily. His hand possessed every requisite for such double—that is, he could support any bid his partner might make, or, if his partner's hand was strong enough for a business pass, Mr. Work was prepared to do more than this share toward setting the no trump contract.

Mr. Whitehead again passed. His holding was worthless, and he feared penalties if his partner got the bid.

Mr. McDiarmid, however, relieved the situation by bidding two hearts, properly responding to his partner's double with his four card major suit rather than his five card minor. The point that this bidding illustrates is that a sound informatory double of a no trump must be read by doubler's partner as an attempt to arrive at a game declaration, a major suit preferred, even if one of but four cards. Failing a major suit, partner may then respond with two no trumps if holding average distributed values, or may leave the double in if holding better than average values. No obligation is placed upon the partner to take out an informatory double, except with a weak or worthless hand. A strength leave in, in other words a business pass, is quite common amongst advanced players.

Mr. Buss could not go on with his no trump bid with declared strength on his left, especially since he had four hearts to the queen, giving him hope of saving game. Mr. Work and Mr. Whitehead also passed, making Mr. McDiarmid the declarer with his contract two hearts.

Mr. Buss led his ace of spades. Although usually an ace should be reserved, if practicable, to capture higher cards than will fall upon it if it be led, still, with four or more trumps, an opening lead from the longest suit always is in order, and if the longest suit is headed by the ace the ace should be led.

Mr. Work spread his cards for the dummy hand and declarer played from it the 2 of spades. Mr. Whitehead played the 8 as an encouraging card or signal. With the king exposed in dummy, Mr. Whitehead's queen would be good on the third round, if not trumped, hence Mr. Whitehead signaled as an indication that a continuance of that suit would be advisable. Such a signal always is made, when not trying to win a trick, by playing a card that is not the lowest held in the suit. Mr. McDiarmid played the 5 of spades.

Mr. Buss continued with the 7 of spades; dummy played the king; Mr. Whitehead the 3, a card lower than his previous play, thus completing his "come-on" signal; declarer played the jack.

At this point declarer stopped to consider his best line of play. He was confident that every unknown high card except the queen of spades was in Mr. Buss' hand, because Mr. Buss had opened the bidding with a third hand no trump, for which a conservative player requires at least three suits stopped and an ace better than average strength; or, to put it in another way, a hand that counts 14 upon the basis of reckoning an ace 4, king 3, queen 2, jack 1. This would give Mr. Buss the queen of hearts, king of diamonds and ace-queen of clubs, in addition to the ace of spades shown on the first trick. It was not likely that he held the queen of spades, as he would not have opened spades from an ace-queen tenance.

Declarer was short in trumps, but his diamonds looked attractive. To make the best use of them, however, he had to finesse through Mr. Buss' king, for which he had first to enter his own hand. He could not enter his own hand, without losing a trick, except by trumping a spade. This would reduce his own trumps to three, the same length as dummy's, with the probability that the six adverse trumps were divided 4-2. If this were the case they could not be drawn so that the establishment of the diamond suit would be of little advantage. However, declarer felt he had to try to capture the king of diamonds, after which he would use his remaining hearts for ruffing, if possible, instead of leading trumps.

Going ahead on this basis, declarer led dummy's 4 of spades; Mr. Whitehead played the queen; declarer trumped with the 3 of hearts; Mr. Buss played the 9 of spades.

Declarer led the queen of diamonds; Mr. Buss played the king; dummy the ace; Mr. Whitehead the 2. Declarer next led dummy's high diamond, the jack, lest the immediate lead of a spade for ruffing should enable Mr. Whitehead to discard a diamond, perhaps his only remaining card of the suit. Mr. Whitehead played the 6 of diamonds, declarer the 3, Mr. Buss the 9.

Dummy then led the 6 of spades; Mr. Whitehead discarded the 7 of diamonds; Mr. McDiarmid trumped with the 4 of hearts; Mr. Buss played the 10 of spades.

Declarer then led the 5 of clubs, expecting to ruff the third round. Mr. Buss played the 3; dummy the king; Mr. Whitehead the 2. Dummy returned the 6 of clubs; Mr. Whitehead played the 4; declarer the jack; Mr. Buss the queen.

Mr. Buss then made a clever move. He led a trump, the 2 of hearts, to stop one ruff at least. Declarer played the ace from dummy, not risking a finesse because, if it were unsuccessful, he would be unable to ruff dummy's remaining club; and also because an adversary must eventually lead another trump and the finesse could be taken then if necessary. Mr. Whitehead played the 6 of hearts; declarer the 9.

Dummy led his last club, the 8; Mr. Whitehead played the 7; declarer trumped with the jack of hearts; Mr. Buss, north, played the ace of clubs.

Mr. McDiarmid next led the 10 of diamonds; Mr. Buss trumped with the 5 of hearts, dummy played the 4 of diamonds; Mr. Whitehead discarded the 9 of clubs.

Mr. Buss led the 7 of hearts, dummy finessed the 10; Mr. Whitehead played the 8; declarer discarded the 5 of diamonds. Dummy's king of hearts of course won the last trick, giving declarer four-odd—game at hearts—with 32 points for tricks and 40 for four honors divided.

The most interesting point in the play was the way in which declarer manipulated the cards in his closed hand so as to go game with a comparatively weak holding. Occasionally an informatory double produces a declarer with weak trumps; in such case, as proved by this hand, it often is advisable to reverse the rule against forcing the long hand, and use the long trumps for ruffing before dummy's high trumps are led.

ENGLAND AND U. S. TO EXPERIMENT ON SHORT WAVES

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

London, Nov. 26.—Capt. Eckersley, chief engineer of the British Broadcasting company, who has just returned from the United States, where he attended the international radio conference in Washington, announced that the primary object of erecting the new short wave length station, 5SW, at Chelmsford is for the purpose of coöperative experimental work between England and America.

The station was put up, said Capt. Eckersley, at the suggestion of Dr. Alfred N. Goldsmith, the American radio engineer, who recently told Capt. Eckersley that he had a new idea in short wave reception and that he would be glad if the British Broadcasting company would so far coöperate with him as to transmit special programs on short waves. Hence the inauguration of the new B. B. C. short wave station which will work on a wave length of 24 meters with a power of 20 kilowatts under the call sign 5SW.

Experiments with short wave relay work have been going on more or less continuously with America for four years, but the problem of fading is still so great that no engineer at present can give even a minimum guarantee of successful reception.

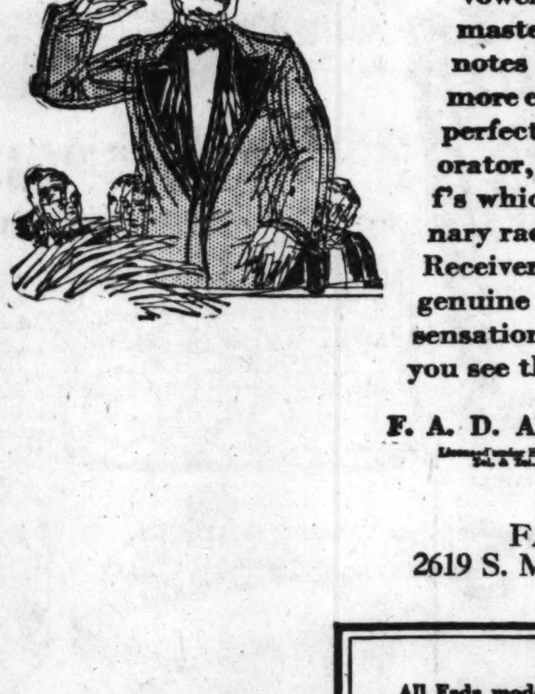
FADA
Radio

The old-time resemblance



A slow motion picture enables you to appreciate better the technique of a good tennis player. A speech, being slower than music, emphasizes in detail the fine points of Fada Harmonated Reception. Hear a good speech over Fada and you will be amazed at the cameo clearness of every syllable, the sharp, sibilant s's, the full, firm f's, the crisp consonants, the resonant vowels. Fada Harmonated Reception masters not only all the fundamental notes of the musical scale, but also the more elusive overtones. And it reproduces perfectly not only the broad vowels of the orator, but also the more difficult s's and f's which are the stumbling block of ordinary radio. But remember that only a Fada Receiver with a Fada Speaker gives you genuine Harmonated Reception. Hear this sensational betterment of radio wherever you see the Fada Dealer sign.

ALL JAPAN HIT BY RADIO CRAZE; HAS SLUMP NOW

Japan has been going through somewhat the same sort of radio reaction that occurred in this country just after the initial radio "boom." R. C. Ackerman, a radio expert, has brought home a first hand and accurate picture of the situation from the land of the cherry blossoms and from other far eastern countries just visited in his trip to the other side of the world.

"The Japanese are very enthusiastic in their likes and dislikes," he said, "and when radio struck the empire some two or three years ago, they all went for it so hard that it resembled a land boom. The present result of this is that Japan is very much overstocked with radio apparatus. Certain other business conditions are temporarily holding Japan to a condition that does not make for exceedingly great radio enthusiasm at this time."

SHORT WAVES

A recent notification of the British Indian customs provides that component parts of apparatus for wireless telegraphs are subject to an import duty of 2½ per cent ad valorem when imported into British India under existing regulations, instead of 15 per cent ad valorem as formerly.

The federal radio commission has called a general public hearing to consider applications for licenses submitted by concerns and individuals in the United States who desire to communicate on short waves. This rearing will be held at 2 o'clock Tuesday afternoon, Jan. 10, 1928, in the Commerce building at Washington.

STATE HOSPITAL OF NEBRASKA TO HAVE HUGE SET

As a result of the recent installation ordered by the directors of the state hospital at Norfolk, Neb., the patients of that institution will now be able to enjoy radio entertainment of every kind. It is hoped that the music and reports of important events, in addition to occupying the attention of the patients, will actually prove to be a valuable aid toward the recovery of curable cases.

Some difficulty was encountered during the installation. The Norfolk state hospital comprises thirteen separate buildings, all of which are connected by means of underground tunnels. These passages were used to carry the loud speaker wires from a master set to the various buildings. Thirty some speakers have been connected in this manner to the receiver and more will be employed as the hospital increases in size.

MODERN ELECTRIC DEVICES CAUSE OF RADIO ILLS

99 Out of 100 Can Be Easily Corrected.

In its recently published treatise on homemade static the Radio Manufacturers' association lists for investigation virtually all the electrical devices known to man, from addressing machines to X-ray installations—a formidable array. One does not realize how large a part electricity plays in the modern home until he checks with this list and discovers the hitherto unnoticed presence of an annunciator system, furnace or ice box control, motor pumps, waffle irons, curling irons, electric heaters, warming pads, fans, washing machines, and so on.

A leak in any of these devices, whether resulting from broken insulation or a bad contact, may result in spark production with a consequent broadcasting of high frequency waves. In isolated homes these defects would be of small consequence, but in cities where buildings containing hundreds of flats are placed closely together, one such disturbance may ruin radio reception for an entire community.

Violet Ray Heard a Block.

It was discovered in one case investigated by the engineers conducting the survey that a violet ray machine was audible for more than a block. Similarly, a break in a trolley system caused noise for a mile along a street car company right of way.

But while serious disturbances were traced to a number of causes hitherto unsuspected and the troubles of radio ascribed to so many sources that they seemed inevitable and irremediable, it was also discovered that in 99 cases out of 100 the cures are simple, effective, and easily applied.

The violet ray machine, for instance, may be tamed if a quarter microfarad condenser is connected across its spark gap. The ancient offender, the sign flasher, is capable of similar treatment. Elevator controls and thermostats on furnaces and ice boxes—which a year ago were suffered almost without protest—have proved to be easily gagged. In all such cases the remedy is to connect a by-pass condenser across the contactors. These condensers are fairly small in the case of devices requiring minute currents. They run to several microfarads in the case of elevator controls; but they are silencers that function instantly and unfailingly.

By-Passing House Current.

There has been some talk recently of by-passing house lighting systems at the point where the power lines emerge from the meters, thus confining all disturbances from electrical apparatus to the flat in which the noise is propagated. This, the engineers point out, is no doubt effective. Such a by-pass would tend to prevent radiation of high frequency currents into the power lines and thus preserve the good nature of the community. However, its application is debatable.

A large condenser across the power lines will cause a constant drain of current which may be detected without instruments in the monthly light bill. Also it will have to be of such a size that its purchase will constitute a problem.

All in all, it seems best that the radio listener take a little time off and trace down the individual noise makers in his own home and throttle them with suitable gags.

The R. M. A. Manual on Interference is obtainable at Radio Manufacturers association, Inc., 32 West Randolph street, Chicago, which is distributing it at cost in the itnerest of a quieter winter.

AMERICA NEEDS A LANGUAGE FOR OVERSEAS TESTS

The language problem is now facing the American broadcast impresarios who plan to begin an international exchange of programs before Jan. 1. Dr. A. N. Goldsmith, supervisor of the work on this side of the sea, says that Esperanto or bilingual announcements will probably be necessary.

It is pointed out that the station at Zagreb, Jugo-Slavia, makes announcements in Slav, German, Italian, Greek and Croatian while Stamboul, which is 1,500 miles from London, announces in Turkish and French, but the station signs off with the Turkish national anthem and "Good night" in Turkish, English, French and German.

IN JOINT PROGRAM TONIGHT

EDITHA FLEISCHER.

ALEXANDER BRAILOWSKY.

Two famous European artists will present the Atwater Kent hour tonight—Editha Fleischer, soprano of the Metropolitan Opera company, and Alexander Brailowsky, concert pianist. The program will be broadcast by W-G-N, THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE station on the Drake hotel.

Old English melodies predominate Miss Fleischer's program, in keeping with the recent revival of interest in old English madrigals, art songs, and folk melodies. These will include the sixteenth century lullaby, "Golden Slumbers"; the hunting song, "When Dull Care"; the popular love lyric, "The Sweet Little Girl That I Love," and others.

Brailowsky will open his concert with his favorite composer, Chopin. "I always prefer the romantic," said Brailowsky, "especially Chopin. Surmounting the difficulties of Chopin I find very satisfying, and it is not a Brailowsky Chopin that I want to play, but the original, real Chopin."

Brailowsky left his home in Russia at the age of 11 years to study in Vienna, later living in Switzerland and in Paris, where he has given more than thirty concerts. He has toured the principal European countries and has also played in concert in Mexico and South America. He made his American debut at Aeolian hall, New York, Nov. 19, 1924, and has since given concerts in the larger American cities.

Miss Fleischer is a native of Saxony, educated in Leipzig, Switzerland, and the Scharwenka conservatory in Berlin. She made her debut in the Berlin opera house in 1919 in the rôle of Constanza in Mozart's opera, "Die Entfuehrung aus dem Serail." After two years in Berlin she joined the Vienna Opera company and came to this country as prima donna of the Wagnerian Opera company.

NEW SHORT WAVE DUTCH STATION TO BE HEARD HERE

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

AMSTERDAM, Nov. 26.—Dutch-Americans who delight in maintaining their contact with the old country will find much cause for rejoicing in the news that the powerful new short wave radio station just established near Hilversum will regularly broadcast sermons and divine services in the Dutch language to the United States and Canada.

Several large Dutch-Indian companies have contributed a total of one million florins for the establishment of this station, which will primarily serve to broadcast to Dutch workers on the Dutch plantations of the Dutch East Indies. The Roman Catholic, as well as the Dutch Reformed church governing bodies of Holland, however, have also been granted the use of the station to maintain religious contact with their brethren in America, South Africa and India.

Bring Your Radio Receiving Set Up to date

Batteries are no longer necessary or at all desirable. There's a newer and far better method of current supply.

The WHITE A-B Socket Power Unit does more than "A" or "B" batteries ever could—renders more efficient service—gives constant, even flow of current—with much less expense and without trouble of any character at any time.

No battery or trickle charger. Never charged—never discharged. Absolutely noiseless. Develops clear full-toned reception. Relies only upon 110-volt A. C. 60 cycle current for operation.

"A" side delivers 6 volt D. C. current at 2¼ amperes. "B" side output 180 volts at 85 Milliamperes—ample for any set up to 9 tubes—a distinctive WHITE achievement that has won the admiration of the world's foremost radio engineers.

Sooner or later, you will discard batteries. Do it now. Enjoy the advantages and savings of the WHITE A-B. Ask your dealer for a demonstration.

CANADA STILL A GOOD BUYER OF U. S. RADIO SETS

That Canada is still a good customer of United States radio manufacturers is shown by the latest report of exports of radio apparatus issued by the department of commerce. During the month the dominion purchased $80,428 worth of receiving sets, Australia being second with $34,355 and Aurgentina third with $25,417. Argentina received shipments of tubes amounting to $22,519, and Australia, $20,611.

The largest quantity of receiving set components was sent to Canada, the total being $63,824. Argentina and Australia were second and third in this classification, with $40,978 and $30,132, respectively. The value of receiving set accessories shipped to Canada exceeded the amount paid for receiving sets, the total being $107,282. Australia purchased $44,381 worth. The total value of receiving sets shipped was $183,402; tubes, $79,467; receiving set components, $202,010, and receiving set accessories, $219,397.

Australia and New Zealand are two outstanding markets for American radio apparatus. Australia has increased its American radio purchases from $210,214 in 1923 to $1,304,585 in 1926 and $789,820 for the first half of 1927. New Zealand also has increased its radio imports from the United States from $83,426 in 1923 to $627,222 in 1926, and $297,409 for the first half of 1927.

REPORT RUSSIA BUYS 100 K. W. SET IN AMERICA

According to a story in the Trade Unionist, Washington, an agent of the Russian Soviet government, who pretended that he was representing private interests, succeeded in purchasing a 100,000 watt radio broadcasting apparatus from the General Electric company. Only one other radio station in the world—WGY at Schenectady—carries that much power, it is said.

The Russian agent, so the story goes, wanted to purchase a station of 500,000 watts power, but the General Electric could not or would not undertake a job of such magnitude. A compromise was reached whereby the company built the Russian Communists a duplicate of station WGY, for which $1,000,000 in cash was reported paid.

AMATEURS FARE POORLY IN NEW WAVE DIVISIONS

World Conference Allots All Channels.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 26.—[Special.]—From the highest practicable wavelength down to the "border of infinity," the whole range of radio frequencies has now been divided, definitely and officially, for the first time in history, for the use of the various international radio services. The agreement upon the allocations of frequency bands from 10 to 60,000 kilocycles [30,000 to 5 meters] is perhaps the most noteworthy accomplishment of the International Radio telegraph conference which met in Washington with delegates attending from 79 nations.

The spectrum has been divided into something like 60 bands, in each of which ship, aircraft, land, broadcasting, amateur, and experimental stations will operate according to allotment. The designation of these bands was practicably the last item of regulations to be written into the Washington convention of 1927 which will govern all the international uses of radio, after being taken back to the various countries for ratification.

Six Week's Work.

Six weeks or more were spent by the technical committee of the conference and its subcommittees in solving the problem of allocating the long and short waves, the low and high frequencies, to the services to which they were deemed most suited. Many divergent views were represented at the outset among the technical experts from all corners of the world who participated in these deliberations. As finally framed, the allocations represented their unanimous agreement.

Ship and shore stations get primary consideration, of necessity, in the allocations. But aircraft radio services and radio beacon and direction finding are not ignored. Nor is broadcasting. In the short waves, however, the amateurs find themselves restricted to very narrow bands.

The American broadcasting band is left untouched, while bands among the longer waves are assigned for Europe and other regions where the transmission of programs is mostly on the long waves. In the band below 1,500 kilocycles, or 200 meters, ample provision is also made for broadcasting, particularly with a view toward the development of international exchanges of programs such as the one already projected between the British Broadcasting company and the National Broadcasting company of the United States.

Fight for Hours.

The status of the amateur is fixed and he has been restricted to rather narrow low wave bands for his international communicating. The few bands that were obtained for the amateur were alloted only after the American delegation and the delegations from Canada and other British colonies and dominions put up strong arguments against the efforts of the British delegation and other European delegates to deprive the amateurs of any and all waves that are suitable for international commercial services.

Through the whole range of frequencies any country signatory to the treaty may operate as it pleases as long as it does not allow interference with the assigned international services. Thus, it is anticipated the amateurs will be enabled by assignments from the federal radio commission to carry on communications between themselves in this country—17,000 of the world's 25,000 amateurs are in the United States—though on the low waves, which travel far, there is always the likelihood of interference.

Below 13 meters, the amateurs still have room for their experiments, for these channels are virtually unreserved. However, they are regarded today as the useless realm in radio. Yet so were the wave lengths below 200 meters not many years ago, and their possibilities were then demonstrated by the amateurs. On the "border of infinity," below 5 meters, the allegedly useless channels may yet yield some good results.

Small Theater to Cure Britons of Mike Fright

LONDON, Nov. 26.—In order to minimize microphone "fright" the British Broadcasting company has tried converting the studio into a small theater, complete with audience and spotlights. It seems to have worked well.

DEBS STATION COST $250,000.

It is understood that station WEVD, in New York City, cost close to $250,000. Incidentally, this is probably the first and only radio station in the world dedicated to an individual, inasmuch as it was purchased as a memorial to the late Eugene V. Debs, the great Socialist leader.

Inside the Loud Speaker

By Quin A. Ryan, W-G-N Announcer

HOW simple this radio is, after all! In England recently, station 5XX broke down for ten minutes. The British Broadcasting company, which runs the station, tossed off the following explanation: "The stoppage was due to high resistance on the grid mat of the automatic negative of the sub-subcontrol."

That's all.

QUARTETS, as you may have noticed, are becoming more and more popular on the radio. You may observe that the individual members of a quartet can be heard infinitely more distinctly on the radio than in a theater or concert hall. Because the radio microphone is so much more sensitive than the naked ear, the fine blending of a quartet can be appreciated better over the radio than in an auditorium.

Almost every advertising program on the New York chain now includes a male quartet, and they're generally bully good stuff.

THE VOGUE of big stadia construction came into the middle west just before the introduction of football games on the radio. The first huge gridiron plants, such as the Memorial stadium at the University of Illinois and Soldiers' field stadium in Chicago, were perfect architectural coliseums for the comfortable handling of great throngs and the attendant camp followers—newspaper reporters, telegraphers, photographers, and concessionaires. Arrangements for the radio were overlooked, because radio hadn't yet arrived.

Unfortunately, they were only a day ahead of the radio. And so the poor broadcasters, coming into the stadia toting apparatus and a crew that resembled the arrival of a circus, were forced to stage their show clinging to the tiles of the roofs and huddling their impedimenta in the rafters. The athletic officials meant well and spared no labor in improvising and rebuilding platforms and coops for the broadcasters, but the original plans had omitted radio accommodations and the lads had to make the best of it.

A year or two following, when newer football amphitheaters were being planned, the poor relation—the radio—came into its own. Northwestern, Minnesota, Ohio, Michigan, Chicago, and Purdue constructed or rebuilt their football stands to comply with the suddenly overgrown demands. We doubt that many football devotees or football listeners realize how commodious and well appointed are the compartments now assigned to the men of the press and the radio in the Big Ten football plants.

You might inquire why steam heated and glass inclosed sections are reserved for the reporters, while the great mass of the spectators sit shivering on wooden seats in the cold, cold air. The reason is that the newspapermen, the telegraphers, and the broadcasters are there to perform difficult chores. They must have free use of their bare hands, they must handle copious sheets of notepaper, they must operate delicate mechanisms—all of which can't be done in pouring rain or in the face of a driving gale. The spectators can have their rugs and blankets and earlaps and mittens, and—sh!—even convivial draughts between halves under the stands. The workers have none of these—almost none.

The university athletic departments nowadays have efficient organizations caring for the needs of the journalists and broadcasters. Our latest treat was at the brand new stadium at Michigan. The press section is inclosed with glass, with electric heaters below every seat, a glass windshield on the desks, electric lights overhead, sockets in the desks for the telegraphers to plug in, drinking fountains, and retiring rooms at hand; and for the broadcasters there are comfy double rooms outfitted with all accessories. Illinois, Chicago, and Northwestern have many of these, also.

The wonder of it, and the pity of it, is that these vast and shipshape temples out on the prairies are used only five or so days in the year.

A LONG TIME ago we happened to remark in a facetious mood that since some Londoners had just succeeded in accomplishing such a momentous feat as broadcasting the love song or a beetle to its mate, the next epoch making event would be broadcasting a wrestling match between two goldfish.

And darned if they haven't done something like that! During the electric show in New York one of the stations concerned itself with the broadcasting of the noise made by a goldfish in swimming, with the splashy sound magnified twenty million or something times.

GOO-BYE, FOOTBALL!

GOOD-BY, Football; you're the best of the radio sports!

THE RADIO listeners are now taking to verse when writing letters of comment to the broadcasters. We've received many lately. Here's an example:

You've kept us living all this fall,
When home we've had to stay.
You've told us which man had the ball—
We've follower every play.

We've punted, passed and hit the line
When you were on the air;
You've kept us so excited
We've thought that we were there.

You've painted dandy pictures
Of Ann Arbor and her hills,
Of many other college towns—
The crowds, their yells, their chills.

You ask us what we liked the best.
And tell you—sure we can.
'Twas your clever little ditties
'Bout Bennie Oosterbaan.

We hope you read these rhymes 'n' such.
They're just our "thank you very much."
They're written in appreciation
Of your good work and your good station.

Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Bell, Clinton, Ia.

FAMED BARITONE ON FAMILY PARTY CARD TOMORROW

Weber and Fields Also to Be Heard.

John Charles Thomas, internationally famous baritone, heads the group of musical notables to be heard tomorrow night in another gala Family Party, the new Monday night feature of W-G-N, THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE station on the Drake hotel. More than one hundred artists will participate, with the veteran favorites, Weber and Fields, acting as masters of ceremonies.

Thomas is scheduled to sing four numbers. His first two will be rendered with symphonic orchestral accompaniment and his second group with Goldman's band.

Busch Leads Orchestra.

The special symphony of forty picked musicians will be conducted by Fritz Busch, leader of the New York symphony orchestra and former director of the Dresden opera company. Besides providing the accompaniment for Mr. Thomas' two numbers it will play three other classical selections.

Weber and Fields will "do their stuff" in their popular, old time manner, in the second or radio review division of the hour, assisted by Joe Green's marimba band. The closing period of the entertainment will be devoted to popular music by Goldman's band, under the leadership of Edwin Franko Goldman, with a cornet solo by Del Staigers in addition to Mr. Thomas' vocal numbers.

Thomas Son of Minister.

Followers of the musical career of John Charles Thomas feel that perhaps a partial explanation of his unusual success is due to the varied experiences of this comparatively youthful artist.

The son of a Methodist minister, he had lived in eight different towns before he determined to become a doctor and entered medical college in Baltimore. As a youth, however, he had sung trios in church with his father and mother and it was not long before he was leader of a choral society in Baltimore. He finally abandoned medicine and set himself to a career in musical theatricals. His experience ran the whole range, from summer stock, through musical comedy to stardom in such light musical dramas as "The Love Letter," "Maytime," and "Apple Blossoms," and, finally, to grand opera and the concert stage, both at home and abroad.

Other Features.

Other features of W-G-N's second Monday evening broadcast are the Gypsies, who will be heard in an hour's orchestral program from New York at 7:30 o'clock, while between 9:30 and 10 o'clock the Salernos, Frank and Lawrence, will be heard in one of their programs of Italian folk songs and popular airs. "Tomorrow's TRIBUNE" goes on the air at 10 o'clock, as on every other night. Between 10:30 and 11 o'clock Ambrose Larsen will be heard.

ON AIR TOMORROW

JOHN CHARLES THOMAS.

Internationally famous baritone who will be heard tomorrow night in the family party program over W-G-N, The Chicago Tribune station on the Drake hotel.

Boys' and Girls' Clubs from 40 States on Air Tuesday

Group songs and yells and stories of achievement by boys' and girls' clubs in more than 40 states will be heard by listeners when the program of the National Boys' and Girls' club banquet, to be held in the grand ballroom of Hotel Sherman on Tuesday evening, will be broadcast by WLS. The banquet is an annual affair, held in connection with the national meeting of boys' and girls' clubs during the week of the International Livestock exposition, and brings representatives from practically every state in the union. The program starts at 7 p. m.

RADIO RESEARCH COST $48,318.91.

The amount expended by the bureau of standards for radio research during the fiscal year was $48,318.91.

'MARTHA' WILL BE OPERA ON THE AIR NEXT THURSDAY

Opera lovers will hear a portion of Friedrich von Flotow's "Martha," which will be broadcast direct from the stage of the Auditorium theater on Thursday evening in the weekly program by the Chicago Civic Opera company. It will be broadcast by a chain of stations including W-G-N, THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE station on the Drake hotel.

"Martha" is an opera in four acts, the music by Friedrich von Flotow, and the words by Wilhelm Friedrich Riese. The plot is based on French ballet-pantomime by Jules H. Vernoy and the Marquis St. George and was first produced at Vienna in 1847; London (in Italian), 1858, and in English the same year; Paris, 1865; New York, 1852, and New Orleans in 1860.

C. F. KETTERING TO TALK AT R. M. A. WINTER MEETING

Charles F. Kettering, president of the Day Fan Electric company of Dayton, O., will address the midwinter meeting of radio manufacturers here on Nov. 29, according to announcement by Louis B. F. Raycroft, vice president of National Electrical Manufacturers association in charge of the radio division. Mr. Kettering has just returned from Europe and will be the principal speaker at a general session of the radio division during its three day meeting at the Edgewater Beach hotel.

Other speakers on the program include Commissioner O. H. Caldwell of the federal radio commission; H. A. Bellows, formerly a member of the commission; Dr. Alfred N. Goldsmith of the National Broadcasting company, and Prof. L. A. Hazeltine of the Hazeltine corporation.

AC Electric Radio

Licensed under Andrews-Hammond patent

Without the uncertainty of untried apparatus

And without any sacrifice in quality of reception

There are two ways you can own an AC receiver. One is to discard your present radio set and buy a new and untried receiver, using a new and untried type of tube, at a sacrifice of quality of reception.

The other way is simply to add Balkite Electric "AB" to your present radio set. Balkite Electric "AB" replaces both "A" and "B" batteries and supplies radio power from the light socket. Entirely batteryless, it makes any standard set an electric receiver.

With this method there is no sacrifice in reception. For it makes possible the use of the standard type of set and of standard type tubes, both of which are tried and proved and give by far the clearest and truest reproduction. There is no waiting for tubes to warm up. No difficulty in controlling volume. No noise, no AC hum. No crackling, no booming, no blasting. Instead the same high standard of reception to which you are accustomed.

And if you already own a radio set, the cost of equipping it with Balkite is only a fraction of the cost of buying a new receiver.

By all means go to AC reception. Its convenience is the greatest radio improvement you could buy. But let your AC receiver be a standard radio set equipped with Balkite Electric "AB."

Two models, $64.50 and $74.50.

ATWATER KENT RADIO

House-Current or battery?

–whichever you say

NOW you can have your choice between two kinds of Atwater Kent Radio.

One of them is the new House-Current set. It uses the new A. C. tubes. It draws all its electric power from your house lighting circuit.

Whenever you snap the switch of the receiver, you are just as sure of getting even reception from your radio as you are of getting a steady light when you switch on an electric bulb.

The other kind of Atwater Kent Radio is the battery set. Everybody knows how it works. More than a million of these sets are in use. All models have been still further improved so that today they are better than ever.

Either kind of set can be installed in any approved console designed for Atwater Kent Radio.

Either kind gives you top performance at a low price—for careful mass-production in the largest radio factory gives you a saving that would be impossible if only a few sets were made.

EITHER KIND—House-Current or battery—is right around the corner at an Atwater Kent dealer's, ready for you to see and try today.

W-G-N WILL GO ON NEW WAVE BAND THURSDAY

Twenty-five Channels Are Cleared Up.

BY FRANK HINMAN.

Next Thursday, Dec. 1, W-G-N and WLIB listeners will find the two stations on their new wave length of [illegible]4 meters as a result of the recent order of the Federal radio commisison announcing the clearing of twenty-five wave channels between 300 and 500 meters. The purpose of the order, which affects about 70 stations throughout the country is to facilitate distant reception making it possible for remote and rural listeners to pick up stations in different parts of the country.

On the cleared channels will be found important stations in all sections of the country, according to a statement issued by the commission with its general order.

Tracks Are Cleared.

"Over these cleared channels it will thus be possible for remote and rural listeners to pick up stations in all different sections of the country," the statement says. "Listeners with a particular taste for DX will also find the tracks cleared for them all the way across the continent in the case of several of the Pacific coast stations which have adequate power to deliver a signal in the east under good reception conditions."

San Fransisco, for instance, can be heard for three hours after WOR of Newark shuts down on 422.3 meters while Portland will come in on WEAF's wave length after the eastern station has closed for the night. KOA, Denver, will be heard when two 550 watt stations in New York, WRNY and WPCH, which divide time on 325.9 meters shut down.

Five Channels to Chicago.

Four clear channels have been provided for high powered eastern stations, WEAF, WJZ, WOR, and WABC. Chicago has been assigned five cleared channels which is the largest number given to any community, but the commission pointed out that Chicago, by its central location, was in a position to furnish programs for the entire country, and for this reason, considered from the standpoint of the tremendous audience of remote listeners, it was deemed desirable that this number be freed for Chicago broadcasters.

In addition to W-G-N and WLIB, The Chicago Tribune stations, cleared Chicago channels have been assigned to WMAQ and WQJ on 447.5 meters, WBBM, WAAF and WJBT on 389.4 meters WLS and WCBD of Zion, on 344.6 meters, and WHT and WIBO on 305.9 meters.

South Well Represented.

Other centrally located cities in the middle west, such as Cincinnati, St. Louis, Cleveland, and Detroit are also given the opportunity to share with Chicago in providing radio programs to the middle west audience on cleared channels, while the south is well represented, cleared channels having been assigned to Atlanta, Nashville, Louisville, Fort Worth, and San Antonio. While the changes which go into effect on Thursday, take in only the band between 300 and 500 meters, the commission is also contemplating the clearing of channels on both sides of this band and it is understood that a new order may soon be issued.

RADIO PROGRAMS FOR TODAY

(Central Standard Time)

A PAIR of European artists well known to continental concert audiences are being featured in tonight's Atwater Kent hour of music which listeners will hear from W-G-N, The Chicago Tribune station on the Drake hotel, tonight between 8:15 and 9:15 o'clock. They are Editha Fleischer, soprano of the Metropolitan opera company, and Alexander Brailowsky, concert pianist. Miss Fleischer is devoting the major portion of her program to old English melodies. These will include the 16th century lullaby, "Golden Slumbers."

In his portion of the program, Brailowsky will devote a large part of his time to the composer Chopin. He is to play Chopin's "Ballade in G Minor" and the "Waltz in E Minor" by the same composer. This group will follow Miss Fleischer's opening number, Micaela's aria from "Carmen," "Je dis que rien ne m' épouvante." In this number Miss Fleischer will have an orchestral accompaniment.

The Russian composer, Rimsky-Korsakoff, whose music is alive with the dash and color of the east, is scheduled for presentation during tonight's broadcast of "Our Music Room" from W-G-N between 9:15 and 10 o'clock. In this feature the life of some great composer is reviewed every Sunday night, and some of his best known music is heard both instrumentally and vocally. Henry Selinger's Drake concert ensemble, which will present excerpts from the composer's ballet suite, "Scheherazade"; his "Hymn to the Sun," "Polonaise," and "Romance." The vocal part of the program will be given by Kathleen Ryan, who will be heard in several of the composer's best known songs.

Between 10:40 and 11 o'clock Tommy Coates, the young lyric baritone, will again be heard in another group of songs. Mr. Coates is one of the most popular of the younger W-G-N artists, and he has succeeded in making his program one of the most interesting on the air. He includes not only light classical songs, but several of the better popular songs of the day. Fern Scull, W-G-N's staff accompanist, plays for him during this program.

Today's professional football game to be broadcast by W-G-N will bring together the Chicago Cardinals and Benny Friedman's Cleveland Bulldogs. The radioing of this contest starts at 2o'clock. Ben's team has a marvelous offensive built around his ability as a passer, and the Cardinals, who defeated the Chicago Bears Thanksgiving day, are noted for their strong defensive play. Frank Dahm will be at the michrophone during the game.

MAE TINEE TO TALK TO RADIO FANS ON MOVIES

Critic to Tell How She Writes Reviews.

Mae Tinée, movie critic of The Chicago Tribune, one of the most popular motion picture reviewers in the country, will appear personally during next Saturday's broadcast of Tomorrow's Tribune from W-G-N, The Tribune's radio station on the Drake hotel.

Miss Tinée will be the fifth of The Tribune celebrities who has appeared before the microphone during these features. Gaar Williams, John T. McCutcheon, Sidney Smith, and Dr. W. A. Evans have already sat before the microphone for radio interviews with Quin Ryan, who conducts the "Tomorrow's Tribune" feature in which he reads the news and ads to his girl friend, Sally.

In her radio interview Miss Tinée will tell how it feels to go to the movies night after night in search of entertaining items for the film fans, how she judges a new picture, and how she writes her reviews.

City of Rotterdam Plans to Put in Wired Wireless

A definite plan of distributing programs over the telephone to subscribers in the city of Rotterdam, Netherlands, is hoped to be adopted shortly by the municipal telephone management which is studying the system, according to a report from the United States consul at Rotterdam, made public by the department of commerce. The system has been in use in The Hague for the past year and is reported to have proven very popular. The installation expense is said to be very small. A reasonable annual fee is also charged.

EASTERN MINISTER TO TALK TONIGHT AT SUNDAY EVENING CLUB

Dr. Albert W. Beaven, pastor of the Lake Avenue Baptist church, Rochester, New York, will deliver his address on "Life's Eastern Window," before the Sunday Evening club in Orchestra hall tonight. This talk, which will be broadcast by WMAQ, and which has been given before business organizations, chatauquas and churches in the east, has become almost as popular as Bryan's "Cross of Gold," and Russell Conwell's "Acres of Diamonds." It is by request that he is giving it in Chicago, as it has not been heard as yet in the middle west.

Dr. Beaven is in demand for addresses before organizations of business men, notably Rotarians and Kiwanis' clubs. He was president of the Baptist state convention the last year, and succeeded in paying off $75,000 indebtedness, indicating that he carries his business ability beyond the talking point.

Joseph R. Noel, president of the Noel State bank, will take part in the service, and Clifford W. Barnes will preside and give the informal Bible talk at seven. During the organ recital beginning at 7:40, Stanley Martin will play several numbers. The choir of 100 under the direction of Edgar Nelson, will open the eight o'clock service with "Pilgrims Chorus" by Wagner, followed by the old Russian hymn, "Hark, the Vesper Hymn." Entfuehrung aus dem Serail." After two years in Berlin she joined the Vienna Opera company and came to this country as prima donna of the Wagnerian Opera company.

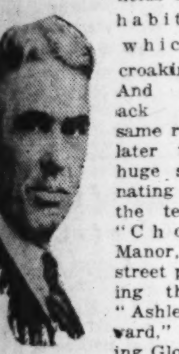
AKES 3 YEARS DEVELOPING 20 ACRE TRACT

ffers Contrast to Mushroom "Sub."

BY PHILIP HAMPSON.



RANK J. LEWIS.
[Moffett Photo.]

Did you ever go for a ride on the kirts of our town, passing along fields the only inhabitants of which were croaking frogs? And then go back over the same road a week later to find a huge sign designating a slice of the territory as "Cholmondley Manor," with street posts carrying the legend, "Ashleigh boulevard," or "Morning Glory Circle." Outside of a few sickly cement sidewalks almost lost in the mud, the aforesaid croaking frogs remain the only signs of life about the place.

This hints at one type, the mushroom variety, of subdivision which is somewhat familiar to most of us. Fortunately for the growth of the city and for the pocketbooks of investors, this variety, while plentiful, is hardly typical.

And now we'll have the pleasure of looking over one development which is the antithesis of "Cholmondley Manor." Frank J. Lewis, one of the foremost coal tar producers of the country, began acquiring 420 acres in the southeastern industrial region about eight years ago, originally for a coal tar plant. Later he decided to use the property for residential purposes and about three years ago commenced the task of putting in improvements. This tract is bounded by 108th and 114th streets, Green Bay avenue and the Illinois-Indiana state line, in the Calumet industrial district. It is adjacent on both the north and west to a 120 acre forest preserve.

Large trunk line sewers, laterals, house drains, and storm drains have been placed in every street. Water mains and laterals and gas mains and laterals have have been put in and have connections with every lot. Electric light and telephone wires have been installed along the alleys. Street paving is rapidly nearing completion, while the sidewalks have been put in. It is stated that already in excess of $1,000,000 has been expended on improvements.

Mr. Lewis is taking his time with his land, looking far into the future when the Calumet area will have become "the Ruhr district of America."

"It is the most remarkable development in the Calumet district since George M. Pullman built the town named in his honor, which was known as the premier housing development of the nation at the time," a prominent real estate man said in speaking of the project. "No subdivider in the development of Gary—not even the United States Steel corporation—laid the foundation which Lewis has constructed."

Three Story Buildings.

The property has been platted and developed with the idea of best serving the needs of the vast army of industrial workers which it is believed will ultimately be drawn to the district. It is restricted entirely to apartments of three stories because a study showed it would be economically unwise to permit the construction of smaller dwellings in view of the population possibilities.

Provision has been made for churches and schools and about twenty-three per cent of the 1,500 lots are being reserved for business uses. The business will be located only on two streets. An elaborate building program is to be launched later.

"There has been every effort to make the permanent improvements really 'permanent,'" Mr. Lewis said. "The laying of improvements, including the installation of sidewalks and the planting of trees, has been going steadily for the last three years so everything might be in readiness before any one was invited to locate on the property. The sidewalks include the laying of more than 400,000 square feet of walks under the city's specifications."

Plenty of Air.

Besides restricting the type of building Mr. Lewis is imposing a few restrictions which will insure plenty of light and air when the big tract is fully built up. Incidentally the real estate man quoted above says Mr. Lewis could have sold out at a big profit when the subdivision boom was at its peak, but preferred to keep it so that he could develop the land in accordance with his own ideas. Incidentally the tract will be linked with the loop through the new boulevard which is to connect up with the highway by way of the south park system.

Bricks in Old Lawson Home Go Into Lake

When the builders of the mansion of the late Victor Lawson, at the corner of Burton place and Lake Shore drive, put up the structure, they evidently believed they were doing something that would give truth to the definition of the word "permanence," which Mr. Webster put into his dictionary. And they almost succeeded, as the wreckers who finally brought the proud old residence to the present pile of tangled ruins can attest.

VICTOR LAWSON.
[Matzene Photo.]

Just how tough the structure was we learned when we asked R. A. Goldman of the American Wrecking and Lumber company what he was going to do with the bricks with which it was built. Mr. Goldman's voice quavered somewhat when he answered:

"We'll have to throw the bricks in the lake, and we could have gotten 25 cents apiece for them. But they were laid in concrete mortar and now we can't get them apart. We had to crash the walls down in big pieces."

Incidentally, the bricks have an interesting story. They were bought by Mr. Lawson in Belgium and were brought here on a sailing boat. Then Chicago unions got into action and said the bricks couldn't be used. So they stood around for several years until the labor trouble was cleared up.

Mr. Lawson's house was designed by R. Clipson Sturgis, a Boston architect, and it is stated it cost more than $1,000,000 to put up. The brick walls were from 5 to 7 feet thick. Concrete construction was employed and it was found that many tons of steel were used in the framework.

And now the fine materials that were used for the interior are being scattered all over the country. Some of the woodwork and the large fireplace in the living room will go into the new Daily News building. Ivan Lawson, the late publisher's brother, has installed some of the woodwork in his coöperative apartment on Lake View avenue. Peter F. Reynolds, who bought the old residence, will use some of the woodwork and a fireplace in an apartment which he will have in a building to be erected on the site.

Some of the marble will go to Wisconsin and some of the woodwork will go as far as California.

MANY 'FRATS' GET RESIDENCES ON NEAR NORTH SIDE

Reason for all the young gents sans hats and wearing trousers flapping around their ankles seen so frequently about the near north side becomes apparent when it is learned that a large number of fraternities have taken over residences for quarters. Miss Mellicent Martin, real estate operator, has compiled a list of near north side fraternities and their addresses. These follow:

Alpha Chi Epsilon, 77 Cedar street; Alpha Kappa Kappa, 1318 Astor street; Alpha Kappa Psi, 75 East Elm; Delta Sigma Pi, Beta chapter, 42 Cedar street; Nu Sigma Nu, 664 Rush street; Phi Alpha Delta, 1505 North Dearborn; Phi Beta Pi, 48 Cedar street; Phi Chi, 1040 Lake Shore drive; Phi Kappa Sigma, 30 Cedar; Phi Rho Sigma, 83 Cedar, Tau Delta Kappa, 1312 Ritchie court; Xi Psi Phi, 1355 North State, and Delt Sigma Delta, 1415 North Dearborn. And then there is Theta Sigma Phi, a sorority, at 87 East Elm.

MORE REPORTED BUYING "CO-OPS" IN 3000 SHERIDAN

In addition to those previously mentioned the following are reported by the Kirkham-Hayes corporation as having taken apartments in the coöperative flat building at 3000 Sheridan road: B. R. Klekamp, architect; Rufus A. Rightmire, department manager of Armour & Co.; Dr. Edward V. Schulte; Herbert Henke, builder; W. Roedder; Dr. B. C. Downing, physician; James S. Forbes, vice president Daniel Forbes company; Charles J. Cole, president of F. Couthoui, Inc.; John Roedder; Mrs. Grace H. Nash; A. D. Schillo, Board of Trade; Henry Janisch, contractor; W. C. Bannerman, builder; B. W. Hungerford, contractor; Robert Kroeschell; George J. Holmes, president Cartet & Holmes, Inc., and J. L. Whitney, builder.

VICTOR CARLSON SELLS 4 CO-OPS IN EVANSTON

The Victor C. Carlson organization reports the sale of coöperative apartments in buildings which it is erecting in Evanston. Dr. C. H. Searle, president of the G. D. Searle company and vice president of the Shawnee Country club, and C. H. L'Hommedieu, manager of Barnhart Bros. & Spindler, bought flats in the building at 1430 Chicago avenue. Harry M. Tingle, vice president of the Pearsons-Taft company, and Roland B. Nelson, secretary and treasurer of the Magill-Weinsheimer company, bought apartments in the building under construction at 1426 Chicago avenue.

Hearst, N.W. May Have Big Office-Station

William Randolph Hearst, newspaper, magazine, and book publisher, is going to leave "Hearst square" flat and move across the river to the near north side if negotiations for air right property owned by the Chicago and North Western on the contemplated Simpson drive on the north bank of the river pan out the way the realty brokers hope they will.

FRED W. SARGENT.

The property is just east of where the new Wabash avenue bridge will connect with Simpson drive and is one of the sites on which the long talked of branch suburban station of the Chicago and North Western railroad may be erected. Now that the state board has at last decided that the sale of air rights won't wreck the state or ruin Chicago or injure the public in any way, there seems to be nothing to prevent the much needed suburban station from going ahead with Mr. Hearst capping it with as tall a building as he sees fit to erect.

The proposed North Western staton would be merely to relieve the congested condition of the present west side terminal suburban service, it is said. It has been pointed out, however, that with the active competition the Insull electric interurban lines are giving Mr. Sargent's suburban service something must be done to offset the ability of Sam's trains to run round the loop. A huge suburban terminal close to the State street shopping district and near the fast developing near north side, it has been suggested, would do this, if all the suburban trains were run in and out of it. At the same time, such a move would leave the west side terminal entirely for through trains.

Comprehensive development of air rights depends, of course, on electrification, and the North Western apparently is planning ahead for such a move. All of the new 120 steel suburban coaches are constructed with ultimate electrification in view.

OLSON RUG CO. PLANS STORE AT 4025-27 MADISON

The Olson Rug company, which recently completed one of the largest rug factories in the country in Chicago, will erect what is said will be one of the most elaborate retail rug selling establishments in the west. The structure will be located at 4025-27 West Madison street, near Crawford, and is to represent an investment of $300,000. Designed by F. E. Davidson, it will be four stories high and of Gothic design.

WALTER E. OLSON.

The ground floor will be a sort of gigantic show window. An arcade will extend from the front almost to the rear of the building with display windows on either side, so that one may make a choice through window shopping. The entrance will be through a foyer and reception hall which will resemble a smart hotel. The sales rooms will be on the upper floors, and these will be highly ornamented.

Walter E. Olson is president of the firm. Legal details in purchasing the 50x125 foot site from Keelin Brothers were handled by Litsinger, Healy & Reid for the buyers and William A. Doyle for the Keelin estate.

Youngsters to Have Own Clubhouse.

BY AL CHASE.
[Real Estate Editor.]

Master Masons of the north and west side are going to give Cook county boys a country club where the youngsters will have their own clubhouse, with showers, etc., governed by them, and will afford every opportunity possible for them to develop their initiative—as well as their golf. Of course the grownups back of the project are going to have a clubhouse too and plenty of opportunty for them to develop their golf, but you'll have to admit that the fact that Chicagoland is going to have a new golf club isn't really startling news these clubful days. But a club for boys is news.

HENRY F. PENNINGTON.

The combination men and boys' recreation grounds, to be kown as the Blue Hills Country club, is to have another interesting feature—an athletic field with a stadium where all kinds of outdoor sports may be enjoyed and tournaments held by the boy members.

The new club has purchased outright a tract of 198 acres about two miles north of the Medinah station of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul railroad. It's on the east side of Medinah road [formerly called Meacham road] and is bounded on the north by the Schaumburg road. Its east boundary is Rohlwing road. The property is half a mile south of Higgins road.

To Be Served by Bus Line.

According to Henry F. Pennington, one of the directors of the club and a past commander of Woodlawn commandery, Schaumburg road is to be paved to Elgin and will be a main line for busses from Chicago to the watch city. They will go directly past the club grounds.

The club property is just a little north of the Du Page and Cook county line, in Schaumburg township, and is approximately ten miles due north from Lombard and Glen Ellyn. A guess would place it about twenty-five miles from the loop. The grounds are rolling and the south part of the property is crossed by the headwaters of Salt creek.

The clubhouse will be of colonial type, designed by Robert M. Hyde, one of the directors of the organization, and will be arranged for a wide variety of activities. Mr. Hyde also is preparing plans for the stadium.

Plan Two Golf Courses.

Naturally the modern country club has golf as its feature; in fact, most of the newer organizations have more than one course. So the Blue Hills Country club will follow the trend and have two courses, one an eighteen hole and the other a nine hole affair. Later on another course may be added.

The golf courses and the grounds will be laid out by James Faulis Jr. Work will start next spring with the expectation of having things ready for golfing by fall, possibly a few holes in the late summer.

The boys' club will be based on a special membership. Each member of the Blue Hills Country club will designate a boy for membership. As already stated, these youngsters will elect their own officers and do their own governing, independently of the grownups. And we'll bet they'll have fewer rumpuses than the average club of men or women indulges in.

The men's club will have a membership of 700. The directors and temporary officers are: President, Edgar F. Beaubien, president of the White Metal Products company; vice president, Dr. William F. Lauten, of the medical staff of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy railroad; treasurer, Robert M. Hyde, architect; secretary, Frank Pennington, attorney, past presiding officer of several Masonic bodies. The club's executive offices are located at 30 North La Salle street, with L. C. Davis as directing manager.

WONDER WHY ALL REALTORS DON'T PROVIDE PARKS

Four years ago, when John R. Robertson & Co. began their development of the 160 acres that are now the village of Midlothian, they set aside a tract of about five acres in the center of their property for a public park. The village recently has been incorporated and the firm has now deeded this park to the town.

"We're very fortunate in having this park," commented John H. Hamilton, president of the village board. "We're growing fast—only four years from a prairie to our present village with more than 300 families and every family with more than the average number of children.

"Parks in new developments are a boon to the children, and all subdividers should provide for parks and playgrounds when planning their developments. A new village has no money to buy land for parks while land is cheap, and, so, few communities in Cook county have parks of any kind. I commend John R. Robertson & Co. for their generosity and foresight."

COUNTRYSIDE OF ENGLAND SENDS US THIS COTTAGE

Combines Good Taste and the Utilitarian.

BY LOUISE BARGELT.

[Home Builders' Editor.]

LOUISE BARGELT.
[Chambers Photo.]

There are many women who honestly believe that they could not be happy in any type of home but the bungalow. Their existence explains the numberless bungalow designs prevalent today, and also is responsible for the fact that in many instances a great deal of artistry, taste and architectural skill goes into the creating of these bungalow homes.

Why should not one have a bungalow which is attractive as well as one which is easy to work in; one wherein steps and labor may be saved at every wall turn?

The phenomenal popularity of the American bungalow in the last fifteen years is fast lifting it from the realm of its former boxlike contours to a plane where it rivals in attractiveness of design and charm of entourage its two story competitor.

Sometimes it is called a cottage and European examples are borrowed. In the case of the cottage shown today the design comes from the English countryside. This residence has many interesting points to recommend it.

The exterior walls are of soft, natural gray, trowel marked stucco, with the roof either of textural slate in greens and grays and purples or of rough shingle tile. The chimney pots are of dull red and purple clinker brick and all the exterior woodwork is stained a weathered oak color.

Garage and Garden Plan.

Glancing at the landscape plan it is easy to see how the garage is located, the vegetable garden, and the suggested treatment for garden and lawn area.

The entrance door is centrally located, facing the narrow walk which runs from the front.

The master bedroom and bath occupy the front of the house. A long narrow hall commands the bedroom suite and beyond is a square hall which is a reception entry and leads not only into the living room but into the kitchen as well.

This hall, with its rough textured wall, tile floor, perhaps, its antique walnut stain, should be made into an alluring spot. There is room here for a grandfather's clock and an English mirror. For lighting fixtures with an English touch, perhaps a candle sconce or a quaint lamp with ptndant crystal bobechs.

In an English hallway dark finished boards, broad and laid diagonally, emphasize the cottage note.

Work in this house is made simple by the detached bedrooms and by the fact that the kitchen and front entrance are so close together.

Living, Dining Room Combined.

The living room and dining room combined dominates the rear portion of the house, overlooking the garden area. Its ceiling is beamed of solid fir, its walls a rough trowel marked plaster and its large fireplace is of gray cut stone in simple early Tudor design.

This fireplace could be handsomely enhanced by the use of an English fender seat in wrought iron or bronze at the hearth side. These fender seats have long been popular in England, but it is only recently that they have become the fashion here. They can be purchased of wood, but this is not so practical if the fireplace is to be used for logs or coal, as wood is apt to blister.

The trim in the living room, halls, bath and bedrooms is of birch, while the kitchen has white pine trim. All the birch trim and the doors are to be stained an antique walnut.

For the kitchen with its convenient compactness and thorough equipment trim and walls are to be painted in French gray and white.

Rough Stone Fireplace.

The basement area has been utilized to the utmost. The garage is attached to the house, leaving more space in the rear area for lawn, garden and drying spaces. Observe in the recreation room the rough stone fireplace, which makes of this area an extra room and cannot help but appeal to the family with children.

Its foundations are of poured concrete. The stucco walls require a first coat " or scratched coat," half an inch thick. A second coat of similar thickness as the third coat is to be rough. The second coat can be marked with small scratches and left this way so that the last coat may cling closely to it.

It is always a wise precaution to make samples of the colored stucco before the actual work on the house is begun. In this way one knows precisely what color one's house is to be, and there is no chance for disappointment.

Built in Chicago territory its cost should run between $9,000 and $10,000.

Tile Roof Should Have Big Unornamented Chimney

A tile roof—if you are planning to have one on your new home—should have a large chimney; not a small one. Also, the chimney should be plain, without attempt at ornamentation. A tile roof may be in vivid contrast to the walls below it, but not to anything which towers above it.

ROCKFORD, ILLINOIS

On English countrysides you will find many minor cottages of this type. Low lying and surrounded by a wealth of shrubbery and vines, this home has soft gray stucco walls and a slate roof of greens, grays, and purples. A Tribune competition five room house designed by J. Lester Brewster, 1646 Greenwood avenue, Rockford, Ill.

Two Owners Tell How They Bought Homes

The Tribune will print experiences of home owners—letters telling how the home was financed, how the initial payment was gathered, how the mortgages were paid off, how the upkeep was managed. For each letter printed The Tribune will pay $10. Letters should not exceed 300 words. Address them to Home Builders' Department, Sunday Tribune, Chicago.

In a Subdivision.

MRS. ALEX NEELY.

CHICAGO.—Two years ago my husband and I were out walking through a far south side subdivision of new six room bungalows being built by a prominent real estate man and selling for $8,500.

The financing plan was $500 down and $65 a month, $25 on the principle, the balance interest. We were paying $50 a month for an apartment and had been for two and one-half years.

I decided there and then if we could pay $50 we could pay $65 and be on the road to owning our own home. My husband thought it a pretty big undertaking, but after I explained how I would help by fixing up two side rooms, which we could easily spare, and rent for light housekeeping he agreed to sign the contract.

When we came to Chicago it took all our savings to furnish a modest apartment. The next year my husband received $180 Illinois veterans bonus. The $320 to make up the $500 I had saved from our income, which was $145 per month.

We moved. I fixed up the two rooms and rented them to a young couple who pay $10 per week. I have kept the rooms rented all the time and this pays the interest and special assessment on the property.

Our contract reads that we may pay as much on the principle at any time as we wish, so we hope that some day soon we will own our own home.

We enjoy our vegetable and flower gardens as well as the comforts of a good house while we are paying for it.

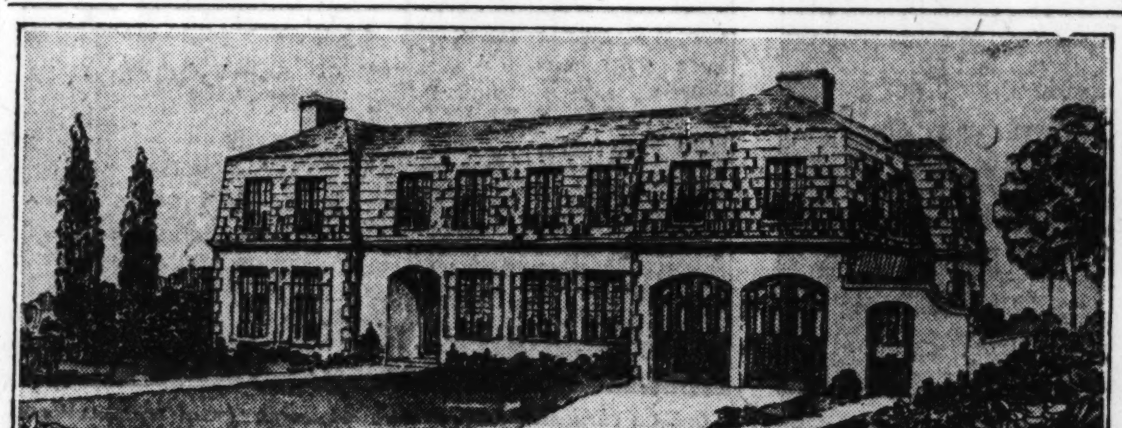
FRENCH PROVINCIAL ARCHITECTURE



Here we have an attractive home which is being erected on Deere Park drive, southeast, in Baird & Warner's addition to its Deere Park development. This structure was designed by Murray & Sinclair, and will cost about $65,000. Its architecture is provincial French. Walls are of white stucco, with a slate roof. There are ten rooms, with features an unusually large living room and a two story reception room.

Gaining Valuable Experience.

ALBERT HANSEN.

CHICAGO.—It was in 1922. I had a flat and my rent was to be raised again. It seemed that every time I had a raise in salary my rent was raised, so I decided to be my own landlord. I had but a few hundred dollars which I paid down on a lot and was promised a $500 loan from a friend.

The contract was let for a five room frame bungalow. The house was not to be decorated inside, so as to save some money at the start.

I got a first mortgage of $3,000 for five years, and to save 8 to 12 per cent commission my friend took the second mortgage. The cost for lot and house was $5,000.

Shortly after I moved in I started building rooms in the attic and used my spare time and spare money.

The second mortgage I paid off at the rate of $30 per month and 6 per cent interest.

Three months ago I offered my property for sale through THE TRIBUNE and I sold it right away for $8,700, with $4,700 cash.

I now have a flat, but, boy! me for a bungalow! So now I will soon start another one. The first bungalow gave me wonderful experience and I saved enough in rent to pay on another lot. This lot is now paid for [$1,000] and is now valued at $2,900, and I will say that the best step I ever took after I got married was to get a house.

MAKE PLAN FOR LIGHTING HOME AND KEEP TO IT

BY HOMER GRANT.

The electrical lighting of the modern home has two angles from which it should be approached.

One is its absolute practicability; the number of fixtures and their location from a service standpoint.

The other is its artistry; the way in which the fixtures harmonize with the interior decorative scheme of the house.

In considering the practical side of this home lighting question, every home builder should have a plan to be carried out meticulously.

In the average five, six or seven room house there are certain standardized electrical requirements which should be met if real comfort is to be afforded the owners.

First comes the entrance light.

If there is not a porch, there is an entrance doorway. Brackets on each side may be selected, weatherproof if there is no porch covering. Often in connection with this light, there is an illuminated house number.

The vestibule should have a ceiling light with wall control switch. A 25 watt globe will probably furnish enough light here.

Three Way Switch for Hall.

Where there is a reception hall there should be lights at each end and brackets besides with convenience outlets in the baseboard. A three way switch in the entry or hall which controls the porch lights, the hall lights and the upstairs hall lights is a comfort.

In the living room and dining room there should be ceiling lights and wall lights, each with different switches.

The living room should have an abundance of convenience outlets for service apparatus as well as for floor and table lamps. Convenience outlets near the fireplace contribute the opportunity to serve tea around the fireplace on Sunday or other informal evening occasions. In the dining room these convenience outlets should be quite as abundant and so placed that they offer sideboard as well as table use.

The kitchen outlets include, of course, a center ceiling light, well diffused, and additional smaller 60 watt lamps over the sink, work table, and in the pantry, closets, basement hallway, and over the back porch door.

A Parrot Light.

A pendent ceiling light in the breakfast nook is necessary. Now there are on the market many delightfully ornamental small lights; a brightly colored parrot, for instance, as a side bracket light which offers vivid contrast to the simple color scheme of the room. Nor should convenience outlets in this baseboard be forgotten; the times when they will be needed are many.

Bedrooms are perhaps the most neglected of all the rooms as far as really adequate lighting goes.

Besides a central fixture controlled by a wall switch near the doorway, there should be a number of side lights in each room, for lamps on the dressing table and chiffonier, table, desk, and beside the bed.

Lights in the bedroom closet are frequently omitted; oddly enough, since their serviceability is great. They may be very inexpensive, using only a 25 watt lamp, and so arranged that they flash on automatically when the door opens and shut off when it closes. In this way they are an economy, as no one leaves them burning longer than necessary.

Lighting the Bathroom.

In the bathroom both ceiling light and side fixtures are needed, with plenty of convenience outlets for water heater, electrical emergency heater, curling iron, and other service features.

It is needless to mention the importance of adequate light in the basement; double switch control for the basement stairs with ceiling lights, wall lights and numerous convenience outlets for washing, drying and ironing apparatus.

One wise precaution is to have the outlet to which the hand iron is attached connected with a signal light which shows when the current is on or off.

If there is a work bench in the cellar this should be well lighted, along with the fruit cellar, furnace room and coal bin.

The main lighting of the garage is often solved by a reflector light over the engine hood. This is controlled from the garage door. Where there is a work bench, this can have a light also. Trouble lamps located on each side of the garage opposite the engine and some four feet from the floor are often extremely useful in case of engine trouble.

Night lights appeal to many people. These are not expensive. A small candle power lamp can burn in an upper hallway throughout the night at a cost of only a few cents a month.

For people who are nervous and obsessed with fear of burglars, it is possible to have a switch in the bedroom, connected with the downstairs rooms so that they may be instantly flooded with light in time of alarm.

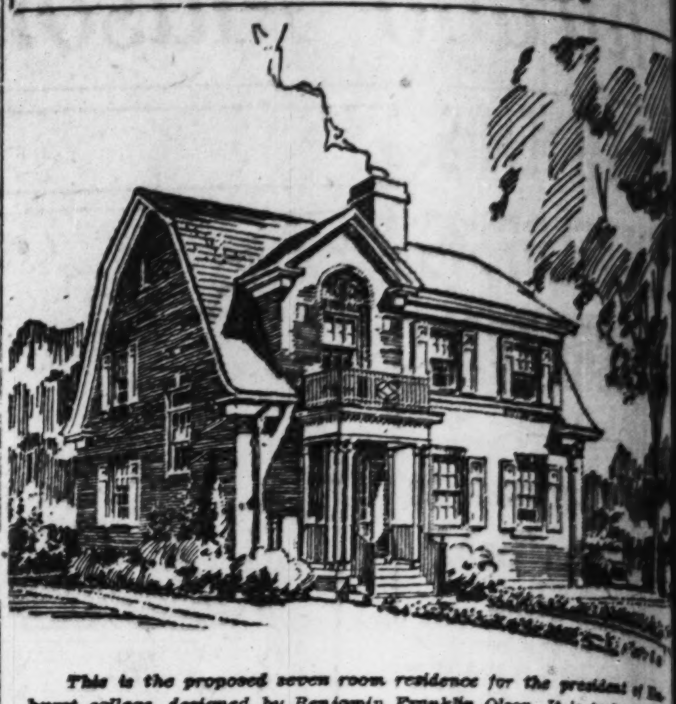
FOR COLLEGE PREXY



This is the proposed seven room residence for the president of Elmhurst college, designed by Benjamin Franklin Olson. It is to be of early American architecture, built of "Harvard" brick, with slate roof of the gambrel type, which represents the sturdy and picturesque style found in the more remote districts of lower New England. A balustrade of wrought iron flanks the entrance steps and surmounts the roof of the porch at the second floor. The estimated cost of the house is $16,500.

3 GRADES OF GLASS DESERVING OF STUDY BY HOUSE BUILDER

There are some three grades of glass concerning which every man who contemplates building a home should be informed.

First of all there is plate glass, which is clear and without blemish of any sort. This has, until lately, been considered expensive and was only made in a one-quarter inch thickness. Now, however, plate glass is manufactured one-eighth an inch thick, and while it has the admirable qualities of the heavier plate glass, it is considerably less in price.

Then there is the new type of glass which admits a certain proportion of the health giving violet rays of the sun into the home. Even the owner of the moderate priced home can have this "unskimmed sunshine," as it has been called. Even though he cannot afford it in all of his rooms, it's not prohibitive in price for a child's nursery or for the glassed-in windows of a sleeping porch.

Then there is the regular American window glass, referred to usually in two grades, "A" and "B." As might be expected, grade "B" is cheaper than grade "A," with occasional defects such as "waves" and "bubbles." Grade "A" is an excellent glass, and is most often used for sash.

MORTGAGE IS NO LONGER BUGABOO; MEANS TO SAVE

Mortgages, the new style mortgages, are no more than borrowing to invest.

"I never really saved a cent," one man was heard to observe, "until I took out a mortgage to build a house I had always had a horror of mortgages—regarded it as a sort of skeleton in the closet affair—but, believe me, I have found that it is one of the soundest investments a man can make. It keeps him paying at it until he pays it off—and then he has something in the end."

CHICAGO SEEN AS MECCA FOR LABOR GRAFTERS

Jewish Population Hard Hit by Racketeers.

BY THOMAS WREN.

Talk to any local racketeer and he will immediately inform you that Chicago is the haven city for the racketeers of the country.

ROBERT E. CROWE.

The Chicago field for shaking down small merchants is so lucrative that recently a St. Louis mob pitched their tents here to launch an organization among hotel owners. To facilitate matters they hired two prominent Chicago racketeers to give them the lay of the land—sort of act as pilots until the organization craft was made secure.

Came then the recent investigation by State's Attorney Robert E. Crowe and the hotel racket became too hot, so the St. Louis gang folded their tents and left for other parts. For protection purposes some racketeers christen their pet associations of small merchants and organizations of helpless wage earners with high sounding trade union names. The latest arrival in this line is the Bathtub Cleaners' union, which maintains an office on West Madison street. Charters are procured from the state of Illinois.

Real Labor Is Foe.

Legitimate Chicago trade unionists—like the building trades, typographical union, various locals of engineers, crafts of railway workers and numerous others—have nothing in common with the fly-by-night organizations controlled by racketeers. Activities of the latter are just as repulsive to the real Chicago labor movement as they are to small merchants on whom they prey. Actions of former days have proven to many in the trade union movement that discretion prevents unpleasant attacks.

Jewish residents of Chicago's west side, through the manipulation by racketeers of associations of Jewish food dealers, are now compelled to pay $1 a pound for corned beef and $1.25 a pound for beef tongue. In other sections of the city the costs range from 90 cents to 95 cents for the two meat products.

Jews Are Hard Hit.

The 75,000 Jewish residents of the west side are the hardest hit by the machinations of Chicago racketeers. Prices of virtually all their food stuffs are fixed by agreement between a few gangster racketeers and a few sophisticated merchant members of the fly-by-night associations. Once the agreement on prices is set the dictums of the minority group are forced on down the line to the smaller retail dealers, who in turn dish out the food stuffs at fixed prices to consumers.

Many of these smaller dealers are unwilling members of the various associations because the dues and assessments come often and are high.

Maxie Eisen, who has a speaking acquaintance with many Chicago policemen, occupies the throne in three Hebrew associations of food dealers. He rules the Hebrew Master Butchers, the Hebrew Master Bakers of the Northwest side, and the Wholesale and Retail Fish Dealers' associations.

A Big Income.

His annual income is said to be between $50,000 and $60,000. He is a frequenter of Chicago's night life resorts and generally can be found with the first nighters at shows.

Recently Sam Trabush, a member of the Hebrew Master Butchers' association, rebelled at Eisen's dictatorship. Later he paid a physician for sewing fifteen stitches in his head. Defiant he withdrew from the association and reduced prices about 12 per cent. He has told friends he still makes a comfortable profit at the lower prices. Eisen was indicted and members of the butchers' association raised $10,000 for his defense.

In Fulton street market Eisen is a busy individual on fish days. He handles the wholesale trade for the smaller merchants. A canvass of markets reveals all prices of fish are standardized.

Organize Builders.

Grocers, fruit dealers, and delicatessen store owners are grouped into another association. Officers of this outfit tried to gain membership in the Chicago Federation of Labor, but their application was rejected.

To make a complete job of Jewish merchants in an organization line, Abe Schaffner and Morris Pearlman have recently started the International Builders' club. The club is for Jewish contractors and some of them have been informed that unless they became members strikes will be called on their construction projects.

Invitations sent out to Jewish builders ask them to meet A. M. Schaffner, business manager of the new club. Schaffner's police record dates back to 1910 when he was tried on a petty larceny charge. He was sentenced to Joliet penitentiary in 1918.

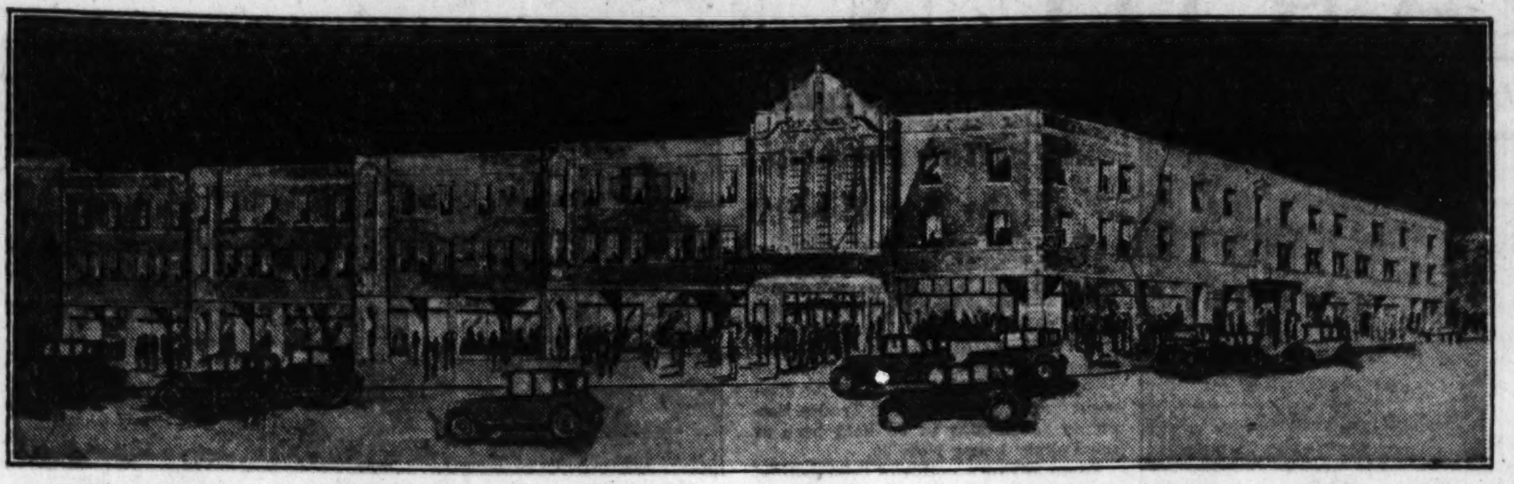
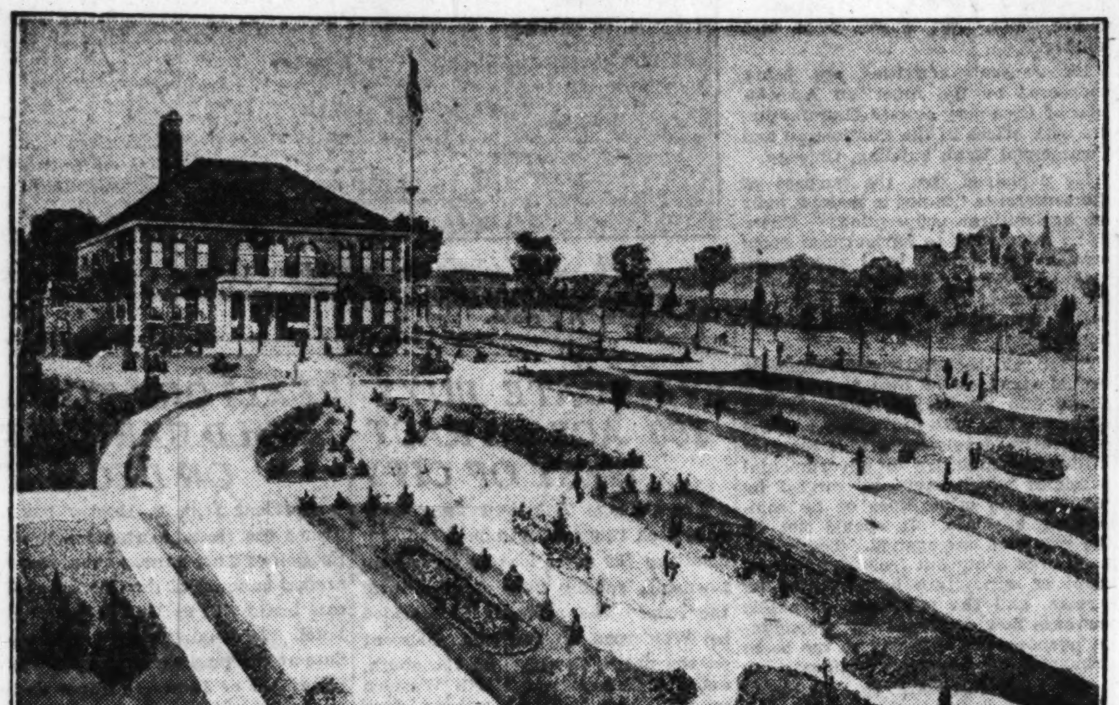
NEW PICTURE HOUSE FOR DOWNERS GROVE



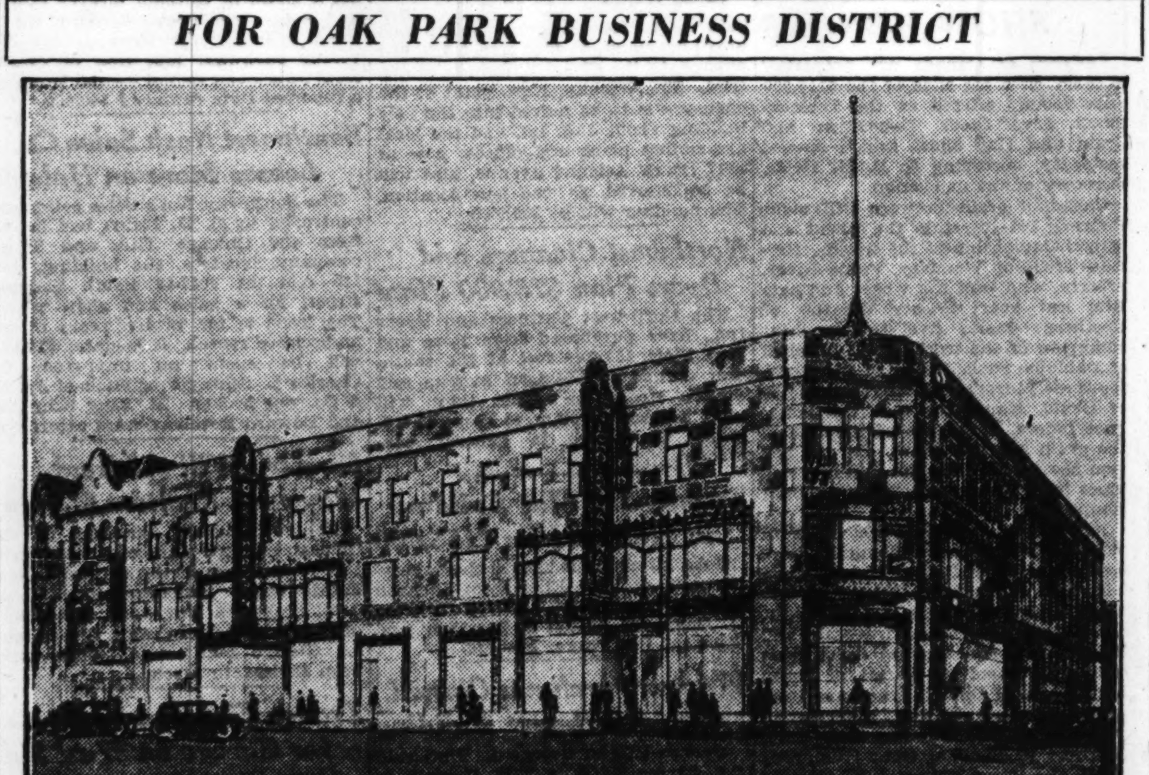
This is the new Downers Grove Theater building, to contain a cinema seating more than a thousand, a thirty-nine room hotel, bowling alleys, billiard tables, lunchroom, six stores, etc., to be erected by the village attorney, G. H. Bunge, at the northeast corner of Highland and Warren avenues, which is north of the Burlington tracks. The project is said to involve several hundred thousand dollars. Van Gunten & Van Gunten are the architects. L. B. Sugarman made this sketch. The Downers Grove Investment company is in charge of the renting.

NEW NORTHWEST SIDE PARK FIELDHOUSE



Clarence Hatzfeld designed the above field house now being constructed in the new nineteen acre park bounded by Addison, Roscoe, Kilbourne and the St. Paul tracks. He also has charge of the entire development of both grounds and building, which involve a total investment of $140,000. The park will have space for baseball, tennis, ice skating, wading pools for the youngsters, football, and other games. Frank Wilkins is president of the Irving Park district. The commissioners are: C. L. Van Dyke, Edward McClure, John E. Smith, and Merrill J. Moffatt.

FOR OAK PARK BUSINESS DISTRICT



Thielbar & Fugard designed the above building which will be erected at the corner of Lake and Marion streets, in Oak Park's business district. A part of the structure will be occupied by O. W. Richardson & Co., furniture dealers, and a part by the Nicholas Hardware company.

9 STORY CO-OP BEING ERECTED AT 6738 OGLESBY

All Sides Will Be of Face Brick.

Another fair sized coöperative apartment building is under construction on the south side where a nine story structure is rising at 6738 Oglesby avenue.

The ground floor will contain a handsome lobby, a room where the tenant owners may hold entertainments, a play room for the children, laundries, a garage, etc.

Then above will be seven apartments each with seven rooms and four baths. All these sevens ought to bring a lot of good luck. The top floor will be in the form of a six room bungalow. It won't have so many bathrooms, there only being three.

All the rooms are to be extra large and perhaps it won't be going too far to say they will be sumptuously or at least beautifully decorated. Among the conveniences will be breakfast nooks. But what to do with them if the owners don't eat breakfast? Then all the walls will be sound proof which will permit small private family quarrels as well as the more general ones in which the entire household takes part.

Designed by Paul Olsen, the new building is of Gothic architecture. All sides will be of face brick so neighbors won't have to fear a shirt front monstrosity. The pent houses on the roof will be treated so as not to detract from the appearance of the structure. Completion is scheduled for May 1, 1928.

WILL BUILD IN WILMETTE.

Oscar E. Fuchs has sold his vacant property on Lake street, in Wilmette, to Charles G. Bickiefs, who will build. The 55x159 lot is 133 feet east of 6th street. Hokanson & Jenks and E. M. Johnson were brokers.

Plan Hospital for Animals in Evanston

An animal hospital as luxurious in its way as any serving the lordly homo sapiens, is to be erected shortly at 1819 Church street Evanston, by Dr. J. V. Lacroix. So should Rin-tin-tin or Dave or any other high hatting police dog develop the appendicitis he can undergo the pleasures of the surgical knife amidst the same luxuries as those to which he is accustomed.

RIN-TIN-TIN.

The institution, which it is said will be the finest of its kind in the country, will be known as the North Shore Animal hospital. The building itself will be a handsome affair of French architecture, designed by William Campbell Wright. It will be of Bedford stone and face brick, with a slate covered mansard roof. Dormers will be of stone, with wrought iron balconies.

When a sick dog, cat or guinea pig, or a gold fish suffering from melancholia is brought in for treatment he, she or it will be admitted into a reception room having a hand decorated ceiling constructed of heavy wood beams and panels. The walls will be of Caen stone, there will be a slate floor and at one end of the room will be a huge French fireplace which will be kept lighted during the winter so that the gold fish patients may warm their fins before the fire while awaiting examination by the doctor in charge.

Here are some of the departments: X-ray and microscopic laboratories, operating rooms, dispensary, grooming room, receiving ward, maternity, and observation rooms, and isolation quarters. A rule that will be rigidly carried out is one providing that gold fish suffering from home sickness shall have a private room, so that their wailing will not disturb the rest of the sick beasts.

Then there will be quarters for birds. These will be equipped with elaborate devices which will register at the central office the presence of a cat in too close proximity. Parrots will not be allowed to associate with canaries, so that the latter may not pick up any bad habits while undergoing treatment.

Hospitalization will be provided only for small animals, the management serving positive notice that no lions with toothaches will be admitted under any circumstances. Besides hospital quarters, there will be an apartment for the doctor in charge and rooms for internes. In the rear of the building will be seven exercise yards covered with copper screens to keep out flies. The latter will receive no attention at the hospital.

In closing, we'll say that Dr. Lacroix, besides being head of the hospital, is editor of the North American Veterinarian, the official organ of his profession. It is stated the investment will be $60,000.

Palmer Apparel Shops to Locate in N. Y. Life Bldg.

The Palmer apparel shops, which operate several stores in Chicago, have leased space from Lee J. Lesser in the New York Life building for ten years at an undisclosed price and will open a store about May 1. The new shop wil be at 128 West Monroe. M. H. Stein of L. L. Sachs & Co. was broker.

PLAN 17 STORY APARTMENTS FOR 5510 SHERIDAN

Roof Line Will Be Broken by Towers and Gables.

Mystery as to the fate in store for the residence at 5510 Sheridan road, across the street from the Edgewater Beach hotel property was cleared yesterday when it was announced a seventeen story apartment house will be erected on the site. It's to be known as the 5510 Sheridan Road apartments.

Designed by E. F. Quinn and R. T. Christiansen, the structure is to be distinctive by reason of an artistic use of setbacks. The building will be set back at the fourteenth and sixteenth floors which will allow of promenades at both these floors. The roof line will be broken by gables, towers, and dormer windows which in turn are to be ornately decorated. The towers will have roofs of red fire flashed clay.

French Renaissance Design.

The general architecture will be of the French renaissance period. The front elevation will be of Bedford stone and pressed brick. A number of friezes will lend distinction to the front elevation.

The apartments will be of five, six, and seven room suites, each to have the latest in apartment fittings. Included in the conveniences will be real wood burning fireplaces, built-in library shelves, electric refrigeration. Each apartment will have the usual generous number of bathrooms. Breakfast nooks will be placed in the butler's pantries.

Entry to the building from Sheridan road will be through a marble floored vestibule having a dome ceiling of ornate geometric design. Of course there will be a "beautiful lobby." Passing through the building on both the north and south sides will be driveways to a three story garage in the rear. It will thus be possible to enter one's car without leaving the building. Incidentally the garage will be able to accomodate all the cars in the building.

Laundries in Basements.

Besides the lobby, the first floor will house all the service departments. The laundries, boiler rooms, etc., will be found in the basement.

The owner of the structure is the Lake Michigan View Building corporation, the stockholders of which include the architects and a group of contractors. Henry Janisch of H. Janisch & Co. is president. Zwemer and Casey are attorneys for the corporation. The Girard Trust company is financing the project.

49 FLATS FOR CRAWFORD AND ROSCOE CORNER

A three story and English basement building to contain six stores and forty-nine apartments of two, three, and four rooms is under construction at the northeast corner of Crawford and Roscoe streets. The owner is the Crawford-Roscoe Building corporation of which Martha E. Ewema, Maurice Weisman, and Everett D. Norris are the incorporators. The site is 134x125 feet and it is stated the project will represent an investment of $275,000. B. Albert Comm is the architect. Tannenbaum & Polikoff are attorneys.

ROSSBACH & SONS TO BUILD PLANT ON WASHTENAW

Work is to start at once on a new plant for Rossbach & Sons at Washtenaw, near Congress. Alfred E. Strobel is the architectural engineer. Only one story will be built now, but the design is for two additional floors. It'll be 96x72. The owners are now at 520 Sherman street.

FARM and GARDEN

Harvesting Costs Lowered by Labor Saving Machinery

Exactly $1,568 Could Be Gained on 300 Acres.

BY FRANK RIDGWAY.

I'VE just finished harvesting the last of the grain and seed crops grown this year on my imaginary farm of 320 acres. Not many of my corn belt neighbors are going to believe me when I tell them that I actually saved exactly $1,568 in my harvesting bill this year simply by using the most modern methods of cutting, thrashing and picking instead of the methods and machinery used on the majority of farms in the middle west today.

On this imaginary farm at the beginning of the season there were to be harvested 30 acres of oats, 80 acres of wheat, 40 acres of soy beans, 30 acres of sweet clover for seed, and 120 acres of corn—90 to be husked and 30 acres for ensilage. All of the crops were cut and thrashed with a combine harvester-thrasher except for corn, which was picked with a mechanical machine, and the 30 acres used for silage was handled in a field ensilage harvester.

Below is given a summary of the savings on each bushel as well as the total savings:

Grain—	Saving per bushel.	Total savings.
Corn [picked]	5 cents	$225
Corn [silage]	....	200
Oats	12 to 15 cents	180
Wheat	17 cents	408
Soy Beans	25 cents	300
Sweet clover	$1.70	255
Grand total savings		$1,568

Saving Through Investment.

This saving of $1,568 is brought about through the investment of about $2,500 in machinery and equipment. Corn huskers, which are drawn either by horses or a tractor, cost about $425; a field ensilage cutter and ensilage blower cost approximately $575, and a combine grain harvester costs from $1,300 to $1,600. Farmers with 300 acres of corn, wheat, oats, soy beans, and sweet clover—with the acreage divided as it is on my imaginary farm—can pay for the machinery and equipment from the savings in two seasons.

F. A. Lyman, an expert on harvesting costs, at the National Association of Farm Equipment Manufacturers, showed me just how much I had saved by harvesting the grain and sweet clover with the most modern machines instead of using the machinery that is to be found on most farms in the corn belt.

Here is the way he figured out the savings, using average figures of costs paid by farmers in the corn belt. He says that picking corn by hand costs from 6 to 10 cents a bushel, while picking with a mechanical corn husker costs from 2½ to 5 cents a bushel. The corn husker costs about $425 where it is drawn by horses or a tractor, and with a power takeoff the cost is about $485. Lyman figures that a farmer should have from 50 to 60 acres of corn to harvest each year to justify the cost of a mechanical husker.

The time element in husking corn is an important factor. The harvesting can be done in half the time with a mechanical picker.

In the Early Stages.

C. O. Aspenwall, an agricultural enginner who is an authority on the mechanical corn harvester, says that the practice of picking and husking corn by hand is about where binding grain by hand was forty years ago. In comparing hand picking with the mechanical harvester, Mr. Aspenwall says that it would take two men thirty-three and a third days to husk 100 acres of corn. At fifty bushels per acre, the field would yield 5,000 bushels and the cost, he figures, would be as follows:

5,000 bushels at 7 cents a bushel	$350.00
Team at $4 per day	133.34
Wagon at 50c per day	16.66
Board, etc., for two men at $1 per day each	66.66
Total	$566.66

Picking and husking this same kind of a field with a horse drawn machine at the rate of six acres per day would take six and two-thirds days and the cost would be as follows:

7 horses at $2 per day each	$233.34
2 wagons at 50c per day each	16.66
2 men at $5 per day each	83.33
	$333.33

He points out that the $333.33 subtracted from the $566.66 [the cost of hand picking], if applied on the purchase of the corn picker, is much more than half the price of the mechanical corn picker. Mr. Aspenwall's figures show that it is an easy matter to pay for a corn picker and husker in two seasons where a farmer has as much as 100 acres of corn to harvest each year.

"Do not overlook the fact," said Mr. Aspenwall, "that in getting the corn harvested and out of the way in sixteen and two-thirds days instead of thirty-three and one-third days, you have sixteen and two-thirds days left for other work."

Where the corn is to be put into a silo, the common practice is to cut it with a corn binder, haul it to the silo on wagons, run it through an ensilage cutter and blow it into the silo. The new way of doing this work is with a field ensilage cutter that cuts down the corn, cuts up the stalks into fine pieces in the field and elevates the corn into a wagon ready to be blown into the silo.

This eliminates a great amount of labor in handling the crop, saving from $75 to $100 in the filling of a 100 ton silo, according to Mr. Lyman. He says that the outfits now commonly used in filling silos cost from $375 to $465, while the new field ensilage cutter, which prepares the corn plant for the silo all in one sweep across the field, costs about $500. The old ensilage blower can be used with the new outfit in putting the cutup stalks into the silo. A new blower costs about $75, making a total cost of $575 or from $110 to $200 more for the new outfit. Enough is saved in one season to pay for the additional cost where as much as 200 tons of silage is to be handled. In filling two 100 ton silos most farmers would probably use two corn binders, each drawn by a tractor or three or four horses and a man on each outfit. From five to eight racks would be needed in hauling in the bundles. It would take additional men at the silo. With the new outfit one man is needed to run the field ensilage cutter outfit and from two to four wagons to haul in the cut stalks to the silos. Boys can drive the teams on these wagons, and they can operate the blower at the silo.

Reason for Empty Silos.

Mr. Lyman says one of the main reasons silos have been standing empty in the corn belt during recent years is due to the fact that farmers have to use so many men and that a great amount of heavy labor is required to handle the corn needed to fill a silo where the cutting is done at the silo.

All the other grain—wheat, oats and soy beans—and sweet clover were harvested on the imaginary farm with an up-to-date combine harvester-thrasher which cuts the grain, thrashes it, and pours it into a tank carried on the outfit. The savings amounts to 17 cents a bushel. This figure corresponds to the average savings revealed by the Illinois and other experiment stations' studies of combine-thrasher harvesting costs, compared with the ordinary method where the binder and thrasher is used. The savings shown in these studies ranged from 12 to 20 cents a bushel on wheat where the combine was used.

According to Mr. Lyman a combine costs from about $1,300 to $1,600 each. A binder costs $225 to $250 and an individual thrasher from $800 to $1,000. In addition the farmer must buy twine which is not used with the combine. The binder twine costs from 40 to 60 cents an acre, Lyman figures.

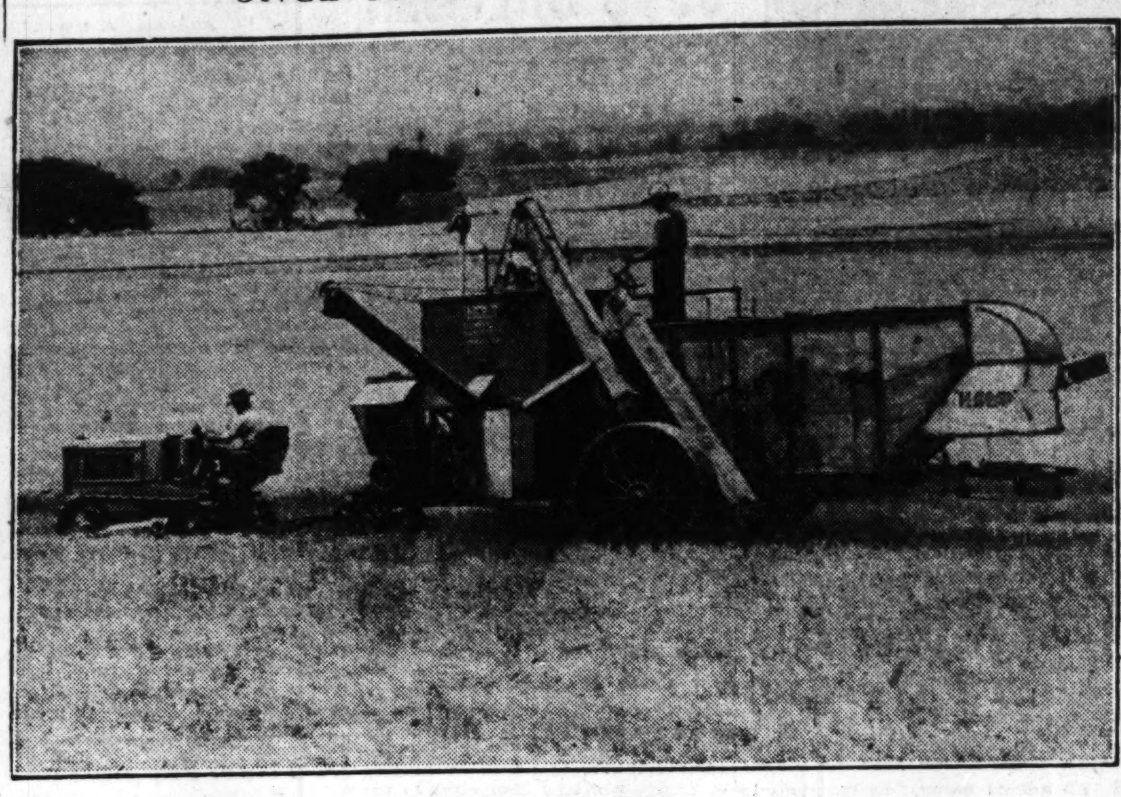
He points out the saving with a combine is greater in harvesting wheat in the big fields of Kansas and in the northwest than it is in the corn belt where the grain fields are smaller. In the big wheat fields the harvesting of wheat is done at a cost as low as 3 or 4 cents a bushel where there are from 640 to 8,000 acres to be cut and thrashed. From 500 to 1,000 acres are handled in a season with one combine.

Another surprise comes in the savings brought about by harvesting soy beans with a combine. Most farmers would be satisfied with a saving of 25 cents a bushel. The 25 cents a bushel is all that is included in the above table showing the savings on the various crops, but there was an additional saving of 25 per cent of the soy beans which would have been wasted from shattering under the ordinary method of harvesting.

The savings on oats handled with a combine amounts to from 12 to 15 cents a bushel where the yield on a 30 acre field averages about 50 bushels to the acre.

It has been found that the combine is the best machine for handling sweet clover. Some Illinois farmers have saved from $8 to $9 an acre by handing their sweet clover with a combine harvester-thrasher.

ONCE OVER AND IT'S ALL OVER



[Sheelor and Co. Photo.]

ONE WAY TO ADD 17 CENTS A BUSHEL TO WHEAT PROFITS—In this combine harvester-thrasher engineers have wrapped up in a comparatively small sized package a grain binder, a crew of shockers, a stack of binder twine balls, a band of horses, a thrashing machine, and an army of at least twenty-five thrashers. Griffeth Brothers are shown here operating a 12 foot combine in the Illinois river bottoms on their farm near McNabb, Ill. With the combine farmers can save from 12 to 15 cents a bushel on oats, 25 cents a bushel on soy beans, $1.70 a bushel on sweet clover seeds, and 12 to 20 cents a bushel on wheat.

For Radio Farmers

The first chain program designed solely for rural listeners will be inaugurated tomorrow when the proceedings of the International Livestock exposition will be put on the air through the new midwest chain of the National Broadcasting company. The broadcast will make the entry of the N. B. C. into a field of special service to the American farmer, when great agricultural events will be broadcast in the same manner as national events are now. Details of the broadcast will be found in Part 7, on Page 8.

MECHANICAL CORN PICKER

WHERE SHUCKIN' PEGS AND SPEEDY HAND PICKERS ARE NOT NEEDED—Machines like this are now becoming common in the corn belt. This Illinois farmer is cutting his corn picking job half in two and adding 5 cents a bushel to the value of his crop by saving a nickel a bushel with the corn picker and husker. Picking by hand costs from 6 to 10 cents a bushel, while picking with the mechanical corn husker costs from 2½ to 5 cents a bushel.

A hundred acres of corn averaging 50 bushels an acre can be picked in 16⅔ days with a machine like the one above. It would take two men 33⅓ days to pick the same kind of a field.

Apple Blossom Blooms in Indiana This Month

California weather that brought out the apple and pear blossoms in various parts of Illinois several weeks ago crossed the Illinois-Indiana line and flooded Hoosier orchards with sunshine hot enough to swell the buds and bring out blossoms for Thanksgiving. An apple blossom for proof was sent to THE TRIBUNE a few days ago with this note: "Apple blossom found on a wine sap tree Wednesday, Nov. 23, 1927, on Sweitzer's farm at Laporte, Ind." The blossoms was still fairly fresh with pink petals spread out in all directions.

Market Men Fight Against Federal Help for Co-ops

MARKET men of the old school are launching their first nationwide movement "against governmental subsidies for federal and state propaganda in favor of the coöperative farm marketing development" at the Agricultural Trades Economic conference to be held here at the Palmer house Nov. 30.

In an advance notice of the meeting, W. F. Jensen, a butter man from Salt Lake City, Utah, and chairman of the conference, said that manufacturers, processors, packers, canners, ginners, millers, wholesalers, commission men, and brokers from every state in the Union will be present. He lists the following agricultural products which are to be represented "Grain, butter, potatoes, flour, cheese, fruit, live stock, ice cream, vegetables, tobacco, cotton, milk, eggs, sugar, wool, and poultry."

Mr. Jensen's activities are being sponsored by the American Association of Creamery Butter Manufacturers with offices in the Continental and Commercial Bank building, Chicago.

He explained that the purpose of the conference "is not to make a fight on agricultural coöperation." There is no opposition to agricultural coöperation kept within legal and constitutional limits and which is a genuine attempt made by farmers to better themselves," he said in the announcement.

"But all coöperative development should stand on its own feet to be a sound and meritorious effort in our economic life. We are opposed to the coöperative development if it requires artificial stimulation or governmental subsidies which must be carried by taxpayers in other lines or by competitive business. It should not be the result of propaganda. The strenuous urge going out from our department of agriculture in a continuous stream, and the multitude of public servants now employed for propaganda purposes are contrary to the basic principles of American business.

"It is unfortunate that business should become involved in politics, but that is the situation confronting us. We cannot underestimate the formidable propaganda back of the coöperative marketing of farm products. It has become a menace to invested capital and the established way of merchandising the output of the farms," said, Mr. Jensen.

CANADA WILL COMPETE FOR SHOW HONORS

Farmers of Canada are preparing to carry off a big slice of the $110,000 prize money offered at the International Live Stock Exposition and Grain and Hay show, which opened yesterday, according to B. H. Heide, secretary of the exposition.

Canadian grain growers will make a strong bid to retain the wheat and oats championship of the world. Herman Trelle of Wembley, Peace River, Alberta, who won the wheat and oats title last year; Seager Wheeler of Rosthern, Sask., five times wheat champion of the world; J. C. Mitchell of Dahinda, Sask., holder of the crown for three years; and Samuel Larcombe of Birtle, Man., who took the honor once before, have entered exhibits in the grain and hay show. Canada has won the wheat championship fourteen times in sixteen years of international competition.

Mr. Heide said that 500 head of blooded stock from the dominion have been entered. Principal Canadian entries include horthorn, SHereford, and Aberdeen-Angus cattle, draft horses, and sheep. Half the Clydesdale and Percheron horses entered come from western Canadian farms. Sheep breeders from Ontario who have been constant championship winners in previous years, including Col. Robt. McEwen of London, Ont.; Humphrey Snell of Clinton, Ont.; H. M. Lee of Highgate and James Parkingson of Guelph are represented.

Alex Galbraith of Edmonton, Alta., who has been an exhibitor since the first international show was held in 1900, has been selected a live stock judge. Other Canadians who will officiate in the judging rings are: Duncan Johnson of Apin, Ont.; Prof. Wade Toole of the Ontario Agricultural college of Guelph, Ont.; and John Wright of Chesley, Ont., according to the manager of the show.

BUILD SIX STORY HOTEL CHATEAU IN AUSTIN BLVD.

Will Have 144 Furnished Apartments.

Work is well under way on a six story apartment hotel at 330 North Austin boulevard, designed by Architect Allen L. Barnes and owned by Lloyd Golder Jr.

The building has been christened the Hotel Chateau and will contain 144 furnished apartments arranged in one, two, and three room suites, with hotel service.

Of course if the Gold Coast has a "buffet pantry" in its newest skyscraper apartments, why shouldn't Oak Park do the same in a six story? We'll answer by quoting Mr. Golder's written comments on his new building:

"The arched dinette is taboo in this project. The owner has designed a handsome grille which will be executed in heavy hand wrought iron. The buffet pantry is the last word in modern equipment."

We might as well let Mr. Golder tell the rest of the story: "A beautiful natural stone terrace will flank either side of the main entrance and will be elaborately planted by the owner, who is the president of the Golder Landscape Designers of Oak Park."

The Madison and Kedzie State bank has underwritten a first mortgage bond issue on the project. According to Mr. Golder the total investment will be $425,000.

NEWS OF CHICAGO SOCIETY

Writers Attest Chicago's Culture

By Mme. X.

THERE are many things for the onlooker at Chicago's intellectual and esthetic development today to study and consider. Outsiders reading our daily papers would think that of such matters we were utterly lacking. As a matter of fact, the same vigorous energy that distinguishes our criminal and political record [and crime and politics here sometimes seem synonymous], our industrial life and our social doings, also prevails in our finer manifestations of culture.

Especially among a small section of the younger citizens of the city is there evidence of something real and solid and of definite import. Take for example that remarkable—no, more than remarkable—extraordinary little book, "Heavenly History," by that attractive and extremely youthful young person, Miss Eleanor Follansbee. She looks and writes like a wise, humorous, and lovely young angel. I admit that a humorous angel is decidedly anomalous. But read the book and you'll see what I mean. Besides being thoughtful and interesting, it is the most quotable piece of writing I ever encountered. On each page the attention is arrested by neat and pithy aphorisms. Here are just a few:

"Life is larger than goodness, and the qualities of achievement are ethically neutral; saints and sinners are distinguished by the small ingredient of purpose; it is those who have accepted life passionately who have been pleasing to the Lord."

"It is not our wickedness that grieves him for that was prophesied, but that as we grow older upon earth we become less sensitive to his presence. God must be infinite, for we must progress toward him, yet never reach him."

"As men grew virtuous, they made God less facinorous through the mistaken conclusion that virtue is easier to understand than vice and, therefore, easier to live with, but perfection is unsociable; it is a tacit criticism of the rest of the world and separates one from society."

"Since the few who combined worship and love were not enough to fill the cathedrals, the church discreetly revived fear in religion."

"The weakness of devils is their pettiness; there is a largeness in the ways of God which eludes the reformer; a devil is the reflection of fear and littleness which may explain why wickedness is, in the end, more boring than goodness."

She's Amazing.

It is Joan of Arc returned and put through a modern college training. Had lovely Eleanor lived in the time of the Maid of France she would undoubtedly have been burned at the stake. As it is, the aged reader who has tried to keep up with current writing through many different periods of literature stands amazed at this product of Chicago's culture. Of her task Miss Follansbee says: "I shall not discuss the divinity of God, and the controversy which I wish to stimulate is historical rather than theological." She concludes her preamble this way:

"Smiling at what is serious has never destroyed what is holy; it has, on the other hand, made virtue endurable. I lay sincere claim to my essential reverence and pray, St. Francis, for your blessing." From this foreword she proceeds to discuss heaven, hell, God, devils and angels, general and sundry, and all within the bright blue covers of a tiny volume that you can slip in your overcoat pocket. She's amazing!

Long List of Authors.

Still other manifestations of Chicago's vigorous culture as shown by the youth of the community are the recent writings of such well known members of the younger set as Mr. and Mrs. Graham Aldis, Mrs. James H. Mitchell, Mrs. Preston Boyden, Mrs. Cecil Barnes and Cyrus McCormick Jr. I'm afraid I'm leaving out some one vitally important to my thesis, but can't help it in the hurry of getting this p. p. p. ready for my boss.

The Aldi, to use a Latin manner of pluralizing their name, are an interesting young couple. Until within the last few months Mrs. Aldis was the literary member of the household. Her delightful book of rhymes for children, "Anything and Everything," has reached, according to recent calculations, a sale of something like 13,000 copies. I don't know how many editions this means, but it's a goodly sale. Last summer Graham Aldis contributed to the Virginia Quarterly Review an important article on the "National Budget," which is said to have attracted much attention from those interested in the subject.

Mrs. James H. Mitchell's poems have been commented on before in this col. As Marion Strobel, only daughter of Charles L. Strobel, she was one of the belles of her set. For some years before her marriage she was on Miss Harriet Monroe's staff in the editing of Poetry, that shrine of the poetic muse.

Mrs. Preston Boyden [Polly Chase that was] is another poetess of rare and choice quality. Mrs. Cecil Barnes' short stories, which have been appearing in contemporary periodicals for the last twelve months, have attracted nation-wide attention because of their delightful and ultra literary quality. Her sister, Mrs. Kellogg Fairbank [Janet Fairbank is the name under which she writes], has already made a name for herself in contemporary fiction. Like Minerva, Mrs. Barnes seemed to leap, full grown and equipped, into the arena and has found so ready a market for her wares that she can hardly keep up with the demand for them.

Young Cyrus McCormick recently contributed an interesting article, "Partners on the Pay Roll," to a weekly magazine, the subject being the acquisition by workers of stock in the corporation in which they were employed. It gave valuable information, was so well written and showed such an enlightened outlook and fine point of view that it was interesting and valuable reading to the lay reader of any persuasion.

All these different contributions to Chicago's literary quota are from our younger citizens and are, therefore, indicative of the spirit of today and tomorrow. Yet the outer world hears chiefly the disgusting reverberations of our gangland petty wars and the loud, ungainly clamor that issues from our local government. Poor Chicago!

Annual Crop of Balls.

Our annual crop of balls began unusually early this season. Last week saw three notable ones. On Wednesday the Bachelors and Benedicks danced and frolicked. On Friday the Arden Shore Snow ball and the Arts ball competed for attention and attendance.

The next semi-public affair of this kind will be the Actors' Equity ball, which the First Knighters propose to give Dec. 16 at the Aragon ballroom, that lovely Spanish dream in Uptown square on Lawrence avenue. The promoters of this affair want it distinctly understood that no women are to be bothered with getting this up, that it will be a man made dance, which the maids and matrons can attend with no previously acquired fatigue and no sense of responsibility.

This sounds promising and interesting. When men do things they generally succeed in giving their entertainments animation, snap, and pep, three synonymous terms, but not too much to apply to their social contributions. The affair is in the hands of experienced members of the gay set. The entertainment committee, which is composed of Bernard Granville and Robert Strange, two of the best known theatrical artists here at present, promises a rare and choice program such as could only be produced under the prevailing auspices. Mr. Granville will be master of ceremonies and Mr. Strange stage manager.

The committee in charge of invitations and tickets includes Aubrey James, Joseph Buttas, Evan Evans, Norman Freer, Albert Gardner, Charles Glore, George Knutson, and Ivan A. McKenna. Joseph T. Ryerson and John Wentworth are collecting the patronesses. The box committee consists of Charles G. Cushing and Russell Forgan. Jacob Bischof and John B. Drake Jr. are looking after the supper. Lambert Mullen and Leonard Prince are in charge of the music. Philip B. Maher and John Root will design and carry out the decorations. Stephen Hord and Louis Sudler are floor committee. John J. Finley, Maxwell Lloyd, and Hays Farland are carrying on the publicity, while Ivan McKenna, Ray G. Schaeffer, and G. B. Volland are arranging the souvenir programs.

About the Actors' Equity.

The Actors' Equity is an association with headquarters in New York. Its aim is not merely, or even chiefly, benevolent. Its desire is to promote a better ideal in the management of theaters, to protect the interests of those members of the profession who are not sufficiently prominent to get for themselves due consideration from a certain type of producer who has been known to use sharp practices and unfairness toward those in his employ. This association opposes child labor on the stage and has done much to put the chorus girl on a more secure basis.

It also works here in Chicago to establish a better acquaintance between the well known stage artists and the people who compose Chicago society. In New York the heads of the profession are a part of the city's social life. Such well known actors as the Barrymores and the Drews, just to mention the most conspicuous examples, are a part of the beau monde. Chicago, although it is the second city in theatrical importance in the country, lacks this pleasant companionship. The funds raised by the entertainments given by members of the Actors' Equity are devoted to these purposes, as well as to helping out distressed members of the stage calling.

Frank McIntyre and Evan Evans are co-chairmen and Robert Drum is treasurer for a ball planned by the Actors' Equity. It promises to be one of the season's liveliest and best designed dances, and also will provide an opportunity for those so inclined to meet the famous Thespians who will be in town on that date, which is always an interesting experience. Actor folk are such clever, able, entertaining, and plucky people that meeting them is apt to be a delightful adventure in social contacts. It sounds to me like a most worth while affair.

A Delightful Play.

Apropos of matters theatrical anything more delightful than the Junior league performance of J. B. Greenough's dramatization of Thackeray's famous "The Rose and the Ring" can hardly be imagined. Those young women have talent aplenty and lots of spirit and "go" to them. How Thackeray, himself, would have delighted in seeing Betsinda, Countess Gruffanuff, Princes Bulbo and Giglio, the king and queen and princess and the rest of them in the flesh and going through their fantastic pranks! As it was, the elders in the audience seemed to enjoy it as much on its opening Saturday, a week ago yesterday, as the multitude of youngsters assembled.

The latter were a grand sight, though, and they took that deep and absorbed interest in the play that only the young and inexperienced can enjoy. To them it was all real, not show, and the dusky interior of the Harris theater, where the Junior league is domiciled this year, was aglow with their delicious faces, while their high pitched voices blended in a music Debussy might have envied.

The second performance took place yesterday. There are four more Saturday mornings of this ineffable piece, after which "The Land of Oz" will be put on to run until Feb. 11. Meanwhile, every one who can should take their young offspring to make them early familiar with one of the most delightful classics in the English language. As the individual excellences of this youthful troupe has already been dilated on in the W. G. N., I won't venture further comment, except to say that their understanding humor is entirely satisfying to even the most captious mortal. Those lovely young women who played their parts with such zest and talent are laying up treasures in the hearts of all who make up the audiences at their Saturday morning presentations.

I have not a program by me at the moment, so cannot remember all the names, but Emily Hamill, Frances Oliver, Marion McFadden, Doris Winterbotham, Gwendolyn Fargo, Peggy Owen, Mary Louise Marshall, Edith Gould, and Daisiana Smith will forever be associated in my mind with one of the best, most delightful amateur performances it has ever been my fortune to see.

Next on the program of the Junior leaguers will be "The Land of Oz," which will be put on Jan. 7 and run to Feb. 11. That seems a long way ahead.

I omitted to say that the charming scenery and delightful costuming were from designs by Mrs. Walter Paepke and Mrs. Shreve Badger. Mrs. Bruce Borland is in charge of the sale of tickets.

Opera in English.

I think nothing so completely answers the cry of "Opera in English" advocates as a performance of Rimsky-Korsakof's "Snegoroutchka," as presented by our Civic Opera company. It might as well have been Choctaw that those delightful artists were singing. The only word to be made out was "drunkard," and, between you and me and yon door post, I'd just as leave hear that word in any other tongue, preferably in Russian, the original language of the opera in question.

The opera has never been better presented nor better attended than it is this year. It is encouraging to all who are desirous of making it one of the great features of the Chicago that is emerging from its more simple and unsophisticated past. Perhaps some time in the future we may become as genuinely music loving and as intelligent in our attitude toward it and other music as are those more understanding and innately musical folk across the water, the Italians, Germans, Balkans, Russians, and so on. We Anglo-Saxons can sit at their feet when it comes to music, and its almost universal appreciation among those peoples.

Today's Chief Event.

The principal society event today—and Sunday is a delightful day for forgathering—is the supper and musical to which the John A. Carpenters are inviting their friends at the Arts club. It is their farewell gesture to Chicago for the winter, as they sail Dec. 8 for Italy, whence they will go to Munich, where that famous opera company is putting on Mr. Carpenter's "Sky Scraper" ballet. The Carpenters' charming apartment overlooking the lake on the outer Lake Shore drive will be occupied this winter by Mrs. Leverett Thompson and her daughter, Miss Laura Thompson.

There is no more delightful and chic way of entertaining one's friends than inviting them to a musical. There

Debutante Parties on Week's Schedule

BY MILDRED JAKLON.

SOCIALLY speaking, the city is evidently planning to rest on its oars this week after the hectic conglomeration of balls and gala affairs of the last week. Providentially, the calendar is free of any large functions, though the impetus of the season will be carried on in a pair of important debut receptions, that of Miss Josephine Munroe tomorrow afternoon, and Miss Roberta Harvey's on Saturday.

Two dinner-dances occur the same night, one for Miss Jessie Hosmer, and one for Miss Frances Richardson, a similar affair for Miss Elizabeth Linn on Friday night, a reception to be given by the Alliance Francaise at Mrs. Waller Borden's gray stone residence at the corner of Bellevue place and the drive, for the popular and fêted French artist, M. Bernard Boutet de Monvel, and Mrs. Patrick A. Valentine's and Mrs. Harold A. Howard's silver and jewelry sale at the White Elephant Rummage shop on Tuesday and Wednesday.

Miss Munroe's party is to be given by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Munroe, at their residence at 1234 Lake Shore drive, and will be followed by a dinner party to be given by Mr. and Mrs. Frank G. Logan of 1150 Lake Shore drive for the assisting debutantes and their escorts. Miss Harvey's parents, Dr. and Mrs. Robert H. Harvey, will present her at the family residence at 340 Barry avenue.

Miss Linn's dance, to be given by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. James Weber Linn, is to be at the Blackstone; that of Miss Richardson, who is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph R. Richardson, at the Casino, and Miss Hosmer's at the Fortnightly, to be given by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Philip B. Hosmer.

That is also the date of the first of the two assembly balls which are among the season's most distinguished and elegant affairs. They will be given in the famous gold ballroom of the Congress hotel, where so many great balls have been held.

A French Hero.

On the afternoon of Dec. 1—namely: next Thursday, Mrs. Ryerson is asking her friends in to a tea in honor of her house guest, M. Robert la Montaigne St. Hubert, a noted French artist and a still more noted French war hero. His achievements in art are interesting. His record as a fighter for his country should be unforgettable. The latter won him the "croix de guerre" and that even more cherished honor, the "médaille militaire."

In spite of the fact that he was terribly wounded, losing an eye and almost his life, he has gone on in his art and has evolved a new kind of mural painting which is a matter of moment in the world of art. He is working out a theory of the effect of color on convalescence, which he is carrying out in his murals in hospital work. In France he decorated the American Memorial hospital at Reims with this theory in mind. His method is to put on his color while the lime and mortar and cement are still wet, thus giving a permanency to them impossible in paint laid on dry walls. Instead of the "sad severity" (I quote Miss Sophie Norris on the subject) of the usual institution, the ill are able to look at walls alive with color, interesting with design, instinct with delightful imagination and fancy.

Thereon Mr. St. Hubert reproduces lovely French scenes, familiar landscapes, the daily life of farms, the sunshine and clouds of a summer day, and, to continue to quote Miss Norris, "great swinging clusters of grapes from the fields of Champagne, that are webbed with vines, a glimpse of the sea, and butterflies, and sailboats. But best of all are his children, who laugh from very ecstasy as they lie in their abbreviated shirts tossing their chubby legs amid the frisking kids."

These words are from a description of his work in this American hospital erected in memory of our coöperation with the French in the world war. We may wish to put this grim epoch behind us, but let us remember it when such a soldier-artist comes among us. He is to give some lectures at the Art institute to the students there. Vive la France and her heroes!

To Remind You.

You've been reminded of it many times, but just once more, lest you forget: the annual sale of silver and gold objects, also of jewels, is to take place on Tuesday and Wednesday at the White Elephant Shop on East Ohio street. It is in the hands of Mrs. P. A. Valentine and Mrs. H. O. Howard and their committee. Proceeds will go to the aid of the Children's Memorial hospital.

This announcement is made at the special request of the anonymous publicity committee. Anonymity of a publicity committee sounds anomalous to us poor, pursued, patient purveyors of polite piffle.

NEWS OF NEW YORK SOCIETY

Russians Will Attend Benefit

By Dolly Madison.

NEW YORK.—[Special correspondence.]—New York's colony of Russian refugees is almost as large as that of Paris. One hears much less of them, however, since for the most part they are so reduced in circumstances as necessarily to keep their noses to the grindstone. Among themselves they form a society that keeps within its own bounds, seldom mingling with the rank's of New York's smart set.

In general society they are well represented by Mrs. William B. Leeds, the former Princess Xenia of Russia, and Princess Serge Obolensky, the erstwhile Alice Astor. Then too, Princess Obolensky's sister-in-law, Mrs. Vincent Astor, takes an active interest in Russian affairs in town and lends her cool dignity to gatherings of the nobles of the late czarist empire.

Third Russian Ball.

On the ninth of the coming month the third annual Russian ball will be given at the Ritz-Carlton, where the two previous balls were held. Again Mrs. Leeds and Princess Obolensky head the list of active patronesses.

On these occasions one sees many members of the former Russian court who, at all other times, keep from the public eye. For one thing, Russian ex-nobility has got itself a tremendous black eye owing to the number of imposters who have assumed titles and tried to capitalize them.

There are at least two authentic Prince Dmitris in New York, one of them being a clerk in a noted bank. A third Prince Dmitri long was notable in town and even his exposure as being the son of an Illinois tailor could not curtail his social efforts. Having acquired an Oxford manner, he successfully invaded a well known British club, confessed he was a member of the Romanoff family and was entertained about town until the police gathered him into the Tombs, where he remained several months. On his release he immediately made his appearance about town once more, not one whit abashed by his experience.

Thus the real ex-nobles hesitate to mingle in the ranks of general society where the mere fact that one has a title singles the bearer out for suspicion.

Slav Colony Attends.

The annual ball, given in aid of the Russian Church association and the Russian Refugee Children's association, is the one occasion on which the Russian colony turns out en masse. Then one sees bearded Slavs laden with decorations of the by-gone empire and bearing the scarlet and blue ribbons of their orders on the white fronts of their dress shirts.

This year Princess Obolensky has formed a debutante committee with such notable youngsters on it as Roman Bristow, Betty Tailer, Leila Morgan, and Dorothy Colford.

Among the members of the general committee are Princess Nina of Russia, Prince Christopher of Greece, Princess Chavchavadze, Mrs. R. Thornton Wilson, Marion De Rham, Nancy Yuille, Prince and Princess Serge Gagarine, Prince Dmitri, Mrs. W. Bayard Cutting, and Mrs. E. H. Harriman.

Another Divorce Rumored.

Divorces are so common these days that no one is even a wee bit surprised to hear that another couple are contemplating severing the bonds of their matrimonial tieup. This time it is the W. Rhinelander Stewart Jrs., whose bark is reported on the rocks, with the former Laura Biddle of Philadelphia in Paris and asking of the French courts that they release her from her vows.

Mrs. Stewart is a daughter of Craig Biddle and the late Laura Whelan Biddle and was married to the son of William Rhinelander Stewart barely a year ago, shortly after making her debut.

The marriage of the young people was a social surprise as well as an event, since Willie Stewart had long been looked upon as a confirmed bachelor, in the same ranks as Harold Vanderbilt and the Burke-Roche twins.

His sister is the widowed Duchess de Braganza, who prefers to be known as plain Mrs. Miguel de Braganza and spends most of her time in Newport with her daughter, Nadedja.

Speaking of the Burke-Roche twins reminds me that the younger—since there must be a younger brother, even in the matter of twins—is in town. The Hon. Francis Burke-Roche arrived this last week from Paris, where he is engaged in the banking business, to visit his sister, Cynthia, and her husband, Guy Fairfax Cary.

Mrs. Samuel Alschuler, president of the Chicago section, National Council of Jewish Women, will preside at a luncheon sponsored by the orgānization on Wednesday at the Stevens hotel. This is the first affair of such nature arranged by the Chicago section in several years, and a program of unusual interest will be given.

Jewish Women to Meet This Week

By Kate Webber.

MRS. SAMUEL ALSCHULER, president of the Chicago section, National Council of Jewish Women, will preside at a luncheon on Wednesday at the Stevens hotel, when the national president, Mrs. Joseph E. Friend of New Orleans, and Prof. Edward Sapir of the University of Chicago will speak, and new members will be received into the organization.

The national council, which is in its thirty-fourth year, was an outgrowth of the world congress of religions at the world's fair and was founded in September, 1893. The Chicago section was founded a few months later and has grown to be the largest woman's organization in Chicago, having 2,700 names on its roster.

Fulfills a Unique Function.

The council fulfills to the Jewish women of America an unique and important function as a medium through which women of all shades of Jewish thought find a common basis for expression and service. Its large national undertakings in offering protection to Jewish women and girls who immigrate to our shores, and in providing social, educational, and religious service for the thousands of Jewish farm families scattered about the United States, have won it a wide reputation for vision and efficiency.

It maintains, in the Jewish Charities administration building, a professionally directed immigrant aid bureau, through which it serves annually approximately 800 cases, including nearly [illegible] individuals, in problems arising out of immigration. It conducts classes in adult education, under the direction of the board of education, in eight public schools in congested districts, at the same time providing nursery care for the children of its women pupils to enable the mothers to be free to attend the classes. As a post-graduate course for the women of these classes it has recently initiated mothers' clubs in the schools, conducted by the foreign born women themselves and offering to them an opportunity for information about America.

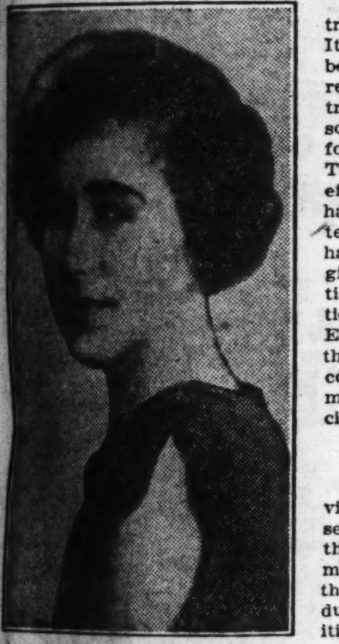
Maintains Summer Camp.

The largest individual work of the section is its Council camp at Wauconda, Ill., where on six acres of wooded and gardened land it maintains a finely equipped summer establishment. There are nine cottages, a central building with kitchen, dining room, and housing for the camp supervisory force, a recreation hall, playhouse, infants' cottage, bath and laundry house, and two shacks for the council juniors who give their assistance to the professional recreation workers. The camp secures its guests through the social and health organizations of the Jewish Charities federation, and from its own immigrant aid bureau. It has a capacity for 150 guests, whom it entertains for periods of two weeks each during the summer months. Last summer there was a record attendance of 960 women and children.



MISS ISLELOUISE CALLMAN.

Miss Islelouise Callman is president of the Baron Hirsch Co-Workers, members of which will sponsor a card party next Sunday afternoon at the Sheridan Brompton hotel, 3520 Sheridan road. The proceeds will be used in the club's program of providing educational facilities for young persons in need of aid.

The section is making its social contribution along various other lines. Its committee on the blind has always been one of its most active. It has recently undertaken the study and transcribing of Braille, and is now absorbed in making books for the blind, for use in the Chicago public library. The committee on the deaf devotes its efforts to securing employment for the handicapped who are its especial interest. A group of Elgin members has undertaken the delicate task of giving personal service and recreational opportunities to the Jewish patients at Elgin State hospital. This Elgin group, being far removed from the section's activities, maintains its contact with the council through monthly group meetings in its own city.

Rural Families Helped.

There is a committee which provides social and religious contacts and service for the Jewish farm families in the Michigan fruit belt; another committee active in sales of the work of the handicapped, produced by the industrial workshops of the Jewish charities. In the field of public health the section, in coöperation with the Red Cross and other health agencies, initiates and conducts courses in home hygiene and general lectures on health matters for the community, using the public schools and the Jewish Peoples' institute as its base of operations.

Its activities in the fields of peace and arbitration, and legislative and civic affairs in the form of active coöperation with the organizations specializing in such work.

The general programs of the council for this year are of outstanding interest. Preceding each meeting there is a study class in religion, in which a course on "The Field of Jewish Education" is being given by leading rabbis and educators. The council has a deep interest in the promotion of Jewish education along religious and ethical lines. It has recently adopted the responsibility of increasing the attendance of the religious schools of the city, and is working actively with the local board of Jewish education in developing such attendance in the schools conducted by the board and by the temples and synagogues of Chicago.

Last spring, after thirty-three years of volunteer effort in conducting its business, it finally opened a central office with an office manager in charge. Increased efficiency in the conduct of its affairs has naturally resulted, together with added convenience to its directorate and to its general membership, as well.

CLUB ETHICS - - - By Maude Swalm Evans

"WHAT did you think of the talk?" the long time member asked as she walked with the lay member from the assembly hall to the dining room in quest of a cup of tea. "Rather an unusual point of view, don't you think?"

"Radical propaganda, that's what I'd call it," answered the lay member, showing considerable feeling. "I think it's about time our club stopped opening its doors to propaganda of every conceivable kind."

"Every cause has had to have propaganda of some kind to make it popular," declared the long time member, "religious doctrines, systems of government. There's good as well as bad propaganda, you know. We can't tell which is which if we refuse to hear any."

"And have our women believe all sorts of queer stuff?"

"You underrate the intelligence of our members. I'm quite sure the great majority can be relied on to think straight and choose rightly," voiced the long time member.

"Like Mrs. Jacks? She believes everything that's glibly put and then goes off half cocked, and there you are."

"And there I'm not," denied the long time member. "Mrs. Jacks is only one. We have 499 others, brain-equipped and able to think and to select for themselves. I, for one, hope our program committee continues to be broad minded enough to open our doors to current thought that seems to them to have value."

"Maybe, as you say, we are perfectly safe as far as any harm it might do us," conceded the lay member, "but some of it seems an awful waste of time."

"Not wholly," refuted the long time member. "It serves to keep our wits alert and working, and we learn what other people are thinking and doing, and that's life."

Question.

"Can the directors or controlling body of a club change the club's bylaws without notifying the members of the proposed changes or giving them a chance to vote on such changes?—R. S."

Reply.

It is generally conceded that members of an organization of any kind must have fair notice of a change in the bylaws and a chance to vote on the changes.

Question.

"One of our bylaws has two interpretations. How can we decide which to follow?—S. N."

Reply.

The more liberal of the two should be adopted if the interests of the club are not injured thereby.

DOWNTOWN CLUBS

Plans have been completed for the convention of the Illinois Republican Women's clubs on Tuesday and Wednesday at the Congress. Mrs. George R. Dean, president, will open the sessions Tuesday morning, and other speakers will be Mrs. Jacob Baur, Mrs. Medill McCormick, and women county treasurers of the state. At a luncheon given at 1 o'clock by the Woman's Roosevelt club, Vice President Charles G. Dawes and Congresswoman Florence P. Kahn of California will be guests. A reception will be given that evening, at which Mrs. Mabel G. Reinecke will speak. ·ART AND ARTISTS·

Palette and Chisel Has Annual Exhibit

By Eleanor Jewett.

AN invitation arrived this week to the annual sketch and auction sale exhibit at the Palette and Chisel club. The exhibit is another of those grateful annual affairs that are like a page of manuscript against the black type that is our daily bread. The club is an organization of artists and dates back many years. It is one of the refreshing things about Chicago that its life should have been so lovingly prolonged. A central meeting place of artists and art lovers is assured in their comfortable quarters. The annual small sketch show and consequent auction are held with the idea of raising funds with which to improve their club house and otherwise continue the club in the most efficient manner possible. As we all know, improvements and replacements cannot be made unless there is money in the purse on which to draw.

There has been an excellent response so far and, if this exhibit rivals its predecessors, that response will grow with the days. Meanwhile the exhibition at 1012 North Dearborn street has a number of delightful paintings to commend it. Two men share honors in the field of idealized spring days when the trees are tipped with tender young green and the meadows are first flushing at the hint of summer. These artists are Leo Marzola and Edward T. Grigware.

Among the beautiful landscapes by Mr. Grigware are "Frogs Retreat," "Over the Meadow," and "Willows." Marzola shows a lovely delicate portrait of spring in his "The Willow Screen." Bringing to mind the magic effects of Rudolph Ingerle, when he allows himself to be carried away by the beauty of the full moon mirrored in a quiet lake, Marzola gives us "Moonlight." In a still life, a composition of flowers and vase, he strikes still another note and leaves with us yet another kind of beauty.

Landscapes and Portraits.

James Topping has several entries. "Breezy Clouds" is rough and brilliant in execution. The force of the wind sings in one's ears. Wind and sky and trees play again in "Autumn," from his brush. A quiet moment is found in the picture of a deep blue-green lake with threads of trees encircling it, "Emerald Pool," so the name runs.

There is a captivating side view of Coolidge by Fred Larsen; a gold point etching of mother and child by Emory Seidel, so exquisite and so human that it is like leaving something of yourself behind when you wrench your eyes from it; a barbaric, semi-nude, "Carmencita," by Glen Sheffer; a fascinating oriental, "Fantasy," by Maurice Greenberg; a beautiful sweep of boats, "Harbor at Concarneau," by Othmar Hoffler; a brilliant piece of color in "Lake Superior" by Holger Jensen; a misty romantic morning in "North Carolina," by John Spellman, and a gay and lively canvas in "The Fruit Market" by Arthur R. Rider.

The exhibition will continue through Dec. 14.

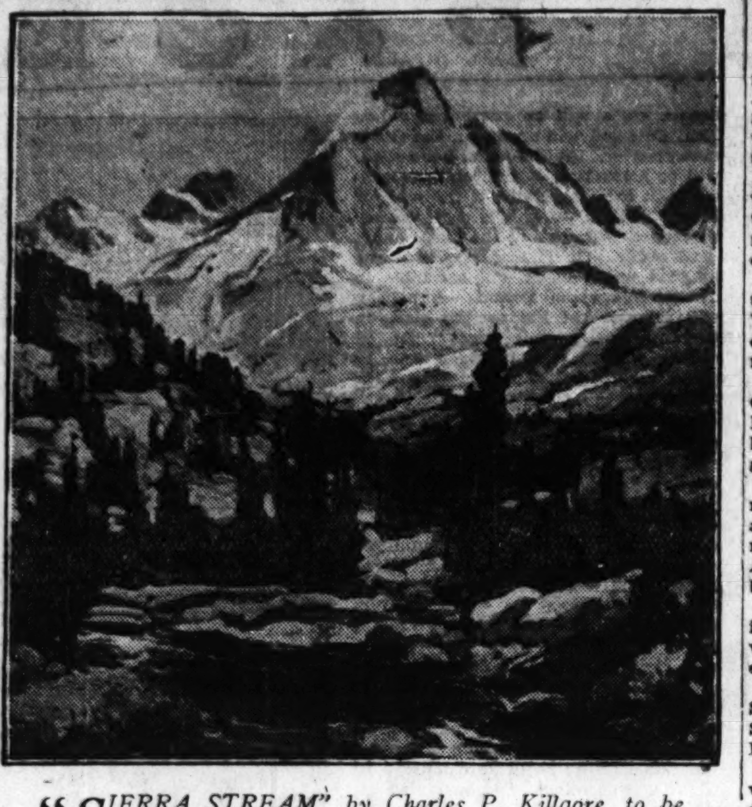
At the Arts Club.

At the Arts club there are three exhibitions. Possibly the most important is that of paintings by Bernard Boutet de Monvel, whose father is well known to all of us through his charming illustrations and marvelously clear and pure murals. A suggestion of the father is felt in a number of Bernard Boutet de Monvel's paintings, particularly in the simpler efforts such as the delicious baby in the bassinet and the little girl with her watering-pot and the two exquisite portraits, one of the artist drawing and the other of an old lady knitting.

In the larger canvases a more individual note is struck. There is the gallant and nonchalant polo player, quite at his ease on the green bench with the rest of the team practicing behind him, giving it all quite a veracious [if humorous] air. There is the slim young officer scouting for danger. There is the boulevardier, a dog of a fellow, sitting very much in character on a park bench. There is a forlorn mansion behind a stiff iron fence and a little old lady making her trembling way from the gates. Is that the poor house she dreads will engulf her, too, some day?



"SIERRA STREAM" by Charles P. Killgore, to be found at the Chicago Galleries in the current exhibition, which will continue through December 7. Two other artists share the exhibition. The one is Antonin Sterba with a group of portraits and the second is Gerald Cassidy with a number of oils, water colors and lithographs.

Then there are Arabs and foreign houses and donkeys, and other Arab boys riding donkeys. A wealth of subjects to choose from, for the few attempts at mural decorations have so far not even been hinted at, and in them all that particular flavor which points the Frenchman.

The exhibit of rugs from Myrbor, Paris, is interesting though perhaps not particularly startling. The sculpture by Boris Lovet-Lorski must wait till next Sunday. Space here forbids more than the mention of its presence.

These exhibits will run through Dec. 6.

From the Column.

A number of letters, immensely gratifying, have come in with regard to the book of verses gathered from the lines that have headed this column during the last several years. The book will appear early in December, and I hope you will like it as well as you say now you think you will. "From the Top of My Column," and the publisher is Ralph Fletcher Seymour. I am quite as much thrilled about its appearance as you are.

At the Illinois Woman's Athletic club there is current an interesting exhibition of French and Flemish tapestries of the sixteenth, seventeenth, and eighteenth centuries, modern tapestries, and a collection of old fabrics and laces from Italy and Spain. They were brought by and are being shown by Madame Jean R. Herter of Paris and New York. Madame Herter is the wife of the grandson of Gustav Herter, who was a pioneer in the business of interior decorating in this country.

Recent sales in the current exhibition of American paintings and sculpture at the Art institute are: "Shepherd Boy," by John T. Nolf; "Hill Country," by Harvey Emrich; "Rocky Mountain Goat," wood carving, by John L. Clarke. It may be of interest to remember that Mr. Clarke is an Indian and is a deaf mute. His handicap has not interfered with his development as a sculptor.

A Play for Children.

In the Goodman theater "The Shining Island" continues to attract crowds of children on Saturday afternoon. The new play on the evening schedule is "Outbreak," written by an Englishman, L. W. Vedrenne.

The final lecture of the three given in Fullerton hall by Dr. Edward Howard Griggs will be given Tuesday afternoon, and the subject to be discussed is "Beauty and the Culture of the Spirit."

In the galleries of the Chicago Woman's aid there is an exhibit of block prints by Charles Wilenosky.

An exhibition of paintings by Lilian Genth, miniatures by Eda Nemoede Casterton, and of etchings by Mrs. Vernon Thomas Kirkbride opened yesterday at the Carson-Pirie-Scott galleries, and will run till Dec. 10.

Timely Recipes

Celery au Gratin

3 cups cooked celery
1 cup celery water
4 tablespoons flour
2 tablespoons butter
1 teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon pepper
¼ teaspoon paprika
1 cup cream
½ cup grated cheese
¼ cup bread crumbs

Make white sauce from butter, flour, celery water and cream. Add seasonings. Arrange alternate layers of celery, cheese and sauce in greased baking dish. Top with bread crumbs, dot with butter and bake in moderate oven 20 minutes, until crumbs are browned.

Squash Muffins

⅔ cup mashed squash
¼ cup brown sugar
1 cup milk
1 egg
1 tablespoon melted butter
2 cups flour
4 teaspoons baking powder
1 teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon cinnamon

Mix squash, sugar, beaten egg and butter, then add the dry ingredients (which have been sifted together) alternately with the milk. Beat well and bake in hot oven about 25 minutes.

Cream Candy
(Uncooked Fondant)

1 cup confectioners sugar
2 tablespoons heavy cream
½ to 1 teaspoon flavoring

Stir sugar into cream and flavoring to make a stiff paste—kneading well to make creamy. Use as a stuffing for dates and prunes; combine with nuts or fruit for cream candy; soften slightly over hot water, color delicately, and drop into patties. Strong coffee, melted chocolate, maple syrup or fruit juice may replace 1 tablespoon of the cream, using more sugar to make it stiff enough.

Spider Corn Bread
(Cooked on top of stove)

1¼ cups cornmeal
1 teaspoon soda
1 teaspoonful salt
2 eggs
2 cups sour milk
2 tablespoons butter

Mix cornmeal, soda and salt, add gradually well beaten eggs and milk. Heat heavy frying pan, grease sides and bottom with fat, turn in mixture, cover and cook 20 minutes over low flame.

Date Delight

6 tablespoons cornstarch
¾ cup sugar
⅛ teaspoon salt
1 qt. milk
2 cups chopped dates
1½ teaspoons maple flavoring
1 tablespoon butter

Mix dry ingredients and moisten with a little of the cold milk. Scald rest of milk in top of double boiler. Stir in cornstarch mixture and cook 30 minutes. Stir constantly until thickened and smooth. Remove from fire, beat in butter, flavoring and dates. Pour into wet molds to chill.

Sausage Apples Wash and core large apples, but do not pare. Fill hollows with sausage meat, or with tiny finger sausages. Place in pan, pour 1 cup water around them and bake in a moderate oven 1 hour, basting with liquid in pan frequently.

Even at this season of the year you will find our four department stores still kind to your pocketbook, for we have no "Christmas prices."

NEWS OF THE RELIGIOUS WORLD

Bureau of Safety Aided by Churches

[Other news of churches will be found on page 10 of this section.]

By The Rev. W. B. Norton.

CHICAGO ministers and churches are coöperating with the safety department of the Board of Education for the public schools. Last Sunday several pastors spoke on the subject in their pulpits and today others will do so. A large number of these pastors have written Frank C. Singleton, director of the bureau of safety, giving reasons why they believe special stress should be laid on this subject in the churches. In essence the reason is this: In the public schools the children are taught to be careful in crossing the street on the walk and look out for signals. A mother drives up in her automobile and parks opposite the school house, Johnnie comes out and the mother beckons him to jump into her car. He crosses the street contrary to the instructions he has received at school and the mother is to blame.

Pastors, therefore, have promised to seek the coöperation of parents to supplement the teachings of the school. The safety bureau not only seeks to teach safety regarding street traffic, but in the various forms of industry and in handling water faucets, gas jets and other danger points in the home.

Tomorrow evening, at the Emil G. Hirsch center, 4622 Grand boulevard, the sixth in the series of eighteen lectures and debates will be a debate on the subject, "Have the Mechanical Aspects of Civilization Advanced Humanity?" John Cowper Powys, England, vs. Horace J. Bridges, Chicago.

On Thursday, from 11 a. m. to 11 p. m., the Church of Our Savior, 530 Fullerton parkway, will hold its annual Christmas bazaar. Dinner will be served at 6 p. m. The Rev. Frederick L. Gratiot, S. T. B., is the rector.

Dr. Smith has been elected executive secretary of the church extension board of San Francisco Presbytery and will begin his work on the Pacific coast Jan. 1, 1928. San Francisco presbytery includes the bay region in the central part of California and Dr. Smith is also to be associate director of the department of immigrant and city work under the board of national missions for the Pacific coast, in coöperation with the Rev. W. P. Shriver, D. D., director of this department in New York City.

For fourteen years Dr. Smtih has held his present position with the church extension board of the Chicago presbytery. His work here has been far reaching and successful and includes the promotion and development of daily vacation Bible schools, of Christian neighborhood houses under the Presbyterian board, the organization of churches in new residential communities and work among the foreign speaking peoples. He was the first chairman and organizer of the social service department of the Chicago presbytery and he started and edited the monthly publication for the church extension board, formerly called the Presbyterian Torch and now called the Chicago Presbyterian.

Dr. Smith is a graduate of the University of California and of McCormick Theological seminary. His honorary degree he received from Blackburn college.

William Boeppler, who is to be given a testimonial concert in Medinah temple next Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock on his 40th anniversary as a musical director, deserves a place in the church as well as in the musical columns. Boeppler was trained as a theologian, as well as a musical artist and has devoted himself during his long career in Chicago to the highest forms of sacred music in the great oratories and in interpreting that master of church chorals, Sebastian Bach. At the testimonial in addition to noted soloists like Claire Dux, there will be a chorus of 600 voices, trained by Mr. Boeppler, comprising the Chicago Singverein, the Bethany church choir, the Lake View Musical society, and the Chicago Bach chorus.

On Tuesday afternoon and evening of this week the Woman's Auxiliary of the Methodist Episcopal Old People's Home, 1415 Foster avenue, Edgewater, will hold open house at the home, closing with their annual reception and Thanksgiving turkey dinner, at which Bishop and Mrs. Edwin Holt Hughes will be honored guests. Americans Abroad Plan Gay Holidays

By May Birkhead.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]
[Copyright: 1927: By The Chicago Tribune.]

PARIS, Nov. 27.—[Special Correspondence.]—The Americans of Paris who did not linger for the Thanksgiving celebrations are now either heading for the exhilarating atmosphere of the mountains or the sunny south. The Chicagoans are notoriously on the move, being divided between lotus eating and winter sport.

Instead of letting the wind whistle through them on Michigan boulevard, a whole batch are going to revel in the snowclad peaks, having chartered a special railway coach that will leave Paris Dec. 17 for St. Moritz. Among the party of fifteen are Mr. and Mrs. Wayne Chatfield-Taylor, also Mrs. George Blow, Mrs. Byron Harvey and her son, Byron Jr. The Chatfield-Taylors recently were guests at a fashionable dinner dance at the Ritz given by M. and Mme. Basily, the latter the former Lascelles Meserve, daughter of Fessenden Meserve, formerly of the National City bank and now a globe trotter.

On the Riviera.

Those choosing the warmer delights of the Mediterranean include the Charles R. Cranes, who just arrived from America and who will go immediately to spend the winter on the Riviera. Among other Chicagoans planning a more extensive voyage are Mr. and Mrs. D. M. Carroll and Mrs. Jane M. Keehn. They have been doing Spain during the month, now are leaving Barcelona and will spend a month in North Africa. On their return they will disembark at Marseilles and also will visit Cannes and Monte Carlo.

Vanni Marcoux, before sailing for America to appear in Chicago, gave a brilliant recital at the Salle Gaveau, where the Parisian public always acclaims his great mastery. M. Marcoux was hailed again by the critics for his richness of artistic resources and perfection of taste, which is the French equivalent to the ancient Greek balance of harmony. He also is a remarkable film actor, having created the rôle of the duke of Burgundy in the picture, "Wolves," recently given at the Opera, in which the epic struggle against Louis XI. was graphically painted.

Plans to Return.

M. Marcoux plans to remain in Chicago until April, when he will return to Paris to sing the leading rôle in the musical version of Shakespeare's "Merchant of Venice," the book by Miguel Zamacois and music by Reynaldo Hahn, director of the opera at Monte Carlo.

Many will recall M. Barthelemy, for years the French consul general at Chicago. Although retired, he is giving at the Institute Catholique a series of lectures on American race problems. France realizes that with the growing colonies of imported colored labor since the war it must face a similar issue. M. Barthelemy, after recounting the origin of race problems in America, remarked with Gallic wit that only the redskins are 100 per cent Americans, but he might include Big Bill Thompson.

Rheumatic Pains All Gone In Five Days

All Walgreen and Economical Drug Stores Invite Every Sufferer to Try Wonder-working Formula on Money Back Plan.

It's hard for you to believe, perhaps—you folks who have been suffering untold agony from the dull, deadening ache that never seems to leave you—that you can get right here in Chicago a remarkable remedy that will bring lasting relief to your torture.

Don't let any doubts or misgivings hold you back from accepting this generous offer that all Walgreen and Economical Stores are making. You aren't risking a single thing to gain a lifetime of release from rheumatic pain, for if this wonder-working formula known as Allenrhu does not completely rid you of every twinge in 10 days the money you paid will be returned promptly.

Remember in taking Allenrhu that while the pains and aches themselves speedily go (usually in the first day or two) you should continue its use for several days longer to help get rid of the uric acid poisoning in your system. And remember further, if after taking it for 10 days you are dissatisfied in any way your money is waiting for you.

94 interesting winter cruises to select from in this booklet

AMERICAN EXPRESS Catalogue of Winter Cruises

UNUSUALLY attractive itineraries, interesting shore excursions and comfortable, modern ships have made cruising the most popular form of winter travel.

It no longer requires great wealth to go. In this season's list there are fascinating West Indies cruises as low as $200 for 16 days. Mediterranean cruises are from $549 for 39 days. Other cruises and those to South America, Africa and Around-the-World are longer and cost in proportion.

Ironing out travel problems NOW at the American Express will mean much to you when en route

Instead of writing a dozen letters or shopping from place to place, it is much more convenient—yet no more costly—to make your selection at the American Express. No matter which cruise you may select, the courteous and impartial experts of the American Express Travel Department are ready to relieve you of the troublesome details of preparation.

Perhaps you would like to see the deck plans?—go over the itineraries more closely?—arrange your passport and visas?—discuss shore excursions?—talk over steamer and hotel accommodations? All these little points are important in the planning of a happy, care-free trip.

Your trip will be much more enjoyable if it is planned ahead

If you cannot call, send coupon for the "Catalogue of Winter Cruises." Pick out the cruises which interest you and let the American Express Travel Department arrange the details.

The AMERICAN EXPRESS Chicago Office is an important link in the great world-wide American Express organization which acts as "right-hand man" to hundreds of thousands of travelers the year around. In this office, our highly-trained travel experts are ready (at no cost to you) to give you the benefit of their long years in planning where to go—how to get there most conveniently and how to get the most out of your trip both for your money and for your time. A visit does not obligate you, so come in at your convenience.

HIST! HERE'S SOME FOREIGN PROPAGANDA FOR OUR MAYOR

British Fashions Rule Our Men Folk, While Milady Looks to Paris

t There's Hope, The Price Is Always American Dollars

GENEVIEVE FORBES HERRICK.

r Mayor Thompson and "Sport" Hermann, and the others ever have that big bonfire of school books alleged to be hostile to the t of America First, they would do l to buy another box of matches, d to touch off a really big display of works, not of text books, but of ion magazines and advertisements. There is propaganda, indeed, in s and perfumes, in cold creams d creamy cravats; propaganda for n and for women.

THE BRITISH INFLUENCE

King George, the sly dressmaker, s a lot of influence over the way e really smart American man's s are held up. He is a force to reckoned with when it comes to er cravats and aristocratic gloves. d, while few local hostesses can persuade their butlers to squeeze their lves into silk stockings and knee eches, still no American butler rthy of his hire would dare look anything save his English cousin. That's for the men. When it comes women, the French costumer, and ir dresser and perfumer, push King rge back on his throne and take r the field. O, Italy, Spain and the ent come in for their cut on publicity, but it's small. The royal road style is still Bond street and the e de la Paix.

THE GENTLEMAN'S HAT

Don't let the mayor and his committee know about it. But here's what learned by just the most casual investigation:

There is a picture of an exciting American football game. A pretty young man, well in the foreground, is wearing a Derby [and be sure that you pronounce the "e" as if it were "a"]. The legend beneath the picture informs that "even at the most brilliant pageants of the year, a gentleman's hat will claim your attention." Such an arresting piece of headgear is fashioned, of course, by a London hat man.

Then there is a message for the men who are "Tuxedo conscious," whatever that may be. A splendid line of thoroughly Tory vestings and facings are recommended. The background of the picture is a jolly English club.

And how is this for a bit of stylish sedition, if that's what you wish to call it? We quote it verbatim:

"Topcoats that carry a bit of Britain with them wherever they go and as long as they last. And haberdashery, remarkably well chosen and moderately priced, that reminds you of the shops at Oxford."

If that be treason, make the most of it. Then there is that new coat for men christened deliberately "Mayfair.".

GOD SAVE OUR BUTLERS

So simple and guileless an implement as a shaving brush may, in the opinion of our city fathers, be an insidious instrument of British propaganda. At least one firm I know suggests "Christmas gifts for new world shavers from old world master brush makers" and has the temerity to advertise "best British brushes."

It is when it comes to the picturization of butlers that American scouts find material abundantly at hand. There he is, perfect for afternoon—black cloth coat and a double-breasted vest, dark gray striped worsted trousers—correct in every detail.

There he is, in the next picture, perfect for evening—dress coat, regulation vest and trousers to match of black dress worsted in the "conventional cloth and cut for butler's evening dress."

Nor does youth escape. What chance, the mayor will doubtless argue, has a little Chicago child against the influence of a pair of correct little British children smiling complacently from the printed page and directing us to the paragraph beneath. The paragraph goes something like this:

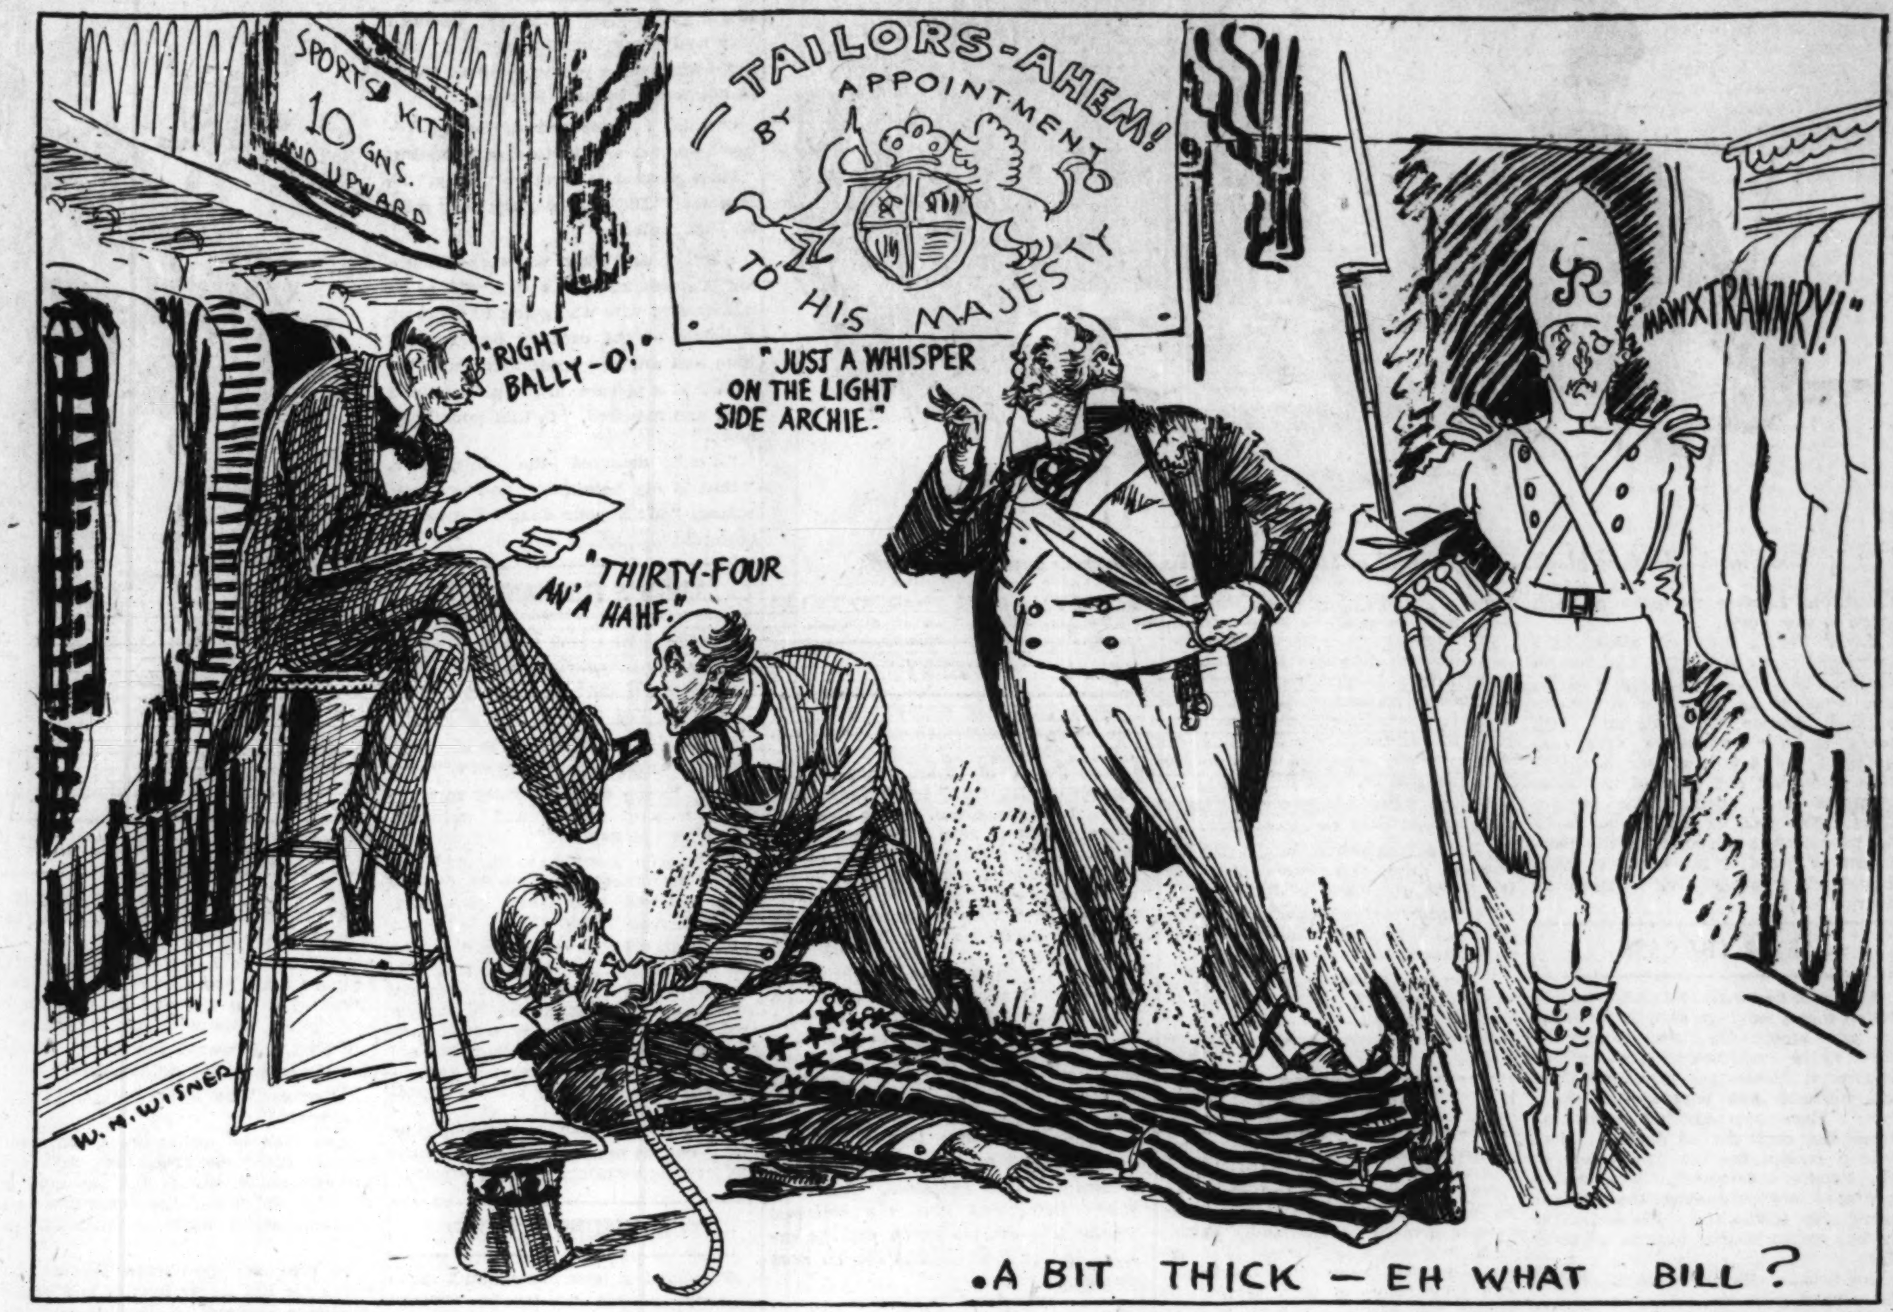
"With such children for inspiration, London fashions for the outdoors reach heights of smartness never quite equaled anywhere else. Here are two examples. A fine wool jersey play frock, straight from the afternoon convocations of nurses and prams in Kensington gardens, and a tweed coat which in its glowing British quality is a veritable breath of Bond street."

TRAITOROUS WORDS

Underline those words — "play frock," "prams," "Kensington gardens," "glowing British quality," and "a veritable breath of Bond street."

Yes, a bonfire of English topcoats and British galluses and the literature solemnly describing them would be a mammoth thing. But right next to it our city censor would have another rubbish heap labeled, possibly, French propaganda. And it would be piled high with perfume bottles, cold cream jars, hair curling fluids, lipsticks, and bath salts containers. The lake level could be raised a monstrous number of inches, even feet, if all the perfume that is said to be Parisian were to be poured into patriotic Lake Michigan.

Why, the adjectives alone that pile up in the announcements of French beauty unguents would fill a telephone book for a city the size, say, of Evanston.



SPORTS KIT 10 GNS. AND UPWARD
"RIGHT BALLY-O!"
—TAILORS-AHEM! BY APPOINTMENT TO HIS MAJESTY
"JUST A WHISPER ON THE LIGHT SIDE ARCHIE."
"MAWXTRAWNRY!"
"THIRTY-FOUR AN'A HAHF."
W. H. WISNER

A BIT THICK — EH WHAT BILL?

IT'S "LA PARFUM"

Here, again, my investigation was casual, and, of course, quite unofficial. In the first place, let us look at perfume, if that isn't a too badly mixed metaphor.

Never, never say "perfume." It is always "Le Parfum"; its particular name is always in French, written in italics, and with the English translation, in brackets, following immediately. It never comes in a bottle, always in a "flacon," and again the italics.

Then there are the descriptive words, adjectives and nouns, sprinkled about so lavishly. There is "allure" and "subtle." There is "naïve" and "sophisticated." And, inevitably and everlastingly, there is "mystery," sometimes spelled "mystere," just to make it more so. Here's one example from so many:

A house of fragrance remarks: "Observing the pageant of loveliness at its Parisian source, 'Abracadabra' company interprets it in smart parfums, and with authoritative artistry this parfumeur has devised three individual odeurs." You can surely guess what the English of "parfums," "parfumeur," and "odeurs" must be, can't you?

A of this enchanting trio is booked as a thrilling fragrance which holds the very essence of the joy of life.

B is the "fresh, eager fragrance of the country after a soft spring rain. It speaks of the promise of youth."

And C is a "glorious bouquet with just a bit of mystery to make it more alluring."

RAVISHING BEAUTIES

And on occasion, the lure may be international, but with little emphasis on Plymouth Rock or the drainage canal. One brand of perfume announces a new odor. We'll call it "On the Go," because that is not its name.

"This fragrance possesses the exquisite charm, the modern feeling of those who are no longer at home on one continent, but roam over the whole world as the impulse takes them. 'On the Go' recalls so many pleasant places and charming people, going over to Paris for new frocks, motoring through shadowy English lanes, flying through the clouds to a country house party. 'On The Go' has an intangible vitality that appeals anew each time one takes the stopper from the French bottle."

Chicago historians may turn their attention from George the Third, to another "third," Napoleon this time. For a certain brand of foreign face cream for local faces announces that "the ravishing beauties of the social and professional world, in Europe, from the time of the third Napoleon, have had Creme So and So in their poudreuses."

If you wish "dramatic eyes," look to France.

Lingerie is said to "charm with a true Parisian accent, with an accent as unmistakably Parisian as if you had bought it on the Rue de la Paix."

A famous dress designer boasts that he gives "sophistication a new twist" in a quintet of models, "rich, alluring and symbolic of enchanting Paris."

ONE BIT OF SOLACE

And so it went, in this quite unofficial and volunteer investigation of mine. English cravats and French eyebrow pencils; London gaiters and Paris perfumes; British brushes and continental cosmetics.

Throughout the gloom of French phrases in italics, and British phrases in capitals I found one bit of solace for the sons and daughters of the Fathers of the American Revolution.

The price is always printed in terms of the American dollars.

"If" Is a Mighty Little Word

It may involve all you have on earth, and all those near and dear to you

If—you have a wife, how can you provide for her a home and safe, regular income within the limits of your wealth, should she become your widow?

—If you have a daughter, how can you give her a share of your estate in such a way that it will be kept apart from the affairs of others and assure her an independent income?

—If you have a son, how can you give him a share of your estate in such way that it will do him most good?

—If you are about to marry, how can you, in spite of the added expenses, provide for the permanent support of your wife, no matter what might happen to you?

If—you have just become a parent, how can you assure, in your present financial condition, some of the advantages you have in mind for your child?

—If you earn much and save little, how can you assure financial independence for old age, as well as proper financial provision for your family when you are gone?

—If your estate will be chiefly life insurance, how can you provide that your insurance funds will give the greatest possible protection to your heirs?

—If you have a going business, how can you provide proved methods to keep your business on an even keel through the period when your absence will be most keenly felt?

—If you are about to retire from business, how can your property be conserved as long as you live? How can you be sure that the eventual disposition of your property will be made exactly as you wish and in business-like speed and impartial fairness?

If—you are burdened with care of property, how can you provide to be free of all annoying details?

The problem of each individual requires special consideration. Laws are complex and rigid; family relations are as varied as the ways of life; therefore each problem must receive individual consideration.

It is that individual attention we give you. This can be equaled by few; it is unexcelled by any financial institution.

One of these questions you must face—some day. Let us answer it for you. Sign and mail this coupon and we will send you, without charge or obligation, a copy of our interesting booklet on "Proved Plans for Solving Estate Problems," which answers all of the above "ifs."

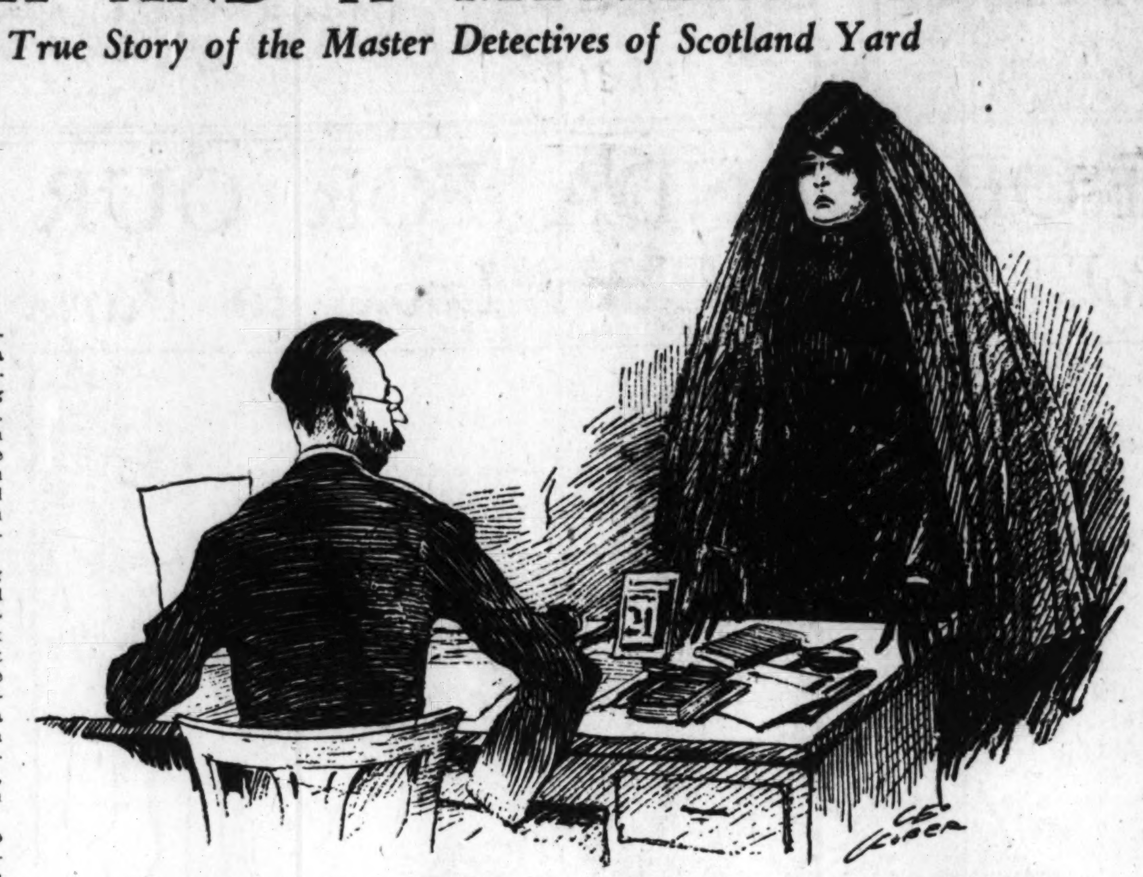
A SLEUTH AND A MYSTERY COFFIN

Another True Story of the Master Detectives of Scotland Yard

Culture Matches Wits With a Man Who Says He's Dead

By George Dilnot.

[Foremost authority on Scotland Yard.]



Clad in the deepest black, she appeared at the office of the insurance company in Paris.

THERE is no doubt that Nathaniel Druscovich ultimately made a fool of himself. He allowed himself to become the tool of a gang of crooks and he paid the penalty. That is a matter of police history with which I have little to do here. The catastrophe of his career was his own fault, but it should not be permitted to obscure the merits of one who in his own day showed many of the qualities of a master detective.

At the time of which I am writing Druscovich was the pet of Scotland Yard, a man of whom much was expected. He had a reputation for quick witted intelligence and resource that had been earned in some remarkable cases. He stood out among his colleagues for the reason that he was a man of culture and education. In those days Scotland Yard men, however effective they may have been, were of a rougher, cruder type than those of today.

A dapper man, something of a fop in dress, was Druscovich, with an extensive knowledge equally of foreign languages and foreign criminals. Nearly every continental case that reached Scotland Yard was passed on to him, and he usually handled them with competence and ingenuity.

PORTLY AND PROSPEROUS

Properly I should have begun this story not with Druscovich but with M. Vital Douat, portly and prosperous, and owner of apparently one of the most flourishing wine businesses in Bordeaux.

He and Mme. Douat, as plump and shrewd as her husband, lived, in a manner becoming the dignity of a great merchant, in a magnificent villa on the outskirts of the town. They entertained on a grandiose scale, and, as you will have perceived, were not least among the citizens of a great city. There may have been malicious tongues, but pouf! any successful man is open to the scandal of the envious. Such people were beneath the contempt of a prince of commerce.

It was strange that a prudent, farseeing man, such as M. Douat was held to be, should have neglected one obvious safeguard for the benefit of his devoted wife until he reached middle age. The cares of business and of social life were heavy. He was to be forgiven if he had forgotten to insure his life.

INSURED FOR $25,000

He recognized the injustice in time. The point was no sooner brought to his mind than he traveled to Paris and opened negotiations with one of the biggest insurance companies in France. With a touch of pomposity he explained who he was and presented introductions. He proposed, if arrangements could be satisfactorily made, to take out a life policy for a sum that in these days would be represented by between $25,000 and $35,000 in United States money.

So impressive was his demeanor that the insurance company smoothed the way for him and, after a medical examination, he paid the first premium and returned to Bordeaux with the policy in his pocket. With a devotion that was only natural he confided the document to his wife.

Shortly after this it became a matter of comment in certain circles in Bordeaux that all was not well with the affairs of M. Douat. He carried his head as high as ever, but there were firms who felt they had been a little incautious. They had extended credit to the limit with the plausible Douat and they thought it was time he should show the color of his money. The wine merchant airly waved these things aside and pushed in several more large orders. These were not accepted and it was made evident something would have to be done about the cash question.

WIDOW'S WEEDS

At this crisis M. Douat took a plunge that has been the resource of lesser men. He went bankrupt.

Odd to relate, his misfortunes did not arouse the sympathy of his many acquaintances. There were not wanting slanderers who hinted Douat had not made a bad thing out of his bankruptcy and that he still had a well filled stocking stowed away somewhere.

So persistent was this story that the authorities began to pry into it. M. Douat resented the slur on his good faith. He shook the dust of Bordeaux from his feet, embraced his dear wife—they could not prove any fraud against her—and departed unostentatiously to London to make a fresh start in the world.

Mme. Douat, thus left alone, bore up uncommonly well. She had lost no weight when, clad in the deepest black, she appeared at the office of the insurance company in Paris and, with tears in her expressive eyes, announced the death of her husband. Her grief had not affected the most complete and business-like precautions. She had, in order and ready for the strictest inspector, all the documents of proof of the death of Vital Douat. Her story was complete in every detail.

AFTER THE CASH

When he had gone to London he had taken mean lodgings at a little house in Ann street, Plaistow. There on Nov. 29 he had died of aneurism of the heart. Here was a certificate from the medical man who had attended him. Here was another certificate from the registrar of deaths. Here was a receipt for the burial fees at St. Patrick's cemetery. The widow ventured to presume that these things were only formalities. No doubt the money would be paid over at an early date.

An urbane official spread his hands in a bland gesture.

"We shall be happy to expedite a settlement by every means in our power," he said. "If you will leave these documents with me the matter shall be put in hand at once."

"How long will it take?" demanded the business-like madam.

He lifted his shoulders. "I cannot say. There is a routine—a method—in these matters. It may be a week—ten days. When we are satisfied."

Mme. Douat caught him up quickly. "When you are satisfied! What more do you want? Surely these papers show without doubt that my husband is dead?"

OVERPLAYS HER HAND

This was the point at which Mme. Douat went perhaps a fraction too far. The official was struck. Why should she be so extraordinarily eager? There was something in her manner as well as in her words that made an impression on his mind. It was not altogether usual for a grief stricken widow, hard upon the death of her husband, to come quite so completely prepared with formal proofs as this lady. The thing might be entirely straightforward, but it would bear looking at.

He put a few polite but searching questions to the woman, and her replies determined him that it would be well to withhold the money until a great deal more was known about the dead man and about her. After all, only one premium had been paid on a comparatively big life insurance.

So, at last, he dismissed her, and an emissary was dispatched down to Bordeaux to learn something about the couple. On his report a great light was borne upon the company. The coincidence of life insurance, fraudulent bankruptcy, flight and death was far too extraordinary. When the lady renewed her demands with threats of legal intervention unless the claim was immediately settled she was met with a refusal framed in terms not quite so polite as before.

HOW TO PROVE IT?

But, however suspicious the circumstances might appear, the company officials knew that unless they could prove a swindle they would sooner or later have to pay. So they consulted a high official of the Service de Surete—the French detective force—who informed them Douat already was wanted for the fraudulent bankruptcy affair. It was believed Douat really had gone to London. The detective said he would ask Scotland Yard to look into the matter.

So it was that the papers ultimately were passed over to Druscovich.

"It's a funny business," said Williamson, the superintendent. "See what you can make of it."

"If these certificates are authentic," observed the other, "this man should be dead and buried."

"The insurance company is inclined to think that the death happened at a very convenient time for the lady," remarked Williamson, and Druscovich nodded.

ON THE TRAIL

The Surete had ascertained the date and the boat on which Douat was believed to have sailed, but there was no record of any one of that name having arrived in England. Druscovich studied a passenger list and made precise inquiries of the manner and appearance of each person. He struck the names out until only one was left. That was a gentleman who called himself Signor Roberti.

By all accounts Roberti was a jovial, fat Frenchman. No one knew who he was or where he had gone to after landing. The detective inclined to a strong impression that Roberti could be no other than the bankrupt fugitive.

Druscovich went to have a look at the house in Ann street, Plaistow, which had been given as the place of death. It proved to be a dingy workman's dwelling, which a weatherworn notice board proclaimed to be to let. The landlord was easy to find and was quite willing to tell all he knew.

DEATH OF A FRIEND

"There was a foreign gentleman took the place a few weeks ago," he said. "Called himself Bernardi. He couldn't speak English very well but, as far as I could understand him, he was a waiter or something like that, and he wanted a place where he could stay and look after a sick friend. References? No, he gave me no references. He did better than that. He paid a month's rent down, and that was good enough for me."

"Did you see anything of his friend?" asked Druscovich, casually.

The landlord stroked his chin. "No. Can't say I did. Struck me as funny at the time. He hadn't been there a day or two when he told me his friend had died. There was something wrong with his heart. Bernardi gave him a grand funeral—it took place on a Sunday—but he never came back to Ann street again. I reckon he didn't care to stay in a place where his pal had died."

Some hours Druscovich spent in chatting to other inhabitants of Ann street. It became plain that Bernardi was the jovial Roberti of the boat. But in Ann street he had kept close to his rooms and had scarcely spoken to any one. No one had seen his friend, nor had a doctor been noticed calling at the house. Druscovich began to consider the possibility that he had stumbled on a case of murder.

FORGERY

He already had assured himself of one thing. If the death certificate was a forgery it had not been written by either Douat or Mme. Douat. The signature was hard to decipher and there was no address. After close examination he read the name as "Critti." The reference books showing there was a doctor of that name, Druscovich called upon him. The doctor examined with a puzzled face the sheet of paper he was supposed to have signed.

"This is certainly a forgery," he declared. "It is not in the least like my writing and there is no attempt at imitation. I have never known a man named Vital Douat, and I have certainly never attended a patient at Plaistow. I know nothing at all about it."

(Druscovich found Douat's coffin and caused it to be reopened. What he found there and how the criminal finally was run to earth will be related in the Metropolitan section next Sunday.)

Planes Revolutionize Polar Exploration, Says Gen. Nobile

BERLIN.—(AP)—Gen. Nobile, the Italian airship constructor and arctic aviator, in a lecture on "The Airship in the Service of Arctic Exploration" at the Charlottenburg Polytechnic, described how aviation had completely revolutionized polar exploration, pointing out that today it was possible to fly from Spitzbergen in 16 hours to the spot which took Fritjof Nansen in 1898 three days to reach.

Of the two means of aerial locomotion, Gen. Nobile gave preference to the airship, from which he said, better and more scientific investigations were possible than from an airplane, because it could be brought to a standstill in midair at a certain height, besides allowing of a greater radius of action.

From the experiences of his polar flight, May 11 to 14, 1926, the speaker deduced that to prevent the formation of ice on the airship it was necessary to cover all metal parts with a thick layer of grease and, above all, the propeller should be rendered immune against ice formation. The fatal influence of low temperatures on motors with gas valves was also to be considered. From Spitzbergen, he declared, many important flights could be undertaken, provided more appropriate bases than now existed were established.

TURNING THE TABLES.

He had bored her to distraction with his continual talk about himself. At last he produced an album of photographs and showed her a portrait of himself as a small boy upon his father's knee. The girl saw her chance, and took it.

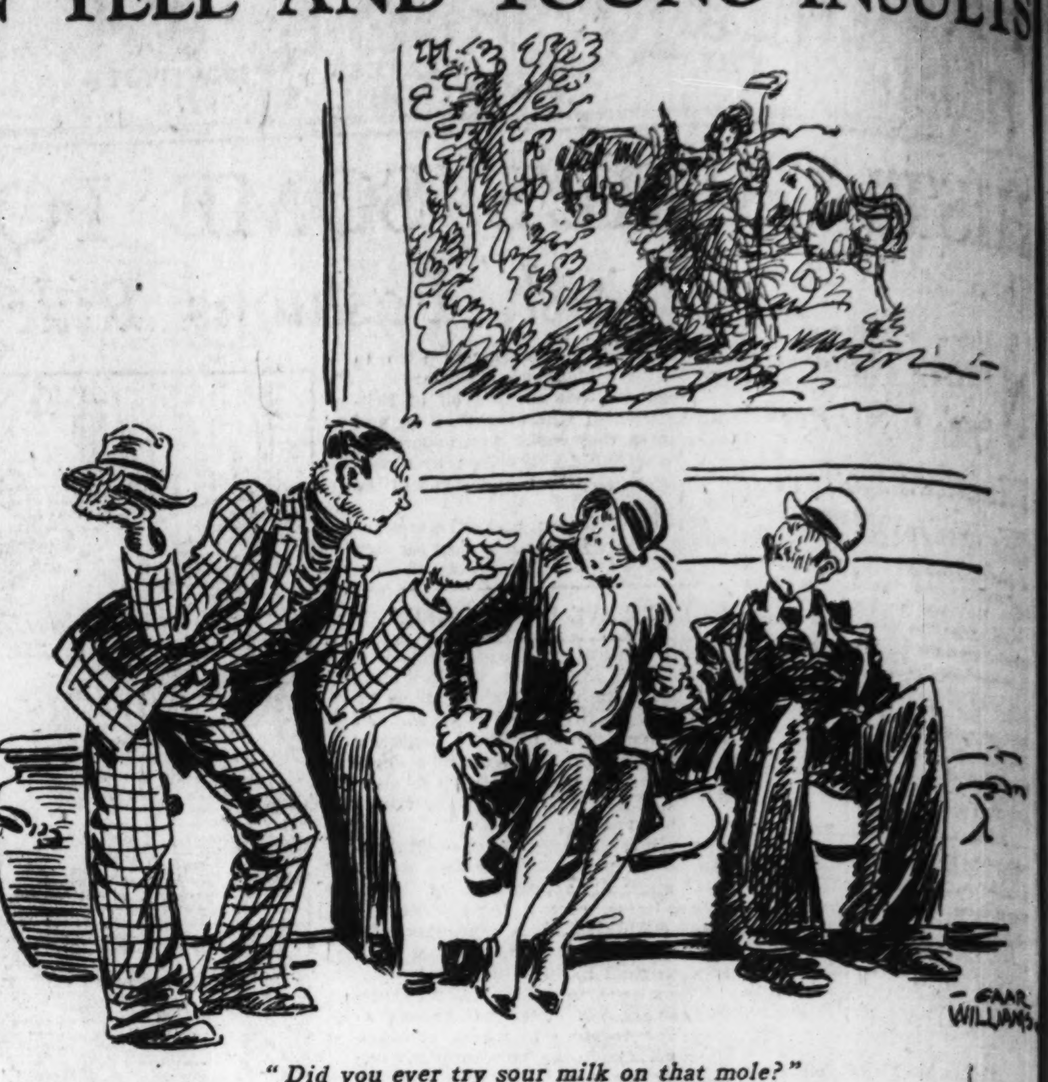
HOLLERAN YELL AND YOUNG INSULTS

Uncouthness Doesn't Pay

By Westbrook Pegler.



"Did you ever try sour milk on that mole?"

WHEN I was the manager of Young Insults I used to work my brains out at all hours of the day and night getting him out of predicaments, as he was always going around cracking insulting remarks at people in a very uncouth way and every time he would do this it would cause a predicament as these people would become insulted.

One day I introduced him to my loving helpmeet and instead of asserting "I am pleased to meet you, lady," he asserted, "Did you ever try sour milk on that mole?"

Another day when we were discussing business matters with a well to do millionaire, who was going to promote a battle of the century between my bum and another sportsman, my bum looked at a picture on the millionaire's desk and inquired, "Is that your helpmeet?"

"Yes," asserted the millionaire, "that is my helpmeet," and my bum stated, "With your dough I could do better."

HOW'S THE GANDER?

Another time I took him to an exclusive society mansion to box an exhibition contest in the ballroom before some refined society leaders and after the exhibition, they invited us to eat some repast. So while we were eating our repast, Young Insults turned to a refined society leader and inquired, "How is the gander?"

"What do you mean, gander?" inquired the society leader, so I explained in a cultured way that he meant, "How is your husband?"

"O," stated the society leader, "he has gone away," and of course, by this she meant that her gander was deceased, as the refined way of stating that a party is deceased is to state they have gone away. But my bum was not familiar with these customs and he thought this exclusive matron meant something else.

"Well," he stated, very uncouthly, "if I had as much funds as you have got I would certainly get him paroled."

FUN MISUNDERSTOOD

This kind of ignorant conduct made it very difficult for me to manage Young Insults. Some times he would insult officers of the law and they would put him under glass, as the slang expression goes, so I would have to wear out my brains all night long obtaining a bondsman and in the morning I would have to pay a lawyer the sum of $25 or $50 to tell the judge that my bum was just a playful, high spirited athlete and how his exhibitions in the roped arena were helping little boys to grow up with a love for self reliance, fair play and good citizenship.

Then I would have to spend some more funds for a doctor because usually the police officer would continue the good natured tussle with my boy after he got the handcuffs on him and got him in the cage and this often caused little injuries, such as a slight fracture of the skull, or the loss of a few teeth.

Whenever I would put Young Insults into the squared circle for a contest he would insult his adversary. He would smile politely, but it seemed that he could not learn anything about tactfulness, so his adversaries would always become insulted. Sometimes he would grab his adversary around their neck and whisper in their ear, "Well, I see that your loving helpmeet was running around with a bookmaker while you were fighting over in Scranton." Or, he might remark, "I hear your old mother is going to the poorhouse. That is too bad."

This would irritate this adversary and they would fling science to the windows so the contest would disintegrate into a disgusting mockery on the art of self defense, with my gentleman remaining cool and pasting the other bum in a very skillful way.

WHERE IGNORANCE IS SMART

"Why are you always cracking insults at your adversary?" I used to inquire of my bum.

"O," he would say, "I suppose it is because I am just an urchin from the dregs of a big city and do not know any better because I am ignorant."

"Well," I would continue, "why don't you take up refinement?"

"Because," he would assert, "I am too smart."

And then he would crack some insulting comment about me, and his favorite insult was to call my nose a gin lily, which was the same thing as accusing me of using too much stimulant.

In time my gentleman became famous for his clever insults and other pugilists refused to box with him, knowing that he would insult them and cause them to fling science to the windows and get pasted on their kisser. So I would sit around my favorite relaxing resort, relaxing for days at a time, trying to get up enough energy to think up some scheme to get him a contest to earn some resources. But every time I would approach some gentleman for a contest with their bum they would say, "My dear sir, we will fight your bum when he loses his voice so he cannot insult my fine, clean living, sensitive sportsman."

"YOU, TOO, JUDGE?"

It was impossible to meet him without being insulted more or less. One morning when he was in court the judge asked if he was intoxicated the night before and he replied, "You and me, both."

Thirty days later when I called for him at the jailhouse I was greatly cheered to learn that he had a very bad cold from sleeping without any blankets because he insulted the keeper and he could not speak because he had lost his voice.

"Well," I remarked brightly, "you can't insult anybody just now so I will obtain a contest for you at once because I have been sucking my paw for thirty days and I am practically in the hands of the receivers without any bum to earn funds for me."

So I obtained a contest with a prominent young bum by the name of Emil Evil, assuring his manager that my gentleman was entirely dumb from this cold and could not crack any insults. But when I informed Young Insults about this affair he took a piece of paper and wrote: "Send for Prof. Lorenzo, the tattooing artist, as I wish to be tattooed."

Thinking this was just some boyish whim, I got the professor and he brought his needles and ink and a lot of designs, such as butterflies and schooners and lodge emblems.

"What about a nice rock of ages on your chest," the professor suggested. My bum shook his head and wrote on paper:

"No rock of ages. Tattoo on my chest, 'I am fighting a bum,' in red and blue letters six inches high."

It took a couple of days for the tattooing to dry out, but in the meantime his cold became so bad that I called the doctor who used to sew up his head when he would get arrested.

"You have a bad case of bronco trouble and I will have to stick a pulling plaster on your chest," asserted the doctor, and with that he pasted the pulling plaster right over the tattooing.

My bum wrote on the paper, "That is fine, as we will leave the plaster in place until I enter the squared circle and then we will pull it off and unveil this tattooed insult to my ad sary."

But, my dear sir, when we en the squared circle, our adversary manager did not give us a chance unveil the tattooing, as he grab the referee by the arm, walked o to our corner and said, "That pl will have to come off, as it's agai the rules."

So he reached out and gave the pl ter a yank, but it stuck so hard t when it came off it took away p of the tattooing. And the word th came off on the plaster was the m dle word so that instead of rea "I am fighting a bum," the tattoo asserted: "I am a bum."

Well, the patrons of the many began shouting "Insults is a bu and Emil Evil finally spelled out sign, too, and began remarking " sults is a bum."

The result was very unfort because my stiff lost his temp threw science to the windows and knocked into a state of unconscio ness. So ever since then I have b careful to avoid insulting people, my bum was a sad example of h a man can carry the habit to s extremes that he will let fly wit terrific insult and find that he insulting himself the worst of all

Queen Victoria Ate Rapidly; Guests Hard Pressed

LONDON.—(AP)—Queen Victoria was such a rapid eater that her guests had to speed up to keep their plates from being snatched away from them before they were half finished.

This fact is revealed in Lord Riblesdale's "Impressions and Memoirs," which has just been published under the authorization of his daughter, Lady Wilson.

Queen Marie of Roumania, bears a resemblance to her distinguished grandmother in this respect. Guests at the royal board in Bucharest have the same race the late Lord Riblesdale says.

Of course royalty is served first and gets started on its food ahead of humble guests, and royal servants are such sticklers for form that everyone has to stop eating when the ranking member of the royal family has finished a course.

Home Is Where You Change Clothes

LONDON.—(AP)—English home is being killed by automobile Instead of wanting homes to to, people want hotels and f to go from.

This is the opinion of a vete London architect, C. F. Annesley V sey, who has been designing Eng houses for 53 years. He is 70 y old.

In his younger days he was busy designing houses, but with advent of the automobile he fi time to plan public buildings, war m morials, tapestries, and fine carpets.

FROM OBSCURITY TO STARDOM VIA THE CABARET

Haunts of Chicago's Night Life Have Sent Many Entertainers Out to Amuse the World

GILDA GRAY.

Gilda Gray and Sophie Tucker Got Their Starts Here

By Kathleen McLaughlin.

NOW that it's only a question of time until hip flasks will be subtracted by legal process, not guaranteed painless, from the devotees of Chicago's night life and the prohibition shock troops are preparing to rout the last feeble rays from the cabarets, old timers have reverted to avid discussion of the "good old days."

What their conversation is actually intended to convey, of course, is the conviction that they were in reality the bad old days. A picturesque naughtiness, you understand. But, as compared with the night clubs of this age of soft drinks and tablecloth snifters, distinctly devilish.

A prolific source of argument—the exact ratio of Chicago's morals, past and present. A by-product of these reminiscences, however, proves vastly more interesting, dealing as it does with personalities instead of generalities; with the rise of former favorite entertainers as contrasted with the fall of John Barleycorn.

FORTUNE IS FICKLE

Fortune may be a fickle lady, but she has seen fit to smile benignly upon more than one of the boys and girls who once hoofed it uncomplainingly for a paltry salary in the city's nocturnal haunts. Some of those who were graduated into the theatrical big league are still twinkling as bright particular stars in that constantly changing firmament. Others have drifted into the oblivion of the Never-Never land.

It doesn't seem to be anywhere on record what a cabaret prima donna thinks about as she fixes the suspender salesman from Great Meadows with a limpid eye and warbles about one or the other of the inevitable trio from Tin Pan Alley—her mammy, or her sweetie, or the moon.

But ambition flames as brightly under the incandescents in the stuffy atmosphere of a night club as in sun flooded office or factory. And if the songstress be the kind of girl who visions herself as a sometime headliner on Broadway, the chances are about fifty-fifty that she is hoping against hope that the suspender salesman is really a Follies' scout with a discerning eye for potential talent, and that she isn't grandstanding in vain.

SHIMMYING GILDA

For precedents, if she needs to comfort herself with such reflections, there is the meteoric career of Gilda Gray, which gathered its first momentum in the resorts in Chicago devoted to dancing, dining, and drinking.

The last, it might be remarked in passing, was not the least of these in those days, being indulged in with gusto by citizens of whatever strata of the social scale, whenever the impulse moved them. It was the pre-Volstead era.

It was no theatrical scout, it chanced, who piloted Gilda of the uncertain shoulders into the path of fame and wealth in which she has strolled—or shimmied—through ensuing years. It was the enterprise of Gilda herself [born Maryanna Michalski of Milwaukee] that brought her her opportunity.

As an entertainer in the old Arsonia café, at Madison and Paulina; at the Entertainers, then operated at 35th and Indiana avenue by Doner and Gerald, and at other centers of Chicago's night life during the decade that preceded national prohibition [which automatically wiped out many a gay rendezvous], the little Polish girl did her song and dance and received her meed of applause. In those days she was billed as May Gray.

ROBBED OF JEWELS

Seeking new fields to conquer, May went to New York and made her home with a girl friend while she sought a job. She found it in the cabaret of Gil Boag, and there New York found her and the divertisement she offered—and the lean days were over.

Having already changed her first name from May to Gilda, it was in the natural course of events, it seemed, that she change her last to Boag. She has been the wife of Gil Boag, her former employer, for several years.

In the interim before her marriage, Gilda returned to Chicago for engagements here, and on one occasion, returning from an evening's appearance at a local theater, reported to police that she had been robbed of $50,000 worth of jewels. Nor was she prostrated by the loss. Her attitude of self-possessed concern intimated that even if the holdup men never were apprehended she would continue to gleam and glitter as of yore.

Little wonder that Gilda Gray's success has set a mark for the girls who nightly parade their talents to Chicago cabaret crowds. But it is not without its rivals.

SOPHIE STARTS HERE

There is, for instance, the blonde and buxom Sophie Tucker, one of the original "coon shouters." The "I knew her when" fraternity credits Sophie with having been Chicago born and bred. Be that as it may, there is little doubt that she was Chicago made, professionally. It was a Chicago newspaperman who discovered her and nicknamed her "The Mary Garden of Ragtime," a sobriquet that has stuck to the singer with the praiseworthy tenacity of flypaper.

Sophie's early stamping ground appears to have been generously distributed over the west side and in the loop. She is reported to have caroled her syncopations with vim and vigor at a place owned by Dave Lewinsohn, on the roof of the old Masonic temple, now the Capitol building.

From there she went with Lewinsohn as one of his stars to an establishment he opened at Wabash avenue and Congress street at a salary said to have been $50 a week. This cabaret, known as the Congress café, was for a considerable period one of the most popular places in the city. It is credited with being the first to introduce a floor show such as is common today, the production, with its small chorus, pointing the way toward the frequently elaborate revues now seen.

As for the measure of Sophie Tucker's progress, she has sung her sonorous ballads with unflagging zeal and at a constantly increasing weekly stipend, both in America and in Europe, until her present salary is reported, on apparently good authority, to be $3,000 every seven days.

One more mark for the mammy singers to shoot at was provided in days gone by through another blonde beauty, Bee Palmer, who shared—or rather disputed—with Gilda Gray the doubtful distinction of having originated the shimmy.

The old Arsonia knew Bee Palmer; so did the Congress café; so did the frequenters of both. She was a favorite in Chicago long before she followed the trail blazed by Gilda that led to Broadway and the Follies.

Later she toured the country in a vaudeville turn with her husband and accompanist, Al Siegal. Domestic strife that culminated in an alienation of affections suit for $250,000, filed by Siegal against Jack Dempsey, and a divorce decree seem also to have been her final bid for public attention.

Bee blamed her husband's professional jealousy of the applause she received. Siegal blamed the unprofessional attentions he charged the then matrimonially unhampered Dempsey had paid his wife. Jack claimed that he hardly knew the actress and there is no evidence that his claim ever was refuted or that the acquaintance cost him so dear.

The further matrimonial adventures of the comely Beatrice, who, like Sophie Tucker, was a Chicago product, are veiled in the same haze of uncertainty that clouds her professional career. Certain it is that her fame has not endured to the degree attained by her old time rival, Gilda Gray.

DALE WINTER SUCCEEDS

Then there was Dale Winter, who began in a south side church choir and wound up in the carbarets. Although she became best known as the second wife of "Big Jim" Colosimo, whom she married just a few weeks preceding his assassination in his own café on Wabash avenue, the erstwhile Sunday school girl showed promise of talent that might have led her along the paths of glory in the musical world, to which she aspired, according to those who say they know.

The expensive lessons Colosimo provided, however, went the way of the luxurious gowns and the gems she could have commanded as sole heir to his fortune after his death. But legal experts ruled that her marriage in another state took place too soon after his Illinois divorce from his first wife to be legal in this commonwealth. So the first wife inherited the property, and Dale Winter went into musical comedy.

And thus the success sorority of Chicago cabarets added one more to its growing list of alumnæ, for she did well by herself and her backers.

A few years ago Dale Winter married the San Francisco actor-producer, Henry Duffy. Not only has the marriage endured, but she is reputed to have scored socially on the west coast. As the high school annual used to say under the photo of the sweet girl graduate, "Her ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace."

SO DOES RAE SAMUELS

Scintillating as brightly as ever she did in the old days at the Congress café, which seems to have sponsored an extraordinary number of popular performers, vibrant Rae Samuels still writes her name in electric lights and her fame in four figures weekly. Her most recent visit behind local footlights was less than a month ago.

As a character singer Rae Samuels developed a personality that needed little grooming to blossom full blown into star material. It may or may not have helped that she married one Marty Forkins, a prize fighter who turned theatrical booking agent. They went east, and under her husband's management Rae climbed steadily into further favor with her songs and skits.

These, though, do not by any means comprise the sum total of the stars who will attend if the sorority ever stages a homecoming. Valeska Suratt will be there. So will Frances Kennedy—now retired to quiet domesticity, by the way. So will Nora Bayes, née Goldberg, who gravitated to Chicago, like Gilda Gray Boag, by way of Milwaukee. And scores of lesser celebrities.

But what of the younger generation that clogs and clowns from dusk to dawn to charm dull care away for the night club dalliers and to keep the cake in the cuboard? The law of averages is taking care of its own, one hears. For instance, two little dancers from the Midnight Frolics have recently been recruited into featured rôles in the Follies. They are Dorothy Ellsworth and Olive McClure.

MUCH STRICTER NOW

Things in the cabarets are not what they were in the "good old days," say the old timers. And "they certainly aren't," agrees Ernie Young, Chicago producer, to whom the majority of the girls looking for cabaret positions apply sooner or later.

"Then," he explains, "it was part of the work of the entertainers to mingle with the patrons and to dance with those that wanted partners, or otherwise see to it that they enjoyed themselves. Now a cabaret that permits its girls to visit at the tables is classed as a 'joint.' In the majority of the better cafés the girls are not even permitted to enter through the restaurant. They must use a side door, and may have no callers except in the social room provided for that purpose back of the stage—if there is one.

"They used to get by and into the shows even if they were green as grass, but we are coming more and more to demand some sort of training. Most of the girls that come to me now are youngsters, some from country towns, others from Chicago. Lots of 'em bring their mothers with them the first time. We're more particular than we used to be, and the general run of girls is all right, though, to be sure, a hard one slips through now and then."

The standard wage for the revue chorus girl seems to be $35 a week. Featured members of cabaret productions receive anywhere from around $100 up to $300 weekly. Beyond that horizon lies stardom and the sky-rocketing salaries.

BOYS MAKE GOOD

They would scarcely be eligible for membership in the sorority, but two of the sterner sex attained, measure for measure, as sterling success as any of their fair contemporaries among the footlight favorites.

One is Frisco, whose little known first name is Joe, and whose original port of entry was Des Moines, Ia. The other is Bob Adams, who with Sidney Gibson as a partner used to convulse the patrons of Freddie Train's old stand, on Wabash, near 22d, with their musical acrobatics.

Adams and Gibson were the first to intersperse their duties with sessions of mountain climbing and what not on the piano, which came in for a lot of punishment. They usually ended up their stunts by walking down the keys. Adams became a rolling stone that gathered plenty of moss. He is a headliner in Europe today. Gibson remains in Chicago, comparatively obscure.

From a sidewalk shuffler with music in his heels, who would perform any time, anywhere, for pitched nickels and quarters, Frisco evolved into one of vaudeville's most highly paid attractions. He started the strut, they say, and, for all I know to the contrary, he may be strutting yet.

Pigeons Steal Metal for Nests

LONDON.—(AP)—The management of a firm of iron and steel merchants was greatly puzzled over the mysterious pilferings of bicycle spokes, fragments of iron, and small pieces of sheet metal from the yard.

A close watch was kept, and the thieves were detected.

They proved to be pigeons, and they used the metal for their nest. Their home was 16 inches high and weighed 22 pounds.

German Airman Flies More Than 300,000 Miles

BERLIN.—(AP)—Max Kahlow, one of the oldest and most experienced pilots of the German Lufthansa, was feted by his colleagues on the occasion of completing his 300,000th mile in the air.

Kahlow started his career in 1913 as an army flyer. After the war he turned to commercial aviation. His regular passenger flights to London marked a milestone in the development of international traffic.

Speed of passenger planes has increased enormously of late. A flying record was established by the regular service airplane on the Cologne-Halle-Leipzig route, representing a distance of 250 miles, which were covered in 100 minutes, an express train requiring more than seven hours for the same stretch.

STORIES of GIRLS

Catherine and the Wedding Cake.

By Margaret Orr.

THE men were coming down the river on a barge. The night was foggy. Nobody knows what happened. But the men and the boat went down. The news ran for two days in the papers. Then it was forgotten.

Except for the folks living in that old white house near the railroad, between two tenements. Men from these three houses were on that barge.

In the attic lived Lena. She had just married Joe. She was a weak little thing with a certain flimsy prettiness. The tragedy stunned her. All day she lay on a couch, crumpled up and crying softly. The men came to take away the furniture that Joe had bought on installments. Having nothing left but stained walls, Lena went to relatives.

Downstairs lived Clara. Though only twenty, she had two babies. The barge episode had left her not merely desolate, but penniless. She had no relatives and charity she hated. On the other side lived Catherine.

Catherine was, in a sense, married to Jim. That is, Catherine's grandmother had insisted on the two ceremonies which were customary in her own country. So Catherine already had married Jim legally. But the church part was yet to come.

For this Louis had made a glistening white wedding cake. And when it was done he put it in his show window for two weeks, to gather admiration and fly specks. Now it was in the tenement, destined never to be cut.

Then came the day when the landlord bawled Clara out. So she parked the babies at Catherine's and went down to the office of the firm for whom her husband had worked. They had owed him six days' pay when the boat went down. They passed her from one person to another and finally told her they would bring the matter up at the next meeting of the stockholders in several months.

So with tense face and heavy heart she tucked the babies in bed, supperless.

The next morning Catherine came in. Clara was crying. She was going to drown herself and the children. But they had a cup of tea first. And Catherine tried to cheer Clara up by telling her that in the tea leaves she saw a big surprise coming in about an hour. Then Catherine went home.

And there was the wedding cake before her eyes all the time. She hated it. It was laughing at her. To see it constantly was like rubbing salt into a sore. Suddenly she remembered something.

She wrapped the cake up, jammed her hat on sideways, and hurried to a newspaper office.

The reporters gathered round her, hoping for a "red hot line" and a chip of the frosting. She told them that for months she had been following the antics of Rosalie the Red Head in the comic strips. The heroine was very real. Somebody told her these drawings were all true incidents in the lives of the artists' girl friends. So if they'd send it along, she'd be proud to give Rosalie the wedding cake.

The boys knew the barge story too well to laugh. Instead, they insisted on buying the cake for Rosalie themselves (and themselves).

Clutching more than $15, Catherine rushed home to Clara with the "big surprise."

Economically speaking, it was only a temporary relief. Spiritually speaking, it was a touch of romance that came just in time to encourage Clara to carry on.

But, romantically speaking, what could have been a finer memorial to Jim?

Air Mail Service to South America from France Promised

PARIS.—(AP)—Growth of the French airmail service on a 4,000 mile route from here to Senegal, on the west coast of Africa, promises speedy development of the mail service to South America.

The flight from Dakar to Pernambuco by Costes and LeBrix in early October was the spectacular first jump over the Atlantic westward to pave the way for regular trips.

Mail that now takes 20 days to go from Paris to Buenos Aires is expected to be delivered in five days within a year or two. It will go in seven days within a few months.

Two months before the war was over the Latecoere company gave the French government its plan for the South American service and ten years later, experts are sure, it will have become a reality.

Christmas day, 1918, the Toulouse-Barcelona route was established. Four months later it reached to Casablanca. Two years ago mail was being carried by air to Dakar, halfway from Paris to Buenos Aires. During the nine years the number of letters by airplane has jumped from 9,000 to 7,000,000. The commercial receipts have increased likewise.

Argentina and Uruguay have signed contracts for the air mail service and Brazil and Chile are negotiating agreements.

Old Snuff House, Mecca of Royalty, Still Doing Business

LONDON. — (AP) — The quaintest store in all London is the "Old Snuff House," in the Haymarket. The windows of this old time emporium are filled with curiously shaped jars and bottles, the whole affording an almost perfect example of an eighteenth century London shop.

Established in 1720 by one Peter Fribourg, it had among its customers two English kings—George III. and George IV.—and today, if you are so minded, you can purchase an ounce of "King Morning Mixture" as supplied to the last named monarch.

Old ledgers, treasured possessions of the present proprietor, show that royal ladies were also snuff takers in the old days. Queen Charlotte, wife of George III., bought her weekly allowance of one ounce of "best rapee snuff" here for nineteen years.

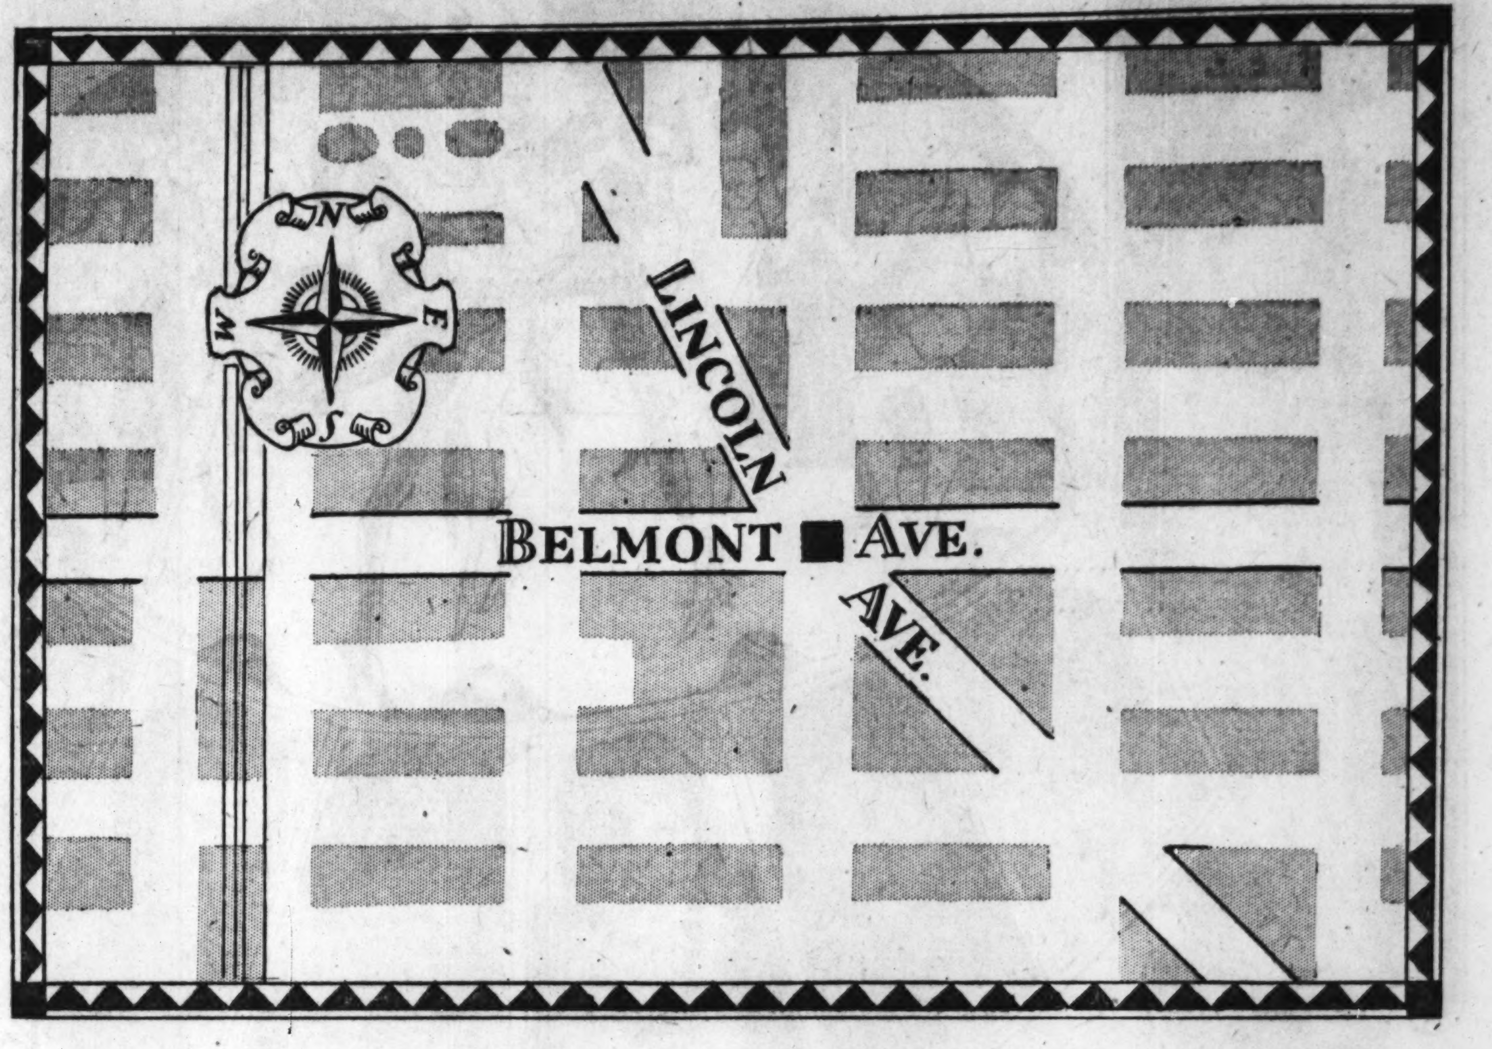
The "Battle of the Neighborhoods" Continues—



LINCOLN & BELMONT

Why has it come to be a great shopping center?

IN every city in the country, neighborhoods are fighting for commercial supremacy. And the more rapidly a city grows, the more ruthless is the "Battle of the Neighborhoods."

Chicago is the fastest growing of the world's great cities. It has added more than a million to its population in seven years. Each year thousands of new families force expansion of Chicago's boundaries and the development of new neighborhood shopping centers.

Probably no other great city in the world offers neighborhood merchants the opportunities they find in Chicago. In every section of the city are merchants who, in just a few years, have become great and prosperous. All over Chicago are shopping centers—thriving, progressive, growing—which were vacant lots and a scattering of homes a generation ago. In nearly every part of the city are older districts which for years had neglected their opportunities—and which suddenly blossomed out with new modern stores, great banks, theaters, hotels—and increasing prosperity.

Why They Succeed

Why have certain shopping centers in Chicago succeeded in dominating the business life of their sections, while others have failed to grow? Why have certain older sections, which stood still for years, suddenly become active, aggressive, successful?

Any successful merchant in any successful shopping center will tell you that two things have brought him leadership: modern merchandising methods and vigorous, persistent advertising.

Here's an Example

The LINCOLN and BELMONT district has been an established shopping center for years. For more than twenty years it had been content with the business that came its way. Merchants did little to hold old customers or secure new ones. They grew a little each year and let it go at that. About five years ago these merchants began to realize that Chicago was growing by leaps and bounds. They realized that as thousands of families moved on to new neighborhoods, new shopping centers were developing; that other merchants in other districts, with advanced ideas of merchandising and advertising, were making a strong bid for the business they had enjoyed for a generation.

And they determined to do something about it. Stores were remodeled along modern lines. Streets and windows were brightly lighted. Modern merchandising methods were adopted and vigorous advertising campaigns were begun.

Results were prompt and satisfactory. Old customers bought more and new customers came. Business and profits increased rapidly and property values doubled and trebled.

Shops that rented a few years ago for $25 a month, today bring $500 and $600 a month. Business property that sold then for $4,000 is worth $750,000 today.

A few years ago the entire district supported but one bank, with a million dollars on deposit. Today this same bank has deposits of fourteen millions and seven banks are required to care for the savings increased prosperity has brought.

Great department stores, hotels, furniture stores, a score of theaters line the crowded streets. The Lincoln and Belmont section is awake to the fact that it is a city in itself—in one of the greatest cities in the world.

Chicago's greatest merchants long ago learned the A-B-C of success. It is simply this: Advertising Brings Customers! It's an unfailing formula. The Chicago Tribune has played an important part in the growth and development of the most successful stores in Chicago. They have found its power to produce sales is unequaled, its circulation and coverage supreme.

Most of them have used The Tribune consistently for many years. Many of them use only The Tribune. They advertise in the first newspaper—first!

Insure Continued Prosperity

The story of the successful neighborhood centers of Chicago is a story of advertising—Tribune advertising. Without exception, those merchants who use the Metropolitan Section of The Sunday Tribune most persistently are leaders in their neighborhoods. And the merchants and sections that fail to use this business-building force are often forgotten in the march of progress.

Through the Metropolitan Sections of The Sunday Tribune, neighborhood merchants can reach families living in their own sections—near enough to shop conveniently at their stores—and pay for that circulation only.

Each part of the Metropolitan Section—North, South and West—reaches about a quarter of a million families and is sold at about one-third the regular rate for full Sunday Tribune circulation.

Thus you can now insure continued prosperity for yourself and your neighborhood—you can be victorious in "the battle of the neighborhoods"—at a cost every merchant can afford.

Phone Superior 0100 and ask a Tribune man for detailed information and rates.

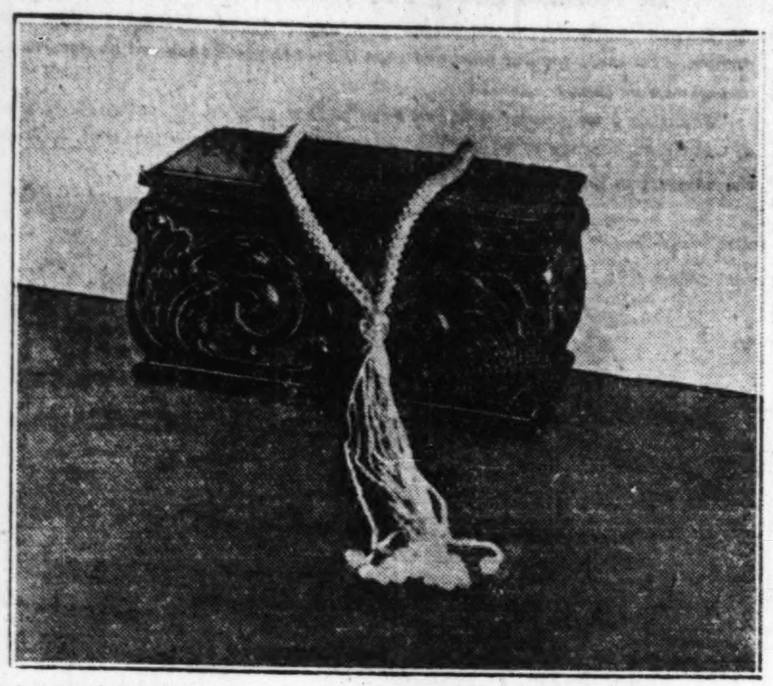
Chicago Tribune
THE WORLD'S GREATEST NEWSPAPER

METROPOLITAN SECTION

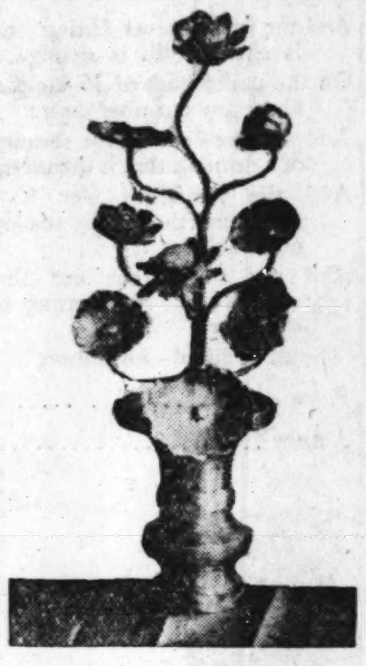
The Chicago Tribune publishes as a part of its regular Sunday issue a Metropolitan Section, the circulation of which is divided so that local neighborhood merchants may advertise in any one or more of the three sides of Chicago and suburbs as follows: North and Uptown Section—West and Northwest Section—South and Southwest Section.

NOVELTIES IN THE CHICAGO SHOPS

Not a monkey on a stick, not even a dog on a cane, for this, my dear children, is a fascinating umbrella which folds into a tiny smart swagger stick for days that are undecided. The handle, as you see, is amusingly carved to represent a wise old dog.

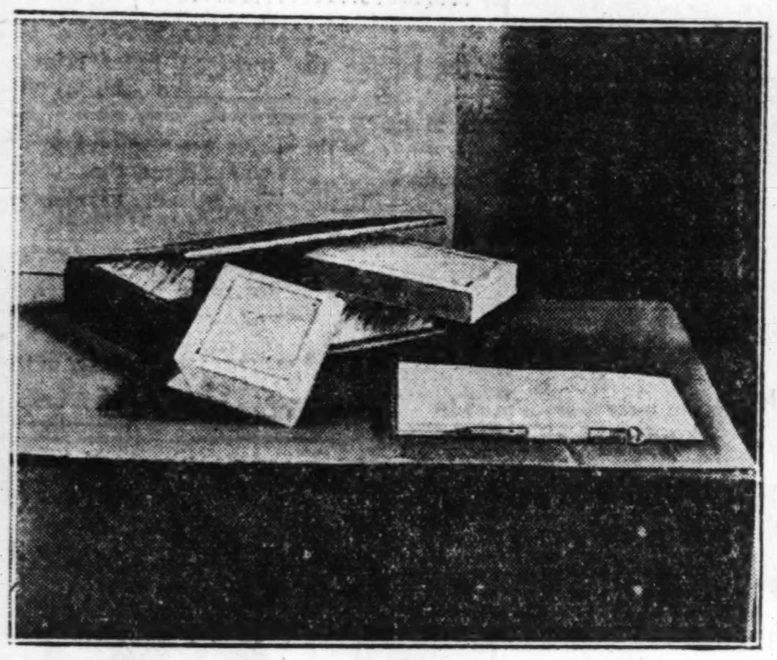


A rope of pearls spilled over a carven casket: The pearls go right around the neck and form a V and the tassel is tipped with crystal.

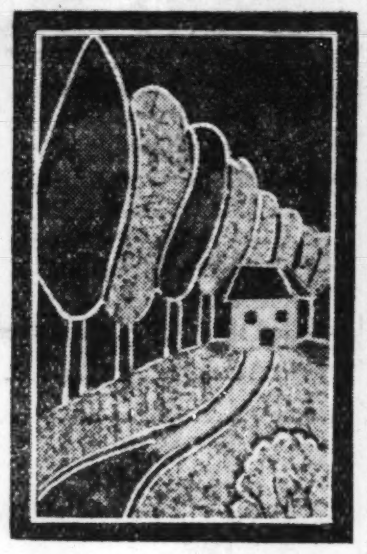


A pot of lotus flowers perpetually blooming. The pot and the flowers are all wrought brass from China and once ornamented an altar of the great god, Buddh.

We wonder where the rest of Cinderella's shoes are, for these surely are her diamond studded silver heels. The design of the flower and the stripe is black, which makes the diamonds all the more brilliant. The heels are wooden.



When Jim is ready to play bridge at night Mary will know where to find everything, because the cards and tablet and pencil are all companions in a book of pink calf.



No, my dear children, this is not a picture for the nursery wall. It is a hatpin of enamel and brilliants, destined to brighten some small untrimmed chapeau.

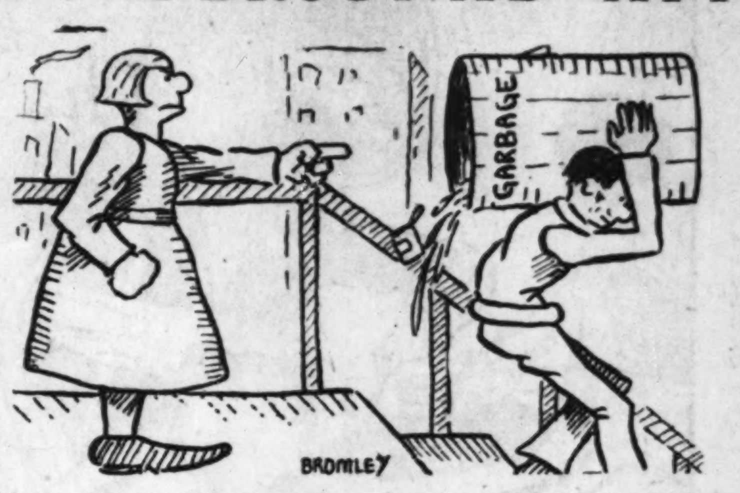
SNOWSHOE'S PERSONAL APPEARANCE

Well, I Guess That Maybe Clothes Do Make the Man

By Snowshoe Al.



"LISTEN to me, you goofy lookin' hobo!" says my dear wife the other morning. "Just because you stay home all day an' wrestle with a typewriter is no reason why you should neglect your personal appearance which, by the way, is bad enough at its best. You've been wearing that same shirt for five days!"

"What about it?" howls me. "It still has all the buttons on it and there ain't no holes in it, so why is all the grief, huh?"

"I could sling a snappy answer at you," says her, "but I fear it would go over your head, an' I am not in the mood to cast any pearls in your direction unless it's necessary. However, I would like to know when you intend to shave. You ain't pulled a razor across that pan of yours for at least four days, an' you are beginning to look like a landscape. Beat it into the bathroom an' scrape the foliage off your mug before some mushrooms commence to spring up. If a rabbit ever saw your face he would mistake it for a field of clover."

A CLOSE SHAVE

"I don't feel like shaving this morning," says I; "anyhow, I am not going any place, so what difference does it make how I look?"

"Shame on you for taking such a lopsided view of the matter," says her; "you should always try to look nice, because you never know when some people might drop in to visit us. Wouldn't you feel embarrassed if somebody should ring the doorbell right now?"

"You're damn right I would!" says I; "I would have to tell him to wait a couple more weeks for his money."

"Furthermore," says her, "it's about time you got those pants pressed, as they contain more wrinkles than a prune's overcoat. Also, I wish you would quit wearing that dirty, old, ornery looking sweater! It's so full of holes that when you wear it on the street people will mistake you for a piece of Swiss cheese on parade."

"Get it all out of your system, kid," says I, "so you won't have to start over again in the morning."

"An' another thing!" squawks her; "you seem to spend most of your time around this joint making the poor little canary bird take a bath instead of taking one yourself."

HUSBAND DESERTION

"What about it?" says me; "you never heard of a piano mover playing a piano, did you?"

"Lay off the dumb remarks an' go disguise yourself as a human being," says she. "Fool yourself! Pretend you are going to a masquerade an' wash your face so people won't recognize yuh."

"Nix," says me, "that's out! This is a free country (? ? ? ? Hurray!) and although it may have a few crippled laws such as 'Thou shalt not let us catch thee drinking' and 'Thou art not allowed to murder cake-eaters' and et cetera, thank God there ain't no rules like 'Thou must crawl into a clean shirt every day' or 'Get thee into the bathroom and mow down them whiskers.' As long as I don't have to go down town I will dress the way I please, and I can't help it if some people think I look like a Knight of the Road."

"Well, you can rest assured they won't think you look like a Knight of the Bath," snorts my Hindrance; "good-by, I'm goin' to town. You better stay off the streets or the dogs will be running you up and down the alleys."

4 BLOCKS EQUALS 2 MILES

After she had went, I decided maybe I should take a walk, because the doctor told me I should stroll at least two miles per day for exercise whether I liked it or not, otherwise I might grab myself an acute attack of fallen arches, or double-jointed indigestion, or some such contagious disease, so I starts out to walk four blocks, because in this town, you know, four blocks equals two miles. I discovered this interesting fact by watching taxicab meters what ring up ten cents every half mile. Five thousand two hundred and eighty feet equal 13½ miles unless the chauffeur happens to accidentally bump the meter with his elbow, in which case you get thrown for an additional loss which equals the distance between Detroit's five yard line and New Orleans' goal post, allowing for detours by way of San Antonio. Well, as I started to say before, I put on my ornery looking old sweater, slung a dirty cap over one ear, and went outside.

We live in a big new court building which is one block long. It contains 136 apartments and the 136 apartments contain 135 radios. (Mine is already ordered, but somebody's Credit Dept. is evidently still trying to decide whether or not I can be relied upon to come across with "three dollars per week, plus a small carrying charge, plus 6 per cent interest on overdue payments.") Funny thing about them 135 radios: they are always all tuned in on the same football game, so I can usually walk back and forth the entire length of the building without ever missing a single play.

SECOND STORY ARTIST

As soon as I got downstairs I prepares to take my walk and listen to the football battle at the same time, but was prevented from doing so because some dame sticks her nose out of a window on the second floor and squawks:

"You come right up here this minute! I've been looking for you."

"All right, lady," says I, wondering what it was all about, as I never steal any milk or morning papers on the second floor, although I will admit that I have been tempted to do so at times, because the folks on the third floor often fool me by ordering buttermilk, which certainly tastes like hell in coffee.

I goes up and knocks on the door, and when she opened it she slips me a look which would freeze alcohol. This Minnehaha was built like an overstuffed hippopotamus, and consisted mostly of muscle. She looked like a cross between Strangler Lewis and any other three guys on earth. One look at this tough baby would make Gene Tunney shatter his own record for the 100 yard dash. She stares at me for one solid minute and I begins to feel like Daniel did when he was a week-end guest in the lions' bungalow. Then she opens her mug and separates herself from a half acre of verbal hell.

FIREPAN INTO FIRE

"What do you mean," she yells, "by not removing our garbage for the last two days? A fine janitor you are! For ten cents I would break you up an' scatter you to the four winds! You dirty loafer! Get out on the back porch an' remove that garbage right now!"

"But, lady," howls me, "I am not——"

"O, yes you are!" squawks her. "Don't tell me you're not going to do it, you dizzy lookin' bum! An' you're going to do it this very minute, or I'll use you to beat carpets with."

Well, I admit that maybe I was dressed kind of frowzy, but I never expected to be mistaken for a Boiler Room Rajah. I looks this female bruiser over and decides that a good way to commit suicide would be to argue with her, so I grabs the can of sweet smelling Odds and Ends and drags it down the back stairs. Then, to avoid any more monkey business of this nature, I beats it down the alley. Just as I crossed Thome Avenue a couple Flat-Foots nailed me.

COPPED BY A COP

"What are you doing in this neighborhood?" says one; "we've been watchin' you for three days! You look like a desperate character an' we have a dirty idea that you is planning to hold up that drug store on the corner! Hold still till we search youse."

"Control yourself," says I; "you've got me wrong! I'm a respectable author!"

"Youse is a liar," says the other bird; "I once saw a picture of an author, so youse can't get away with dat noise! Authors wear bow ties an' yellow gloves, an' dey all carry a cane. Listen, bum: Last Monday night somebody held up a grocery store in dis neighborhood. Where was you last Monday night?"

"Last Monday night I was down at the Hamilton club, bowling with some guys named Gere and Robinson and Jim Kennedy and 'Handy Andy' Anderson and——"

"Lay off dat racket," says he; "you couldn't even get in the back door of dat place."

"I was all dressed up that night. Honest, I was!" says I.

BACK ON THE JOB

They asked me where I lived and I told them, so they walks back through the alley with me to make sure I wasn't slinging them any mush. The big dame on the second floor was standing on the back porch looking around.

"Lady," says one of the coppers, "does this guy belong in this building?"

"He certainly does," says she; "send him up here! I've got something else for him to do."

So they chased me up to her apartment again and I had to fix a couple leaky faucets.

Yeh, I guess a guy really should take care of his personal appearance.

Swam Channel? Make Thermometer Prove Your Claim!

PARIS.—(AP)—A thermometer is being used as the test of truthfulness of those who say they swam the English channel.

Swimming experts in France generally agree that some of the France-to-England navigators could not possibly have stayed in the cold water as long as they said they did.

Both men and women swimmers in France have set the proper channel temperature at 70 degrees Fahrenheit, or even a little higher. When swimmers testify to having stayed many hours in water much colder, these experts say, there is something wrong.

The French long have regarded channel swim claims with considerable suspicion. They have become outspoken of late, and have mentioned names. They offer no proof that the various swimmers rode part way across on boats, but they say quite emphatically that no person can stay in 50 degree water for half a day, whether he is greased or not.

WELL! WELL!

An English motorist was touring Scotland. One day, not being sure of his location, he slowed down to question a girl he saw approaching.

"Motherwell?" he asked laconically.

"Yes, sir, thankee," said the girl, "how's yer own?"

A Precocious Co-ed.

Speaking of big heads, I think of my little girl of five and a half years tops them all.

I told her brother, aged eight, that if he wasn't careful his sister would catch up to him in school. Hearing this, Eleanor came across with this:

"Bernard better be careful, 'cause when I start school I'm going to be so smart I'll be in college and Bernard will be back in kindergarten."

Brickbats and Bouquets.

The other evening mother and I were going to a movie. We met my girl friend. She is 17 years old and not the least bit pretty.

Mother told her she had a pretty hat on. She replied: "O, yes, it seems like all hats look nice on me. In fact I think my clothes all look nice on me. Don't you?"

We answered yes. After we left her mother said: "She doesn't throw bouquets at herself, does she?"

Pride Goeth Before a Snap.

An acquaintance of mine went to the circus to see her daughter ride a horse, on which she could perform many amusing stunts. The girl acted splendidly, and Mrs. S. went out into the ring to congratulate her. She stretched to kiss her when the strap from her petticoats snapped. She didn't notice it and was astonished when the crowd started to applaud. Then she walked out, proud of herself and her daughter.

The Height of Optimism.

A woman friend of mine told me she was broke. She sent in a contribution for your column. Then she went to a store and bought a list of things that cost a dollar. When I said, "I thought you were broke," she replied, "O, I told the dealer to charge it, because I know I will get a dollar next week for my contribution. They always accept my stuff. It is so good."

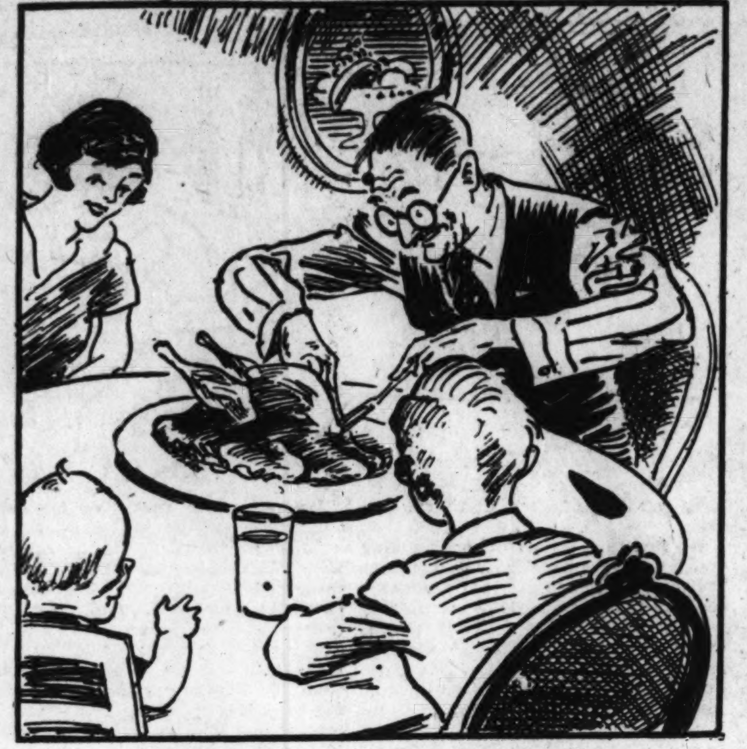
AND NOW THE DUKE TALKS TURKEY

Resorts to Strategy to Make the Day a Real Thanksgiving

By Duke Bakrak.



"You shood of seen us wreck our bird."

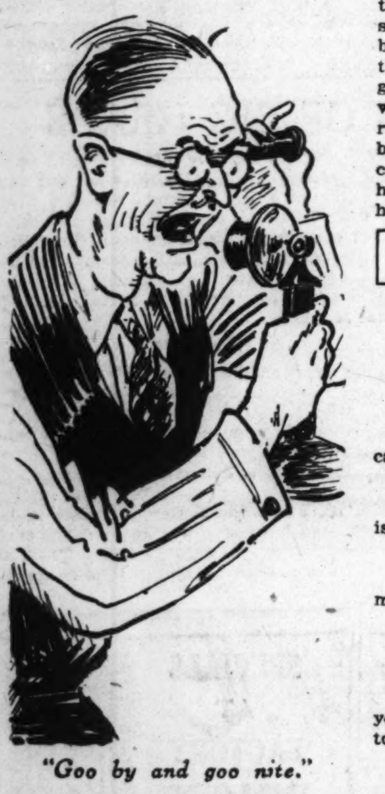
TO men, all Thanksgiving days in tha past have been about ten degrees less than minus. Last Thursday was one what I cood actually call plus additional. The reason was that me and tha B. and C. and tha kids ate by ourselves. This meant that if you wanted all white meat you didn' get a piece of neck and a piece of tha Mama's mind.

Seems that, as long as I can remember, are family has been the goat for free eats. The funny part of it is that every friend or relation who ever parked their dogs under our table had more money in one vest pocket than we had in tha bank. I've always had a sneaking hunch that the first thing a certain guy did when he got home was to put 7 or 8 bucks in the old sock and say to himself, "Duke, you're the berries, three more invitations from you and another two flat building is ours." I'm not mentioning any names, but if I ever find out that this same Charley Nelson is the stiff that puts the slugs in our baby's bank,, I'm gonna accuse him openly.

KAYOED BY THE B. & C.

The annual debate entitled "Whose gonna get invited this year" was duly held two weeks ago. Our esteemed chairman, Mrs. Bakrak, presided. Tha chairman agreed that Mrs. Bakrak wood take tha affirmative and Mrs. Bakrak tha negative. The judges were Mrs. Bakrak. Ten minutes for opening remarks and five minutes for rebuttal were allowed each side. Mrs. Bakrak spoke thirty minutes. It seemed to me that tha contest was fairly even, but tha judges decided Mrs. Bakrak was tha victor.

Reading of tha minutes of last year's meeting was continually being interrupted by the male members present. He was immediately told to button up his siren. After tha sargent at arms [whose office really calls for every light duties] took tha hound around tha block, filled four milk bottles, hung out the ice card, wound up the clock, and wrapped up tha dirty clothes for tha laundry tha meeting was adjourned at eleven P. M.



"Goo by and goo nite."

The following day I got to thinking that I'd be damned if I wood be Santy-Claus to a pack of hungry wolves and starving hyenas every year. The more I thought of it the madder I got, and that night I called a special meeting of the board. Two of tha directors nearly got into a fist fight. After I got tha floor my argument was to tha effect that when my dad figured I was a man, he'd put long pants on me and as long as I was tha only member present being dressed that way it was up to me to prove the ole gent's trust. After this brilliant bit of repartee, she's got tha nerve to tell me that if she hadn't of married me I woodn' have any pants at all. To which I replys that I yet got to see a naked batchelor.

"IT'S MY TREAT"

Last year, between tha second and third helping, Cousin Emily pulls the old bologny, "Next Thanksgiving you all hafta come to our house." At this remark Aunt Minnie pulls a phony peeve and says, "Not on your life. I insist upon doing the honors." This calls for a argument by my mother-in-law, who says, "If you don't let us throw tha dinner we will never speak to any of youse again."

Now my argument to tha B. and C. is that if her memory was as long as her tongue, she'd kinda hint around a little and see if any of those toreadors were still in tha bull-throwing business and whether they meant what they said or not. Her answer is that before she wood throw a hint she wood see them all in hell and if they ever ate on us again I cood hitch up tha car and dump her in a nut house.

This being a victory in my favor, we proceeded to lay out a family bill of fare and I even went so far as to say that I'd get enough bucks together to pay for tha turkey so as she woodn' hafta touch her house money. Last Wednesday night our kitchen smelt like a rose garden. There was mince pie in the oven, turkey stuffing in tha making, tha kids were cracking nuts, tha B. and C. was singing a song, something about "I'm forever bubbles blowing," and I was stretched out on tha sofa thinking how swell it was gonna be not to get up in tha morning, when all of a sudden tha telephone rings. I answered it and it ain't nobody else but Cousin Emily. After tha conversation was ended I felt a real he guy and tha Mama was grinning her head off.

SIZZLING WIRES

Here's tha dirt:

"Lo."

"Lo Duke, how's a family?"

"Fine, how's it by you?"

"Awright."

"We was wondering wy ya didn't call earlyer."

"How come?"

"Cause we wanna know what time is yer eats."

"Whad eats?"

"Ain't we turkeying with youse ta marro?"

"Not that I know about."

"Well, ats funny."

"You must got yer dates mixed."

"Didn' you say at are house last year that next year we all gotta come to your house?"

"Well maybe I did."

"Well whadda ya kickin' about, ain't we comin'?"

"W-we-well I-I-I y-yo-you s-se-see ah-ah."

"Cut tha static. If we ain't invited juss say so."

"Can't cha lissen a minit?"

"Hell, no; if yer crawfishin' I gotta beat it out quick and see if I kin still get a turkey. Goo by."

"Don't be mad on us Duke."

"Goo by and goo nite."

To make tha stuff go big I hang up tha receiver with a helova slam.

O, MIN!

Two minutes later I call up Aunt Minnie and pull the same line of chatter on her and end up by telling her it looks like we gotta have chops as it's too late to get a bird, also that tha next time she hands out invitations we're gonna insist on her putting it in writing. She also begs us not to be mad, and with that I also slip her a receiver bang.

The next on tha list was tha ma-in-law, and what I don't tell her is a shame. Not having any too much love for this trouble shooter, I end tha talk by telling her that tha next time she puts her dogs in our kennel it wood hafta be over my dead body.

Now that they think we're all mad there's no chance of them dropping in for a visit Thursday night, and I want to tell you that I think tha day is properly named Thanksgiving when relations are conspickuous by their absence.

You shood of seen us wreck our bird. Tha kids coodn' hear tha radio on account their ears was full of cranberry. When tha mince pie was brought on everybody slowed up on tha potatoes. Even tha pooch of ares got himself a belly ache.

After dinner all tha members of The Royal Order of tha Holy Knife and Fork mooched into tha parlor and took a sofa snooze. At night we all went to see a swell funny picture at tha local movie.

REAPING THE HARVEST

From a future financial standpoint, my handling tha whole affair tha way I did brings us splendid returns. Between Friday morning and Saturday night we received three invitations as follows:

Cousin Emily—Dinner a week from Sunday.

Aunt Minnie—Christmas dinner.

Tha Ma-in-law—New Year's dinner.

Nevertheless, tha invites being verbal I had Gerty Muldoon, our office stenog. acknowledge receipt of them, had Horwitz (tha celebrated Notary Public) put on his seal and for safety's sake, I kept a carbon copy.

This coming year tha guest room is gonna be a kids' playroom. Tha guest towels are gonna be used by tha family and there's gonna be a sign hung on tha door that reads, THIS FREE LUNCH COUNTER PADLOCKED FOR ONE YEAR.

P. S.—When we put up our own two flat, I might coax tha B. and C. to run a surprise party on her. The kind where everybody brings part of tha lunch.

Children Get Lessons in Berlin Traffic Lore

BERLIN.—(AP)—Berlin school children are being trained in the art of dodging street traffic, which is daily becoming more dangerous in this city of 4,000,000 inhabitants.

The mysteries of gyratory traffic, one way streets, the necessity to avoid jay walking, and the meaning of various traffic signals are all on the curriculum for which the street car, motor bus, and subway authorities have supplied ample material.

There will be no more tragedies of "lost children" in Berlin, since young citizens at an early age are being familiarized with all aspects of modern city traffic. Huge maps of the metropolis, illuminated with tiny electric bulbs, serve to illustrate the dangers of the streets. How to use the automatic telephone and to assist the old and feeble across the street is part of the training.

But it's been a summer affair.

Unused Fleet Menaces Navigation in French Canals

PARIS.—(AP)—Twenty barges that are neither for sale nor for rent and which are never used are upsetting canal navigation in northern France.

Ancient laws and waterway rules prevent the authorities from interfering with the vagaries of a rich lawyer who for six years has allowed the fleet to deteriorate and block navigation, refusing chances to get half a million francs for boats that are only a source of trouble.

Ten of the boats are in port at Rouen and ten at Conflans-Saint-Honorine. So long as there is a legally named watchman—even if he doesn't spend much time watching — the barges can remain in the canals.

Removal of the barges has been tried by the authorities on all sorts of technicalities, but the lawyer knows his rights and it looks as if the barges would continue to menace navigation until the lawyer changes his mind or the boats actually sink in the channel and have to be destroyed or removed at public expense.

Ex-President Fights Country in Court

PARIS.—(AP)—A former president of France has, in the course of his professional duties as a lawyer, been put in the unusual position of pleading against his own country.

Alexandre Millerand, engaged by the Roumanian government as one of its lawyers in pleading a case submitted by the league of nations to the International court at The Hague, now finds himself legally fighting his native land, for France has associated itself with England and Italy in opposing the Roumanian thesis.

These nations maintain the competence of the European Danubian commission extends to Braila, while Roumania says it extends only to Galatz.

The Last Word in Paris Fashions

The Holiday Season Is Crowded with Dances. Here Are Frocks for the Afternoon Tea Dansant, and for the Formal Evening Ball.

BY BETTINA BEDWELL.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

PARIS.—(Special Correspondence.)—In this epoch of specialists and specialties, fashions come in many divisions, each one a highly specialized part of the mode.

A good many women think that Fashion is one thing to all women, ladling out the healing tonic of style to pep up anemic chic. This is the cause of a great deal of the bad dressing that persists in spite of the constant and free education in the art of dress which is available to all women. We read, or hear, that something or other is the latest thing from Paris, and those who look on any style as a general practitioner, treating all cases in need of smart apparel, foolishly imagine all they have to do is to get this "latest thing," whatever it is, and they are all set for the season. This procedure is exactly like taking aspirin for a broken arm because it was so beneficial to your headache the other day. The treatment does, at best, no good, and, at worst, a great deal of harm.

Fashion, every season, consists of many specialties produced by numerous specialists for particular women and their peculiar needs. There is no such thing as one fashion for all women. And if there were, how ridiculous most of us would look. It is only because of the extreme elasticity of styles, and the special adaptation to each one, that women can be as generally well dressed as they are today.

Just as there are special modes of living, so there are particular styles suitable to them. And, going further, there are clothes for all of the pursuits of these many modes of life. The way to be "in style" is to be dressed according to the interpretation that fashion gives which is most suitable to your own environment and to the activities thereof. You yourself must be the analyst and determine to what section of the many sectioned styles of Paris you belong. That is so simple that any woman can do it without brain fag.

The next thing to do is to divide your day and evening into the number of varying parts any day is subject to, and choose your clothes for each of these parts. Your day may be one-third homework, one-third outside activities (such as shopping, teas, matinées, etc.), and one-third movies, dinners, dances, and so on. You will then need three types of costumes. And if you have more or less divisions, then you will want more or less varying costumes, to be smartly and appropriately frocked for each. Every woman should get busy and analyze her environment, following it up with this simple arithmetic of dividing her activities according to their clothes requirements. Then she is ready to choose her styles.

I have arranged four sketches today that are intended to give clothes ideas for one division which nowadays has a place in almost every woman's life. This is the subdivision given over to the dance. Since almost everybody dances, and since the times and places at and in which we step out to musical meter are many and varied, I have tried to make my selection of appropriate costumes cover as many as possible. Most of the dances that many of us go to are informal affairs, and some of them are in the afternoon, so that the character of the smart dance frock is often different from that of the true evening gown.

Such a dress is shown on our second figure. It [illegible] designed especially for the dance by a Paris specialist in clothes creation. It is intended for thés dansants, restaurants, and other public places where jazz rhythm invites you to step out in public. Suzanne Talbot has made this dress with a soft blouse of ecru lace, having long sleeves and a draped yoke which ties in a big bow. The lower part of the bodice is pulled into folds, which are attached beneath a bow on the left hip. The skirt is made of cream colored georgette crêpe, shirred at the top and scalloped at the bottom. The shirred fullness is pressed into a series of columns which somewhat resemble plaits.

More formal is the Cheruit dance dress shown on our first figure at the left. This is the kind of frock the wise woman would choose who has need of a stunning dress, and one which may be worn at a good many particular dances. The material of which this model is made is stiff black taffeta encrusted with sprays of silver leaves. So clever are the line and the drapery of this frock it appears strikingly different from the ordinary dress. It has both individuality and chic and is suitable for repeated appearances.

The bodice is extra long; in fact, part of a slim and narrow full length slip. The décolletage is V shaped, and the tiny shoulder straps are made of rhinestones.

The bouffant skirt consists of wide ruffles, cartridge plaited at the top, and folded over on the left side to make a series of hemlines that add much to the charm of the model.

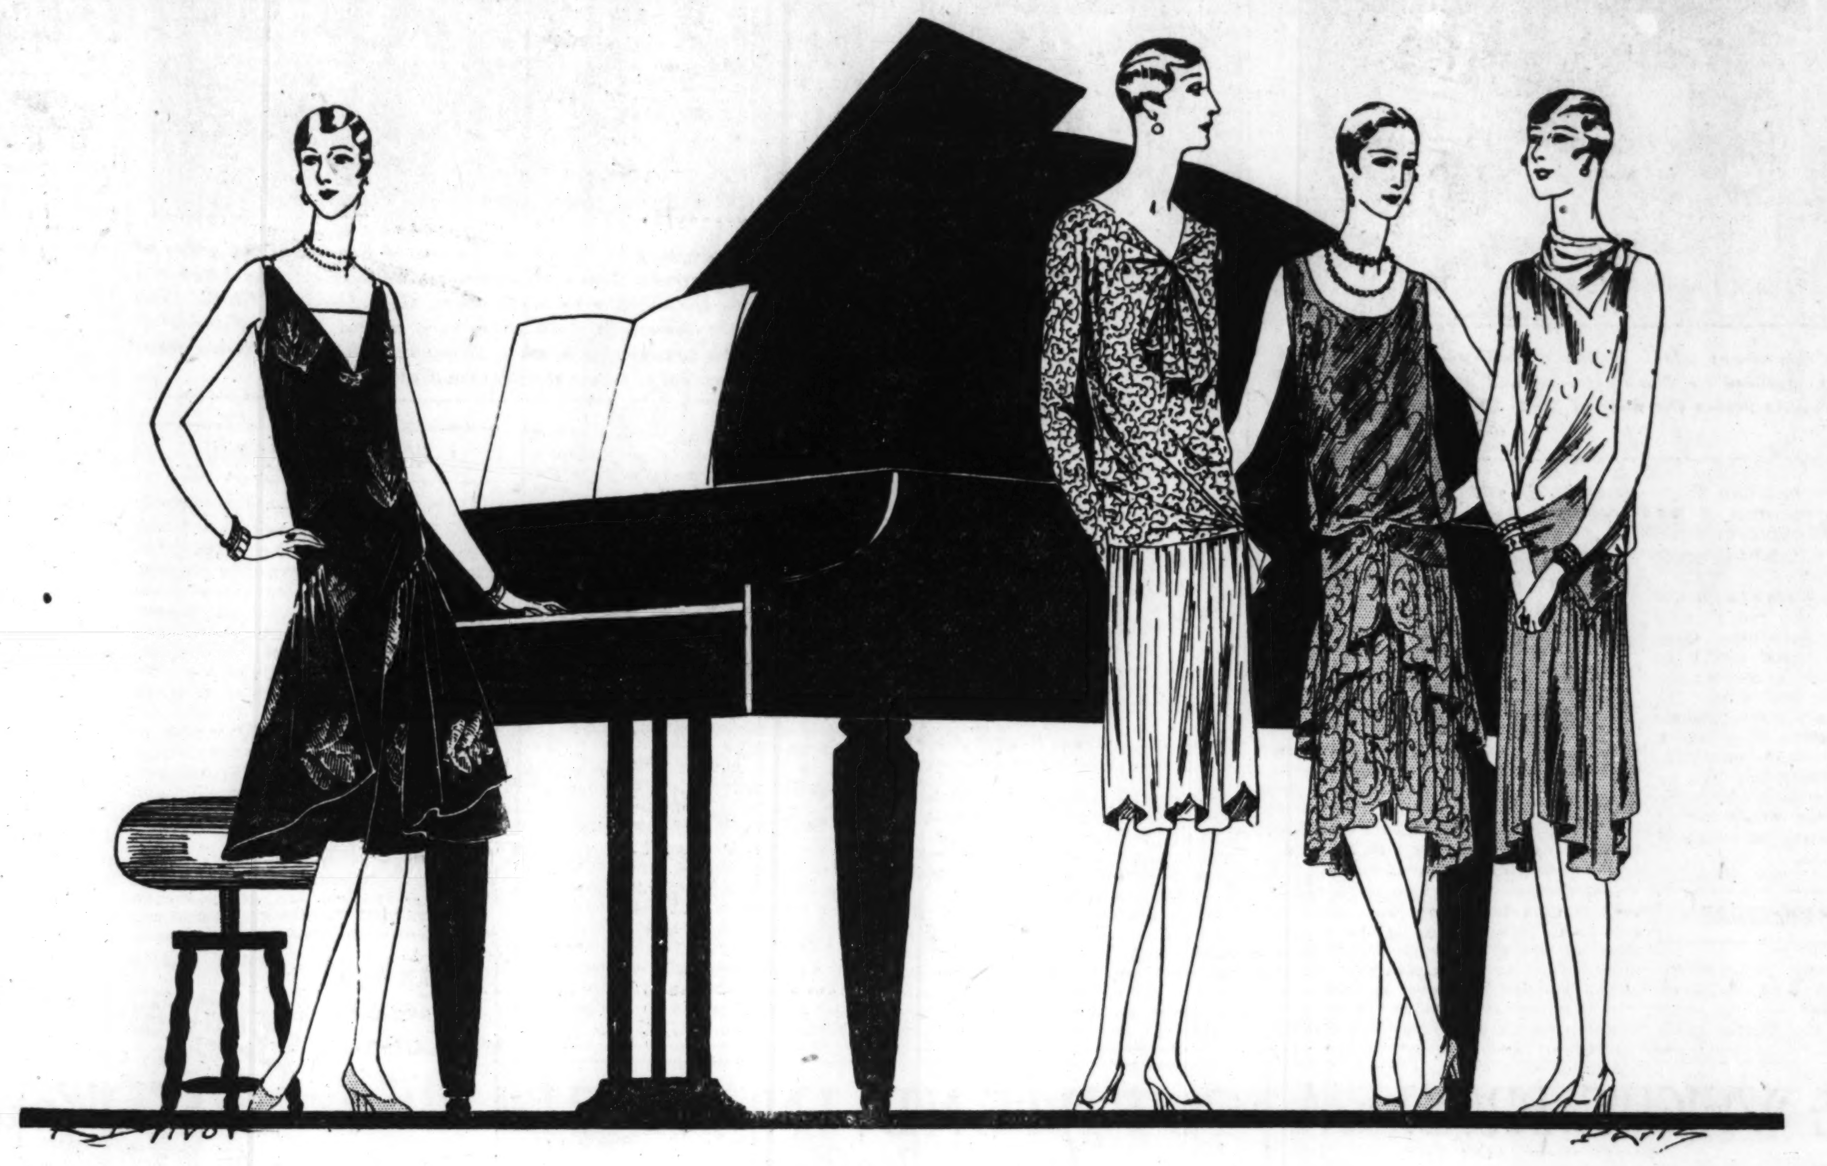
Our third model is a black lace dance frock from Redfern, which combines such extreme simplicity with such exquisite refinement that it may be worn for both exacting and informal occasions. This type of dress is especially suitable for the woman who is not quite young. The blouse, which really blouses, is not in any way adorned other than by its beautiful fabric and lines.

The skirt consists of two ruffles that are very long in back and that rise to make the hemline and the tunic decidedly shorter in front. The girdle is made of a wide band of lace, draped closely around the hips in the Spanish manner, and attached under a jeweled buckle at the center front.

Our fourth model is a dance frock from Louiseboulanger, one that is youthful and that is designed for the most exacting and exciting dances which come in the winter season for the young girl of not over 25 summers and winters. The blouse of this frock is made of pale pink lamé gauze, and it has practically no décolletage.

A small handkerchief of the same gauze is tied close about the throat. The wide, oddly shaped girdle is draped over the right hip and smoothly fitted over the left. This girdle dips in a point at the left side, front and back.

The skirt is made of dull blue panne velvet, the material of the girdle, and it is shirred so that the hemline is extremely wide. This hemline is uneven, being much longer at the sides than in the center front and back. It falls in a series of small descending folds.



The bouffant dance dress, shown at the extreme left, has a new interpretation in this Cheruit model, made of black and silver taffeta.

Next, for the tea dansant, Suzanne Talbot has designed this long sleeved model with a lace blouse, draped and tied at the neck and on the left hip, and a skirt of cream georgette with a novel, uneven hemline.

Third, the dance frock of black lace is smart for many occasions and in many places. This Redfern model has a two-tiered skirt with a hemline longer in back than in front.

The dance dress, shown last, in two colors and two fabrics, is a Paris novelty. Louiseboulanger makes the blouse of pale pink rame gauze and the skirt of dull blue velvet. A small gauze handkerchief is tied around the throat.

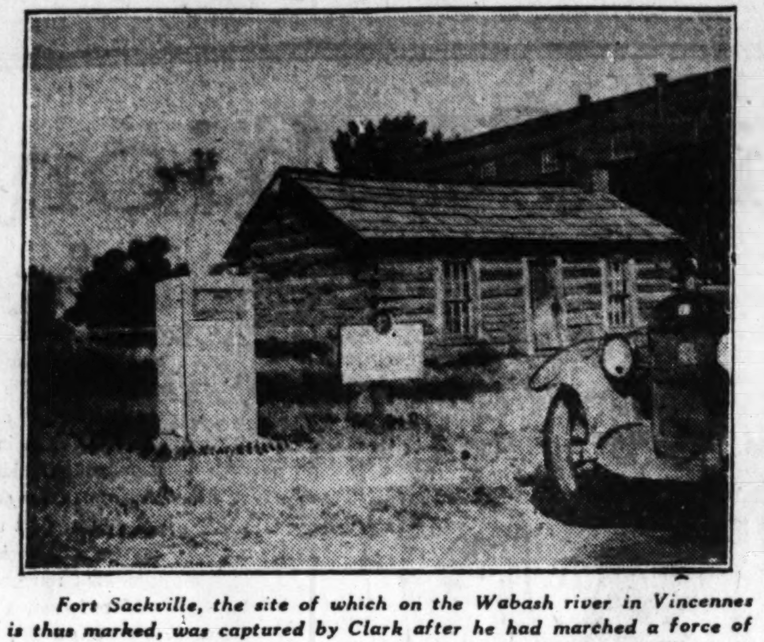
HISTORICAL AMERICA by CLIFFORD RAYMOND

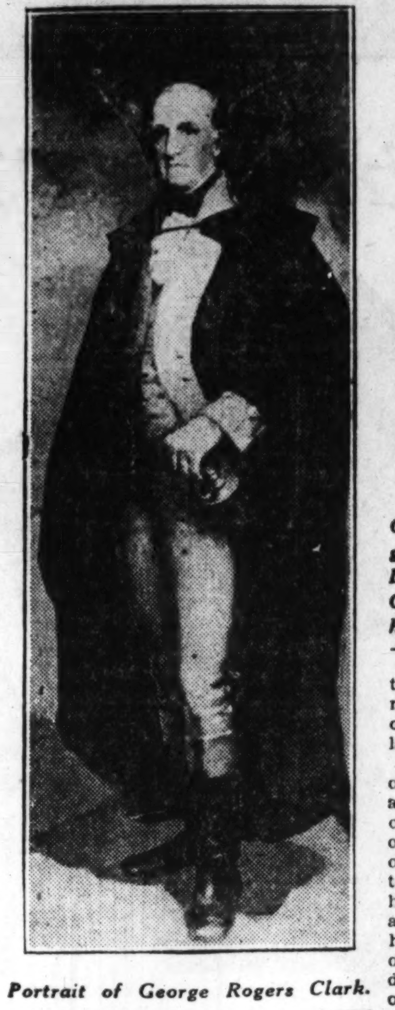
George Rogers Clark

VIRGINIA invited Indiana, other states of the old northwest territory and Kentucky to join this month in a commemorative visit to the birthplace of George Rogers Clark, and such citizens as could accept the invitation were at the exercises near Charlottesville, Va., Nov. 19, the one hundred and seventy-fifth anniversary of Clark's birth.

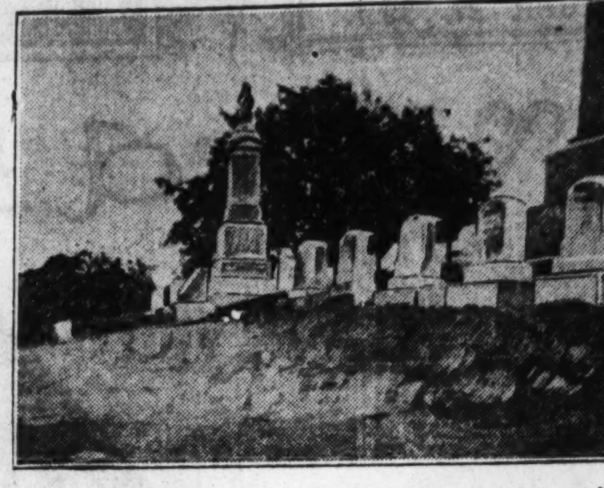
The sesquicentennial of his work in the taking and keeping of the debatable territory west and north of the Ohio river, which he began in 1778 by the invasion of Illinois, will have celebration next year and the year following in Illinois, Kentucky, and Indiana.



Fort Sackville, the site of which on the Wabash river in Vincennes is thus marked, was captured by Clark after he had marched a force of 130 men from Kaskaskia across the flooded lands of southern Illinois in February, 1779.



Portrait of George Rogers Clark.



The small headstone to the left in the row of five marks the grave of George Rogers Clark in Cave Hill cemetery, Louisville. The large red granite shaft to the right is to his brother, Gen. Jonathan Clark. The Daughters of the American Revolution have placed the headstones of George, Jonathan and another brother, Edmund. The great Clark's grave has no other memorial to honor the achievements of the man.

A NOTABLE FAMILY

John and Ann Rogers Clark, well to do tidewater Virginians, removing back into the Piedmont, had a notable family. Of their ten children, six were sons. Five sons were officers in the revolution. One was George, who conquered the northwest territory. Another was Gen. Jonathan Clark. A third was William Clark, later general, who with Meriwether Lewis made the exploration to the Pacific after the Louisiana purchase under President Jefferson.

Jefferson's home at Monticello adjoined the Clark property in Albemarle county.

George Rogers Clark is buried in Cave Hill cemetery in Louisville. It is a beautifully kept cemetery with conspicuous monuments to solvent respectability put up in mortuary reverence and respect.

In this large cemetery it is not easy to find Clark's grave. All the guards and grave diggers know his resting place is there and they know where it is, but when a grave has only a small headstone, the simplest of little markers, it is difficult to follow directions. The really great man of the northwest has no memorial over his grave except such a headstone and the D. A. R. marker.

To find his resting place one should be told to look for the red granite shaft of his brother Jonathan. Gen. Jonathan Clark, by some oddity of memorial regard, has a monument. George Rogers Clark has none. He has the obscurity of any estimable citizen whose good works were known only to the family which lost him. All about him sentiment has put up great and durable works to the memory of men and women whose import to their time and nation was that of other men and women.

GREATEST OF PIONEERS

Two of his brothers are buried alongside him, Jonathan and Edmund. Jonathan has the red granite shaft but all three have the simple headstones. That of George Rogers Clark is marked:

Gen'l George Rogers Clark
Born O. S., Nov. 9, 1752
Died February 13, 1818.

"O. S." means Old Style. The date by the present calendar was ten days later, Nov. 19. The illustration shows the extent to which the generations north and south of the Ohio have indicated their appreciation of the man whose vision, courage, tact, diplomacy, loyalty and fortitude combined to make the first effective unscrambling of the elements of confusion and disorder governing what is now the midwest of the United States.

It is difficult in this Louisville cemetery to find his grave, but when it has been found, there is the burial place of the great trans-Appalachian father of the American republic. Clark is the greatest of American pioneers. The Louisiana purchase in a way hangs upon his activities. The Pacific reaches of the country may be seen as American because of his foresightedness and resolution. What was the United States of America, and to what natural boundaries did these states, even if free, extend?

The geographical content of the United States seems a simple work of ordination now, except as one sees that it has even now a peculiar formation in that it ceases to use the St. Lawrence river as a natural boundary throughout its course. Something that was not a simple work of ordination made that curious splitting up of territory to the north of New England.

It was such a thing as this that all of Clark's life work was thrown against. If he had not done it some one else might have, but of that no one can safely judge. There was no one to carry the New England line up to the St. Lawrence river. If no one had carried the Virginia line west and north of the Ohio river it might have been that there now would be on this North American continent a diversity of nations comparable to that of Europe.

It was not inevitable that the thirteen English colonies, for the most part confined east of the mountains, should have had, even when free, any more than the territory over which they at that time claimed jurisdiction and authority. There was no inevitable reason for assuming that Great Britain, even if relinquishing control over these original colonies, would relinquish control over the territory west of them which already by act of parliament had been joined to the province of Quebec.

FORMERLY QUEBEC

There was nothing in the demonstrable prospects of the colonials which gave them a guaranty beyond their administrative rights when they rebelled. Great Britain had no inevitable reason to throw into their territorial possession a region she had denied belonged to them before they took to rebellion. The northwest territory which is now Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan and Wisconsin was Quebec. It was not Pennsylvania, Virginia, Maryland or New England. It was French Canada recognized as such by the British government, settled by Frenchmen and governed under French laws even under British control.

Illinois had French towns under British government at Kaskaskia and Cahokia. Indiana has another such French town at Vincennes. It was British governed Quebec and the revolution as a revolt of eastern colonies did not have a thing to do with it in the essence of its principles and declarations. The Spanish had Louisiana and the Mississippi. The British had this extension of Quebec down to the Ohio from the lakes and the revolution was to prove whether the colonies in their own territory could or could not win their fight to conduct their own affairs. But it was not in the avowed principles of the revolution to gain more territory and run other peoples' affairs.

WINS NEW TERRITORY

That is exactly what George Rogers Clark proposed to do and did do. He carried a successful campaign of territorial acquisition into enemy territory. He won the territory and in spite of subsequent adversities it was held.

Gens. Arnold and Montgomery, Thomas and Sullivan, statesmen such as Franklin and Chase and Carroll of Carrollton went to Canada with muskets and rifles and with printing presses and persuasions to try to win one-tenth of the resources to the American republic which Clark conquered and forever sealed to the United States with less than two hundred men.

What Arnold's men did in going up the Kennebec and crossing the Lake Megantic carry into the valley of the Chaudiere to assault Quebec, Clark and his smaller force equaled not only in crossing the unknown lands of Illinois from Fort Massac to take Cahokia and Kaskaskia but in the greater act of fortitude in crossing again the marsh lands and swollen rivers to take Vincennes and thus take from the British any title to claim to the northwest territory.

ACTING FOR VIRGINIA

Clark was acting for Virginia. He was the commander of a Virginian army commissioned by Gov. Patrick Henry of Virginia during the revolutionary war to protect Kentucky, which was Virginian territory, from Indian attack stimulated by the British posts, principally on Detroit.

If it had not been done successfully even Kentucky might not have survived such attacks and the American frontier when the treaty of Paris was considered, might not have gone beyond the proclamation line of 1763, when it was decreed by the ministry of George III. that the English colonists should not go west of the origin of streams flowing into the Atlantic. All the great watershed of the American mid region south of the lakes flows into the Gulf of Mexico.

George Rogers Clark by his own personal perceptions, activities, and sacrifices is the direct architect of the destiny which kept the United States free to extend to the Pacific. It may have been in inevitabilities above personalities. It might have been in the order of things impossible to avoid the present sweep of the United States. Of that it is difficult to judge. It is to be seen where checks were maintained and where inevitability has accommodated itself to human direction.

UNPLEASANT STORY

Without Clark there might have been another Europe here, with Great Britain, France, and Spain much better established as to navigation, resources and territory than they are in Africa.

There is no question in all the involved and controversial history of the event that Clark was the outstanding figure. He was the man who by sheer personality, some such as Washington's, controlled men and events. He suffered from criticism and contempt, from slander and scandal, much from lack of support and neglect. He has been condemned as a drunkard. His obligations were dishonored. Men who trusted government to be honorable, as he did, such men as Pollock and Vigo, were ruined. It is an unpleasant story and the whole tale is none the more pleasant for Clark's unmemorialized grave in the Great Cave Hill cemetery of Louisville.

SCIENCE STUDIES THE WEIGHT PROBLEM

And Makes Interesting Discoveries About Obesity and Excessive Thinness.

by Antoinette Donnelly

NEW YORK.—[Special Correspondence.]—Yes, there is a difference between obesity and overweight. You cannot say that all persons of superfluous weight are so because of overfeeding and sedentary habits, or a combination of both.

At the Michael Reese hospital, Chicago, an interesting study among patients, among the student nurses and other members of the staff, on obesity and overweight has been going on for the last seven years, a report on which is offered in a recent issue of Hospital Topics and Buyer.

"We have to admit that certain obese persons are right when they declare they cannot lose weight even on greatly limited diets," states Dr. Strouse. "Our studies have proved that there is a condition of constitutional obesity in which the weight gain upsets all our accepted relationships between food intake, energy expenditure, and weight."

Also, Dr. Strouse claims that a difference has to be admitted, at least in degree, between obesity and overweight. Overweight usually results from overfeeding, sedentary habits, or a combination of both. Some cases of obesity unquestionably follow the same causes.

"This group of overweight persons is benefited by a disciplinary regimen of limited, regulated food intake and increased activity," the doctor states.

"It is the smaller contingent of obstinate overweight that consistently resists all ordinary methods of correction—the cases of 'unexplained' obesity that figure so prominently in medical literature, in which the tendency to accumulate and deposit fat seems to be quite independent of any of the usual causes of increased weight that prompted the series of experiments begun in 1920.

The attempt was made to discover the particular manner in which the fat man utilizes his food which enables him to save and store food components that the excessively thin man either converts into free energy available for work or eliminates as excess material.

Among the interesting facts in obesity revealed by the experiment is that both over eating and under exercise are common faults, yet excessive obesity is comparatively rare. Conversely, another extreme is observed in a fairly large percentage of healthy but thin persons whose food intake is constantly in excess of their calculated needs, yet who cannot gain weight under any circumstances.

Two Clinical Cases.

A clinical test was made on a thin, healthy man of 39, an active worker who ate normal food and slept six or seven hours out of the twenty-four. On a four week's vacation he increased his food intake by half, mostly in carbohydrates, slept from ten to fourteen hours a day, and reclined quietly in the open air most of his waking hours. At the end of this period he was considerably refreshed, but he had made no weight gain whatever.

Another experiment concerned a girl of 15, excessively heavy, whose basal metabolism was below normal. On a carefully planned diet considerably below her calculated basal requirements and with no restriction of bodily activity, she gained 3.3 pounds in sixteen days.

This study expanded into a major research project in metabolism and Dr. Strouse and Dr. Chi Che Wang have in readiness for publication now a statement of far reaching importance on the relationship of metabolism to human types and body build.

Of this they are positive: There is a constitutional type of obesity, requiring something more than weighed and measured rations or the specific regulation of diet by other means.

During the experiment, the importance of serving tasteful meals to those on diets was emphasized.

"When diets are not ample, particular measures are required to keep the patients pleased," was the theory on which the experiments were worked.

The patient undergoing dietary management, it was realized, should not be discouraged by unbalanced, unattractive or unduly reduced portions. The following menus, chosen at random, the report points out, show skill in the construction of low calory diets.

Extremes in Metabolism.

During the period covered by these experiments, the studies on obesity have included many patients and more volunteer subjects. They ranged from 30 per cent under weight to 140 per cent over weight. From these studies the relationship between food intake and body weight appears to present two extremes of the same metabolic problems: In the very thin healthy person who habitually eats more than his basic requirements, yet who fails under any circumstances to put on weight, and the obese person who manages somehow to store fat on a minimum diet.

Work is still in progress on the hospital test to find whether glandular extracts other than thyroid have an effect upon weight reduction. This glandular work is recognized as of much clinical importance at the present time, since there are afloat many unsubstantial claims and much untrustworthy advertising regarding it in relation to obesity.

The report hints that individual treatment will eventually replace former generalization and that "eating for efficiency" will be a specific procedure instead of a catch phrase of food faddists.

Bright Sayings of Husbands and Wives

The snappy comeback of the other half when cornered has often been a source of wonder to husbands and wifes! The husband or the wife has come across with a bright saying that will never be forgotten by the other half of the matrimonial sketch. What was that bright saying, Mr.? Mrs.? Send it to us, and we'll pay you $1 for it if we print it. Address Bright Sayings of Husbands and Wives, The Chicago Tribune, Chicago.

Turn About.

Young Johnson got married. On his first pay day he gave his wife thirty dollars of his thirty-five dollar salary. The next week he reversed the process.

"But, George," protested his wife, "how do you expect me to get along on five dollars?"

"Hanged if I know," he replied. "I had a rotten time myself last week. Now it's your turn." G. W. A.

That Accounts for It.

Hubby—Well, that is no mystery, its mother is a woman. M. C.

A FRIEND IN NEED

by Sally Joy Brown

APPEALS FOR BABY THINGS ARE POURING IN

WE are always happy and willing to help the babies—and right now they need help badly. When we think of the infant clothing, cribs, carriages, and baby beds which are being outgrown every day in Chicago before they have lost all their usefulness, is there any reason why we should let this condition exist another day?

At present, for example, we have one woman whose husband is dead and who has a three months old baby. Buying a baby buggy is out of the question.

Again, we have a number of expectant mothers who would look forward to the advent of the new life with great joy and happiness if only they could see how the necessities for the newcomer would be provided. Can we let such mothers be worried when among us there are many whose children have outgrown their first outfits and we can give the clothing and bedding to help another little one just as easily as we could put it away where it would accomplish nothing?

We have appeals and needs for anything and everything useful in baby care. Bedding, beds, cribs, bassinets, and clothing can be put into service immediately to relieve the desperate need.

How easily we can turn distress into happiness—those of us with little children in the family. An infant in any family in comfortable circumstances seldom wears out its clothes. It outgrows them, and there they are—ready for a lot more service, if only we give them.

Think of the need there is right now, please, and let me know you will contribute.

Offers Pair of Galoshes.

"I have a pair of black galoshes, size 8, which I will gladly give to some woman who needs them. MISS S."

With cold weather and snowy walks here for a long stay, we'll all need overshoes. If these are in your size and you can't afford a pair, let me know.

For an Invalid.

"I am wondering if you have any man who could use an abdominal truss. It is in good condition and some one suffering from hernia might be glad to have it. MRS. O. H."

Thank you so much, Mrs. O. H.! I know one of our invalid readers will be grateful to you for contributing to his comfort.

Mr. E. M. Merchant of 665 43rd St., Louisville, Ky. is one of the champion horseshoe pitchers of the country. Here he tells how REM made a perfect score against his cough.

REM scores a "ringer"
for Champion Horseshoe Pitcher

"I was recently laid up for a week with a bad cold and a cough that I got travelling around pitching horseshoes," says Mr. Merchant. "I do that a lot for I was Kentucky's Ringer Champion in 1924. One Sunday morning I noticed a REM ad in the paper and decided I'd try it, for what I had been using hadn't helped me any. It proved to be the best cough medicine I'd ever used. By the time I'd taken two doses, my cough was considerably better. Before long it was entirely gone."

Grateful users recommend REM. It's different. It clings to your throat, soothes the irritation and quiets the cough. Pleasant to take and perfectly harmless. "Money back," if it doesn't help you.

Insist on REM! Remember, its effectiveness is largely due to a special ingredient, not in ordinary cough syrups.

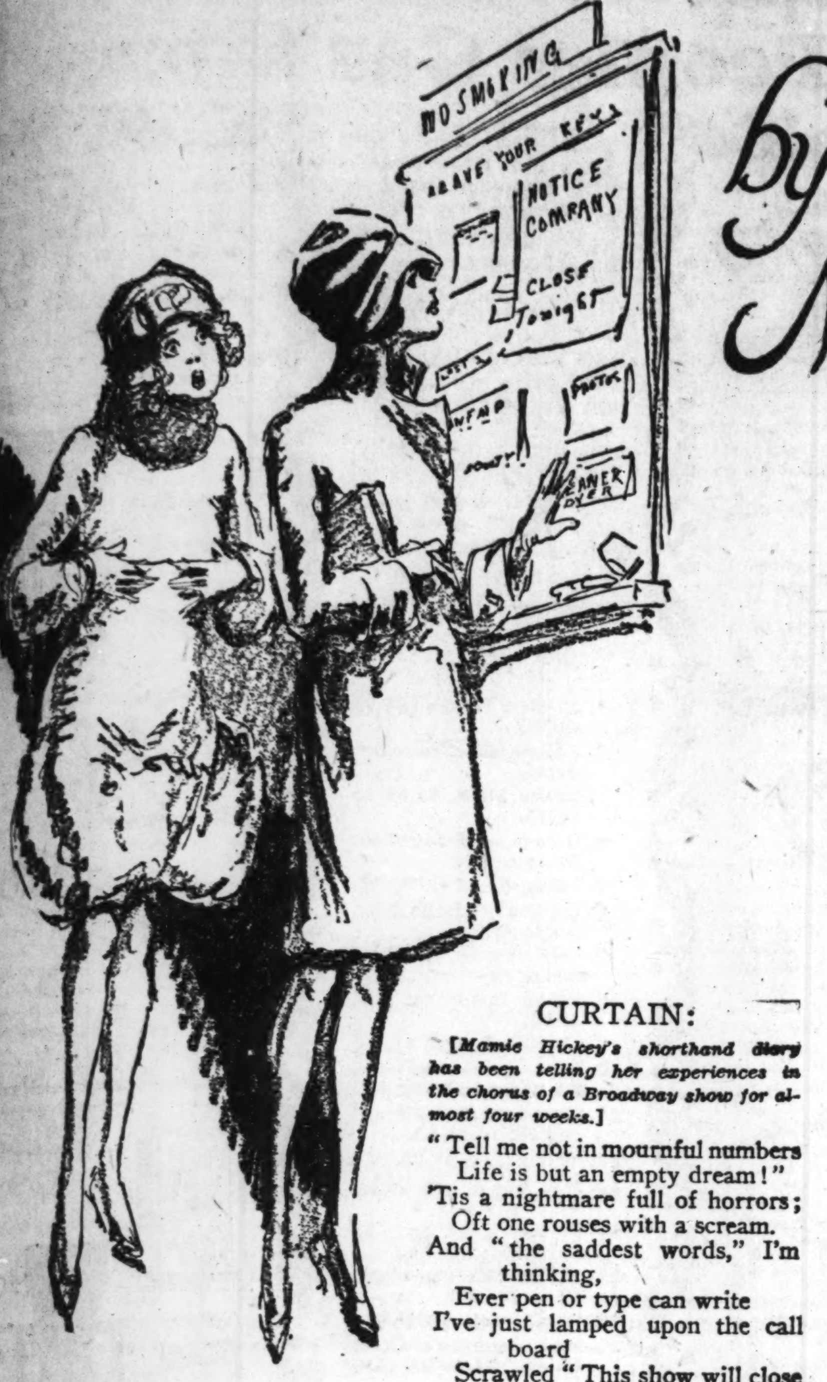
MAIDEN MEDITATIONS

by Sara Moore



DISAPPOINTMENT.

[From Our New York Correspondence.]

One misses western men, my dear.
There are Beau Brummels, D'Artagnans and Cyranos,
With all the kick—
Boiled out of them.
I feel like a little girl
Who sees, dismayed,
Her doll's—unbreakable.

CURTAIN:

[Mamie Hickey's shorthand diary has been telling her experiences in the chorus of a Broadway show for almost four weeks.]

"Tell me not in mournful numbers
Life is but an empty dream!"
'Tis a nightmare full of horrors;
Oft one rouses with a scream.
And "the saddest words," I'm thinking,
Ever pen or type can write
I've just lamped upon the call board
Scrawled "This show will close tonight."

STYMIED.

Fate, can't I coax you to make me an actress?
Make me one quickly, I earnestly pray,
Else, as a proper maid, how I can I ever
Do fullest justice to this negligee?
Rainbow hued gauzes must languish, defeated,
Drooping, secluded, where traffic is rare.
Only a third act could get this gown over—
Fate, must I waste it on dumb desert air?

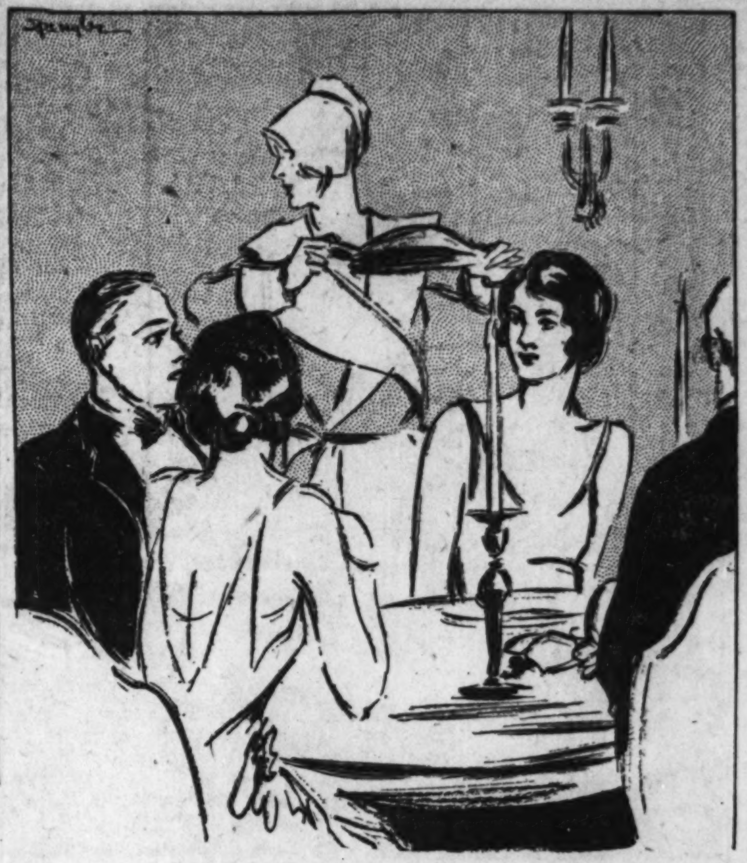
AN EARLY AMERICAN DINNER



Mrs. Harry Plans and Gives One for the Epicurean Delight of a Visiting Frenchman

By Persis Standish.

A DISTINGUISHED French scientist who came to America on business was more or less pushed by Mr. Boss into Harry's care. Of course, Mrs. Harry was delighted, because she is more or less inclined to be a Franco-maniac in a mild way and because the scientist himself proved to be a charming person, rather youngish and having a delightful sense of humor.

Mr. Boss already had introduced him to a number of persons besides the Harrys, and so, of course, he was having a fairly busy time. He dined with the Harrys several times en famille and went with them to the few restaurants where the cooking would not make a Frenchman cringe—none of them fashionable, of course.

His Kind of Girls.

After she had got to know him pretty well, Mrs. Harry proposed giving a dinner party for him. She said: "I wanted to wait until I knew whether you expect women to be well informed or pretty before asking them to dinner to entertain you. I want you to have a good time, you know."

"Do you know now what kind of girls I like?" asked the scientist.

"Yes," said Mrs. Harry, "I think I can guess that you like a reasonable combination of intelligence and looks."

"I will tell you," said the scientist, "just what kind of girls I like."

"Well?" said Mrs. Harry.

"American girls," said the Frenchman, gallantly.

"I like everything about your country except one thing," he continued, "the elaboration, the exaggerated way in which most people shower a stranger with lavishness. You alone of all the persons I have met have not striven to impress me with your wealth and influence."

"O, well," said Mrs. Harry, "I have neither, you see."

An American Dinner.

"You wouldn't if you had," said the scientist rather cryptically, "but I will allow you to give the dinner party if you will promise me that it shall be simple—not more than six persons and not more than four courses. As simple as possible and your everyday linen—no lace, madam—and no gold table service."

Mrs. Harry laughed: "You make things easy for me, indeed. I think I shall give you a truly American dinner."

"O, that would be delightful," he said. "I shall be no end grateful for that and I shall be able to tell about it, when I go home, as the happiest time of my visit."

"Had you not better wait until afterwards," said Mrs. Harry, "to say nice things about it—or do you consider that it will be easier to say them now?"

"To show you how really anxious I am to enjoy the party, I hope you mean to give it this week."

So Wednesday night was settled and Mrs. Harry began on Monday to plan her Pilgrim Father dinner. She drove out into the country and got a turkey for the main course. She had no appetizer, because that would count as a course and she did not intend either to repeat French recipes or compete with them.

So the first course was black bean soup with cornsticks; the second was roast turkey, cranberry jelly, and mashed potatoes. She remembered that the French do not like to eat their vegetables and meat together and that there probably was no Pilgrim Father salad, and so she had a clever vegetable course for the third. It consisted of succotash made of tomatoes, corn, and lima beans, and with this she served hot baking powder biscuits, although she was in doubt as to whether they did not originate at a much later date and from a southerly direction. However, she didn't have time to ask Miss Eddington about them and she needed them to make the course good. For dessert she had pumpkin pie and cheese.

The dinner was a great success and the scientist said he believed the pilgrims Mrs. Harry represented at the feast must have had French blood somewhere, because nothing so good as that menu could have come from England or in fact from anywhere else by ancestry except la belle France.

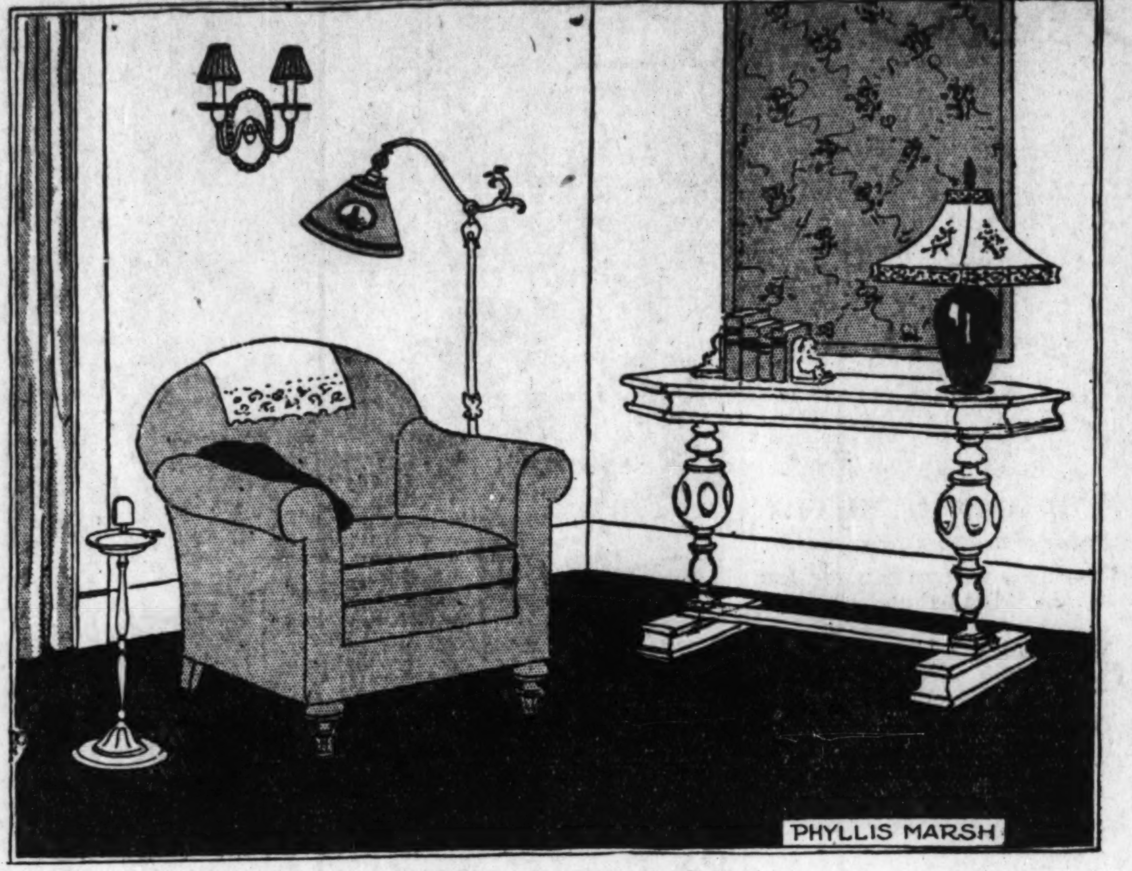
The HOME HARMONIOUS

Lamps and Lighting Fixtures, If Carefully Chosen, May Make the Simplest Room Charming

Phyllis Marsh will be glad to assist the homemaker in any problems pertaining to home building and home furnishing. Address your letter to Phyllis Marsh, The Tribune, Chicago. Inclose stamped addressed envelope for personal reply.

By Phyllis Marsh.



A well lighted corner of an attractive living room.

THERE is nothing quite so charming or decoratively effective in any room as attractively shaded lamps or lighting fixtures. Whether they be in the form of wall sconces or side lights, central chandeliers, simple drop lights, table or floor lamps, they may be capable of either making or marring the decorative quality of any room.

For the average home the suspended central ceiling fixture in the living room is never as satisfactory or decorative as side lights, floor and table lamps. However, in the dining room it is quite appropriate to use the chandelier type of central lighting fixture which boasts of several upright electric candles. These should be arrayed with small shades to shield the eyes from all unnecessary glare. There are various other types of suspended lighting fixtures designed for use in halls, bedrooms, kitchens, and bathrooms.

Artificial light must be so distributed that it will be convenient to those using it and at the same time give a room a balanced appearance. For instance, do not have one end of a room well lighted while the other is in shadow. The room will lack balance and that quality of repose necessary to the comfort of the occupants.

In selecting any type of floor or table lamp it is well to remember that it is going to serve a two fold purpose. First, it is primarily to be used to read, sew, or write by, and, secondly, it must be artistic and of such type that it will fit into the style of room in which it is to be used. Direct or unshaded light should always be avoided, as it is most trying to the eyes and too glaring ever to be artistic.

No living or dining room is ever complete without its sconces or sidelights. There are various styles and designs for the house of colonial spirit, for the house of Spanish or Italian character, and for the house of early English or French peasant or cottage style, as well as for the home of nondescript character. The number of sidelights used and their size will be determined by the size of the room. It is always advisable to shade them with appropriate looking shields or shades in either parchment, silk, or chintz, as their style demands. If this cannot be done, then select frosted bulbs and those of amber tint, rather than white.

With the sidelights chosen, the next thought of the home decorator will be toward the selecting of the necessary table and floor lamps for the living room. Every living room has or should have its various individual groupings which, when carefully arranged, make an interesting ensemble and complete unit of the room. These groupings require for use as well as decoration the support of lamps, either in the form of table or floor lamps. After the choice of style has been made, it is well to see that the floor lamp is of proper height for the chair at which it is to be placed. Both from the standpoint of proportion in relation to the chair and the comfort of the person reading it is essential that the height be correct.

A shade of extreme color is never satisfactory to read, sew or write by and should never be used. This does not mean, however, that it cannot be of some soft warm tint of yellow, orange or light rose, but it does mean that the extreme inside lining should be either white or cream. A shade which is narrow at the top and flares considerably at the bottom will radiate light farther than one of more upright lines or of bell shape style. One of the most simple, inexpensive and satisfactory types of floor lamps for reading purposes is of wrought iron and is usually topped by a parchment paper shade. Then there are numerous other styles of floor lamps such as the junior, bridge, and piano lamp.

Table lamps and their shades are many and varied and in styles and designs appropriate for all types of rooms. There are simple styles and elaborate and formal ones and each has its proper place in the scheme of decoration. If the base of the lamp is pronounced in its decoration, it is advisable to select a shade of less ornate character, but if it is of simple style, then the shade may be more decorative. The shade of any lamp should look like an integral part of the lamp rather than an appendage simply added on to it for use without thought as to proportion, balance, harmony and unity. Many an artistic lamp is spoiled by being adorned with a shade which is too large and too ornate for the base. The contour of the shade should be in keeping with the contour of the base if the two are to become a harmonious unit.

It is also necessary that a table lamp be in correct proportion to the table upon which it is being used, and that it is neither too high nor too low for the comfort of those using its light. The shade should come down far enough on the lamp base to just cover the socket. It is especially essential when selecting silk and georgette for the making of shades, that the material be as attractive looking in daylight as by artificial light.

When selecting several lamps for a room, introduce various styles for variety and do not choose all the floor lamps of the same height. More than two table lamps of the same design are not advisable and these two should be arranged in bisymmetrical balance on a long davenport table. Small lamps at each end of a mantel over a fireplace may be arranged in the same manner, which is also an attractive way to adorn a dressing table with Dresden style figurine lamps.

When selecting a shade frame and the necessary materials with which to cover it, there are several questions the home decorator must ask herself. It is assumed that the lamp base is already selected and that it is in absolute harmony both in color and character with the room in which it is to be used.

1. Is the size and shape of shade frame in proportion and appropriate to the style of the lamp base?

2. Are you selecting the correct type of materials for the character of the base?

3. Is the color suitable and does it look as attractive when lighted as when not?

4. And last but not least, is the trimming appropriate with the entire ensemble?

Today's illustration displays a comfortable spot in a homelike, nondescript type of living room, which owes a great deal of its charm and attractiveness to the fact that it has been illuminated most carefully, carrying out every detail as to utility and decoration.

The TRIBUNE COOK BOOK

Fandango Styles in Foods with Garlic Perfumes and Other Spanish Exuberances Are Coming Vogues.

All recipes have been scientifically tested by Miss Eddington with current market materials and are indorsed by her.

SPANISH influences in art, architecture, music, grill work for screens and balconies, smoothed back glossy hair, garlic odors, etc., have been accumulating for some time until now they tell us we are to have a Spanish winter.

Spanish we may be, then, but there are good reasons why it is easier said than done, especially if we would have anywhere nearly the classic dishes of Spain and those consistent with the exuberance of that romantic figure of the Spanish cavalier with his guitar singing to the dark lady with a rose in her teeth. Spain has, too, some of the most romantic geographical names in all the world—Salamanca, Cadiz, Andalusia with its practical Malaga and many others, and perhaps their foods were up to these names. Yet foods were certainly as diverse over the whole of the ancient Iberian peninsula as Spanish foods are in this modern world—greatly diversified, because Spain has embraced the islands of the sea, Mexico, South America, etc.

The Roman eminences, Seneca, Martial, Lucan, were born in a highly cultivated Spain, and in no Latin works can we find more about foods than in Martial's. I once went through 600 pages of his translated poems to learn about the foods and eating of Martial's day, and it was entertaining no end. In those days men would almost sell their souls to get dinner invitations to great establishments. But we might even go back of Rome for influences discoverable in the common life of Spain. The peninsula was popular and worked by the Phoenicians, and since we can find in Marseilles, France, ways of cooking fish traced back to the inventors of the alphabet, we may easily believe that the Phoenicians influenced cooking in Spain greatly in their day, and a bit to this day.

And when the Moors came into Spain with their arts and sciences and great agricultural industry they set up many things, very likely a dietetics, for they knew how to live. They were theologians and philosophers as well as scientists. Not all the influences by any means went out from Aragon and Castille, although princely peoples have always found a way of living in a princely fashion. Malaga was Moorish and we have Malaga grapes and Malaga raisins to this day, and there have been marvelous Malaga wines. The Moors were perfectionists, and probably it was they that dried fruit and packed it more perfectly than ony one else ever has and passed the knowledge on. And besides the raisins, there have been delicious dried dates and figs sent out from the port of Malaga.

We have reason to believe that Pheonician influences lasted in Barcelona, which is in one of the great eating provinces in Spain today, our foreign correspondents tell us, with restaurants in unbelievable numbers. Granada has been great for its pleasant foods as well as for its remarkably romantic name and fame. The emblem of the city is the pomegranate, a fruit of eminence in Spain and more popular with us each year.

We have reason to believe that the surest way—but it is certainly a laborious one—to learn about what foods to set up in Spanish ways is to read books of travel on Spain—some are lovely to read—Spanish histories, and to study a Spanish dictionary, and also to go to museums where there are Spanish things to see, including pots and "braseros" or braising pans.

Spanish Cook Books.

As to Spanish cook books we would say that they are difficult to peruse, for we have a shelf full, gathered variously from Cuba to California, many of them printed in Spain. [There are many words in them not to be found in dictionaries, yet the dictionaries give many definitions which are equivalent to recipes.]

Judging by the first recipes given in the majority of these books, sauces are the leading items in Spanish cookery, although we know that it really is Spanish stews that rank as most national. But sauces and stews may be quite closely related, and Spain has given to universal cookery the brown sauce, which contains as many ingredients as the national olla or olla prodida,

Spanish Fruits.

The Seville orange and others of Spanish growing were familiar to the world and eating literature long before the Spaniards planted an orange tree on what is now United States soil, and, judging by what we see in Cuba and California, and what we have read about Mexico, anywhere where Spanish influences have prevailed, the orange and lemon have received loving attention and widest use, and appreciation.

In a hundred year book on Spain is to be found reference to the Spanish proverb concerning the fit time to eat oranges, which characterizes them as gold in the morning, silver at noon, and lead at night. You may call your morning orange juice, then, a Spanish "refresco."

Cuba seems to have fruits in endless variety, and it is perhaps the Spanish influence there, as well as climatic judgment, that has led to their serving their fruit wealth in ways unusual to us, and to serve many fruit juices and purées profusely in places corresponding to our ice cream parlors or "fountains." Cocoanut, pineapple, and banana are eaten in mountain sized heaps, and the mango with most interesting ceremony.

And fruits are preserved in these Spanish colonies, as in Spain. The Spanish West Indies has not only given sugar to the wide world but it has contributed guava jellies to international menus, and many an item less well known than this popular concomitant of cream cheese.

Spanish Raw Materials.

Of really Spanish raw materials we may have in our larder there are not a few, and we might easily have more if it was commercially important to import them even from Cuba. Of course, the Malaga raisin is one of the superlatively good things and used to be served with nuts and oranges on old time holiday tables in New England, where seaborne foods used to be so common.

Spanish olives are in our markets and there is no salad oil superior to the best of Spanish olive oils. Almost any salad with tomatoes and a Spanish oil may justifiably be called a Spanish salad. And when eggs are cooked in olive oil—a good deal of it—as is customary in Spain, humble eaters sop up all the oil with bread. A simple luncheon for the poor in the Spain of late date is "a hunch of bread and a bowlful of olives for each," or a salad.

But a luncheon in Spain, as a friend of mine describes it in one of her books on Spain, that was good enough for the Cid, consisted of "Cold soup like a melted salad, a perfumed stew in which were strangely mingled Malaga potatoes, white wine, honey, cinnamon and cloves, and, for a crowning bliss, a dish of sugared chestnuts overflowed by a sirup whose every spoonful yielded a new flavor—lemon peel, orange peel, tamarind and a medley of spices."

Of course, these chestnuts were like the French marrons, before they are taken out of the sirup and dried. In trying to make even these latter it is best to leave them in a sirup, or preserved until shortly before they are to be dried and served as a confection.

People who live down in southern Florida and Cuban waters, where the flying fishes play—to use a Kipling phrase—know not only the Spanish mackerel but some fish of as brilliant color as the most flamboyant trees and flowers of the land, and deserving of such names as parrot fish.

Spanish Eatables.

A thick and cinnamon flavored hot chocolate is called Spanish chocolate, whether you get it in Italy or Coronado Beach, Cal., where cinnamon toast has also a popularity, and very likely deserves the cognomen Spanish. In California, as in Mexico, one can buy wonderfully carved "swizzle sticks," a utensil for milling chocolate, also a utensil which has many different names in the wide, wide world, where eggs are whipped with it, or that Italian egg specialty, zabaione, and other such things in Germany, but none has been gotten up with carving and inlaying more elaborate than the Mexican utensil, which also has a Cuban name, and probably was first designed in Spain.

Spanish Mexican.

In Mexico and in New Mexico and perhaps all along the Mexican border the peppery things seem the most characteristic—tamales, tortillas, chile con carne, and frijoles. The latter beans are far more like our own kidney beans [beloved of the Creoles, who are part Spanish] than is the garbanzo or Spanish pea — curious thing and hard to cook—which is so universally used in Spain in stews and everywhere, probably, where Spanish influences are strong. Its character affords the best proof, other than a knowledge of their meager fuels, why the Spanish have understood slow cooking, for with any other sort these cannot be made edible. The last vestige of heat in a coal is utilized in cooking in all poor countries, and Spain has been poor.

The Spanish Stew.

The olla podrida of Spain, containing often fish, flesh, fowl and any vegetable, egg and oil, is a great national dish, and it is hard to tell whether this name or puchero is the more universal term for it and there seems to be a score of names for Spanish stews, if no more, as a perusal of the dictionary more than a perusal of cook books shows. Good stews are inevitably the product of slow cookery, and slow cookery has other reasons for prevailing in Spain besides the scantiness of fuel to make hot fires.

The olla was an earthen pot, perhaps not as fragile as the almost universal and fragile cazuela of Mexico and Cuba, where a nest of four or five play cazuelas are sold as souvenirs—replicas of the real thing. In Cuba the most characteristic thing served in this dish seems to be rice with chicken [arroz con pollo] which is fricassee of of chicken over boiled rice.

Prompted by Envy.

I had many friends at school and was frequently invited to their homes. The beautiful furnishings of these homes made me hesitate to invite these friends to my own, which lacked everything lovely save a fine old painting. This was a picture of one of my ancestors and had been in the family several hundred years.

One of the young men in the party was an art student and was quite the rage with all the girls. He admired my picture and asked to call again to study it.

My chum, who had admitted her fondness for this young man, left saying she was going home for a headache powder. One of the boys offered to take her in his car, but she declined.

When the young man called again and we were looking at the picture we discovered a large hole in the canvas. This was made by acid and ruined the picture. We later confirmed our suspicions that this girl purchased the acid when she pretended to go home for the powder. M. C. H.

Naughty Girl.

After I had, for three years, been petted and spoiled as the only child, and consequently the only grandchild, my parents became the proud possessors of a baby boy. I had been an adored daughter but now there was a boy and, besides being adored, he was adorable, with a head full of golden curls in contrast to my straight brown locks.

Even at that early age I noticed the remarks made about what a nice baby he was and always, always those curls. When he was a little over a year old, I, then past four, took my brother and a pair of scissors under the bed and cut every curl.

As I know you're curious I will add that I did not get the deserved spanking. I had just miraculously recovered from a severe illness and my parents feared the result of punishment. Perhaps, too, they were thankful my brother escaped more serious damage. MRS. P. H. S.

SCOTT'S EMULSION

MOTHER!

Look at Child's Tongue if Sick, Cross, Feverish

Look at the tongue, mother! If coated, it is a sure sign that your little one's stomach, liver and bowels need a gentle, thorough cleansing at once.

When peevish, cross, listless, pale, doesn't sleep, doesn't eat or act naturally, or is feverish, stomach sour, breath bad; has stomach-ache, sore throat, diarrhœa, full of cold, give a teaspoonful of "California Fig Syrup," and in a few hours all the foul, constipated waste, undigested food and sour bile gently moves out of the little bowels without griping, and you have a well, playful child again.

You needn't coax sick children to take this harmless, "fruity laxative;" they love its delicious taste, and it always makes them feel splendid.

Ask your druggist for a bottle of "California Fig Syrup," which has directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly on the bottle. Beware of counterfeits sold here. To be sure you get the genuine, ask to see that it is made by the "California Fig Syrup Company." Refuse any other kind with contempt.

When to Suspect Acid Scalp

It isn't age that dulls the hair. Nor frequent washing or curling. If your hair lacks all life and lustre, it may be due to a condition you can correct in twenty-four hours. Acid scalp.

Neutralize the acid secretions of the scalp, and your hair will have the lovely sheen that makes any hair so attractive. A few drops of Danderine will do this; and as its name implies, Danderine is a scientific dandruff dissolvent. Five minutes after Danderine is applied, every particle of dandruff has been dissolved!

Acid scalp should be suspected if your hair is at all stiff or stringy, or won't hold a wave. Another sign—not so easily detected in one's self—is an acrid odor to the hair when it is warm, or after exercise. And for thirty-five cents at any drugstore, you can get a bottle of Danderine that will keep your hair soft and sweet and "on its good behavior" for weeks!

A FEW WORDS TO FATHERS

What Kind of Mates Are You, Men? Are You the Sort That Are Easy to Love—or Not?

By Doris Blake.

WHY all the magazine articles, why all the newspaper articles, the sermons from pulpits and judicial benches about woman and her job of keeping the home fires burning? How about the other party? How about his duties? Are we to believe that his are executed in the sight of man, God and his wife when he brings home a pay envelope, which half the time his wife doesn't get an even break on? "In this appalling increase in divorce, of which we are reminded almost daily, is it possible to believe that woman is the sole cause and with her alone lies the remedy? Does not the old bromide about it taking two to make a quarrel serve in the instance of divorce? And being so, why not ask oftener 'Are Men Husbands?' instead of 'Are Women Wives?' 'Are You on Your Job, Old Frozen Face, Grouch or What Have You?' 'Are You the Sweetheart She Married?' 'Are You a Sympathetic, Loving Husband?' et cetera, et cetera." —Weary.

Fair enough, Weary! Let's ask it. What kind of mate are you, anyway, Old Man?

Just stand still a minute until we get the tape out and see if we have been measuring the wrong person for shortcomings that lead to domestic friction!

Of course, when you married, one of the dreams you had was to be met on your return from work by a charmingly frocked, adorably coiffured, sweetly smiling dear who would offer her arms and lips affectionately while you secretly marveled how such sweet deserts could be meted out to one so undeserving.

Now that you may not be met with the coveted warmth of affection do you ever ask yourself if you might not be responsible for the change? Do you take a real interest in your home? Or, as a homemaker, do you think your job is done with the financing of it?

Of course, you have to go to shop or office every morning, put in a full day of struggle and toil. You have to buck competitors. You have hours, days, perhaps, of anxiety that are grilling. You're doing it all for the little woman and the children. You're honestly intent on getting ahead that they may have more comforts or luxuries, as the case may be; and you, yourself, may be able to enjoy some of them, too. But do you become possessed of the feeling that because of this effort of yours you alone are entitled to all the consideration at the end of the day; that you should be absolved from blame should a worried mood pursue you to the doorstep and the absent minded peck that you bestow be accepted, not at its face value but as meaning your heart is always in the right place, though your moods may vary?

Meet Her Half Way.

If you expect the little woman to greet you warmly, isn't it only fair that you give her the chance with a display of affection yourself? Unhappily, where the emotions are concerned, women are peculiarly sensitive. A warm response is easy enough, however, if there is a smile and a happy greeting to respond to.

Few of us are so phlegmatically built as to escape moods entirely. The wife is expected to respect those of her husband. She accepts the old alibi of business worries for his moments of silence, indifference or curtness because it is her job to try to "understand" her husband. How about husbands striving a bit, too, to understand that the life of a woman with a couple of children to look after during the day is likewise apt to be harassed beyond measure by mischief or accidents they fall into? In between watching them, there are sewing jobs, mending, planning of meals, cooking, doing those hundred and one things around a house to improve its appearance so "John" will have a charming home to bring his friends to.

Suppose, at the end of one of these days, her greeting is a bit preoccupied, a little understanding might save that sulky hour before and during mealtime. A cheery word, an honest interest in what has engaged her day would clear the atmosphere.

Some men seem to expect to walk into a home and find things just as they would be in a hotel. And take just about as much interest in how the management conducts things as there. And their attitude toward the whole place is one of "I pay for it. Why shouldn't it be so?" Praise is the last thing that ever occurs to them to offer. No home was ever broken where praise was given freely.

We hear a good deal of counsel administered to wives about being polite and nice to husbands' friends. Courtesy to a wife's friends is quite as much in order. It is the same gross affront to snub Emma X in your own home as for your wife to "freeze up" when Bill B drops in. If she is willing to accept invitations with you to the homes of friends of yours, what right have you to refuse to play bridge or dine with a woman friend of hers?

Affection Is Appreciated.

How often do you bestow on your mate those little marks of affection so dear to her—an unsolicited caress, a hug, a word of flattery? These are the things that mean more to woman's happiness than motors, pearls or diamond bracelets. The latter are presented on rare occasions but the other little things that make life sweet may be offered frequently and often, and more than anything else to keep alive the love in a woman's heart.

Are you the kind of man who thinks women are incompetent to handle money? If so, have you ever given your wife an honest chance to prove what she could do with it? You aren't the ideal husband just because you give her enough to buy food and clothing for herself and for the family. More bitterness in homes is caused over the money question than any other. Men are woefully short sighted who do not take their wives into their financial confidence.

Half of the extravagances of women are due to ignorance of their mates' earning power or are committed in a spirit of indifference as to whether things can be afforded or not. When the wife is let in on the partnership she knows how the balance sheet stands and there are very, very few wives who will break the confidence placed in them on money matters. When lean days are fallen upon, lean days are lived in the knowledge that when fuller days arrive they, too, will be shared equally.

Hard to Adore.

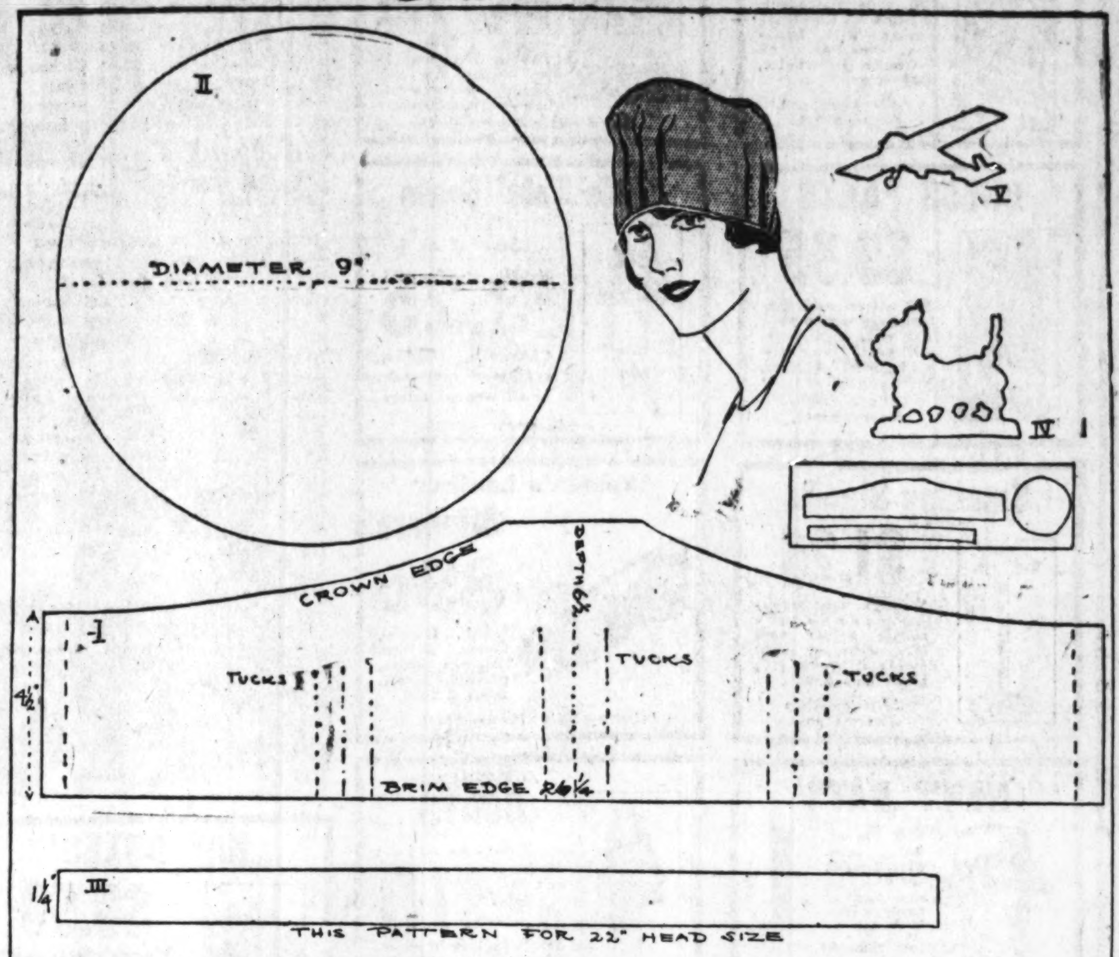
The matters of looks, charm and attractiveness, in spite of the repeated warnings to curl-papered, kimonoed, flat heeled and sallow complexioned women, isn't alone the woman's job where domestic harmony is concerned. An unshaven man, bay-windowed, purple-faced, careless about his linen, his shoes, is just as likely a target for a woman's scorn as the woman who lets her youth and looks get away.

We're not recommending that the wife of such a one transfer her affections to some slenderer, younger male, but there isn't any reason why the world shouldn't say if she did: "It's the husband's own fault. How can you expect a woman to love a man like that?"

If the wife doesn't keep herself charming and attractive enough to hold her husband, she receives very little consolation if he makes off with a younger, prettier woman.

Are you one of these fathers who believes himself to be a good parent because he brings home gifts of toys and on occasional evenings spends a crowded hour of fun and frolic with them, paying the bills but leaving their upbringing entirely to mother? An absentee father, says Harvey O'Higgins,—one who leaves the upbringing of a son to his mother—does the boy a great wrong. If he becomes so absorbed in his profession or in his business as to neglect his children and forget his wife, she is dissatisfied with him and her revolt is unconsciously imitated by her children.

Practical and Fancy Needle Work By Clotilde



Here Is an Interesting Little Felt Hat That May Be Made by the Home Milliner.

ANOTHER one of those interesting close fitting felt hats is shown here, and it can be made in any shade of felt that you like. There are only three pieces in this hat, and it is easy to make and will be up to date and chic when finished.

The hat can be cut from a piece of felt 9x36 inches if a 22 inch head size is right for you. It can be adjusted for other sizes by changing the length of sections 1 and 3 and by the number of tucks put in.

Make small tucks in section 1, as indicated. Then join the ends of this section with the raw edges out. The crown, section 2, is joined to section 1 in the same fashion—that is, with the raw edges out. Adjust and trim the edge of section 2 to get a smooth crown.

The head size band, section 3, is folded lengthwise and sewed on the inside of section 1 at the brim edge is made of a contrasting color the folded edge should extend about one quarter inch below the brim edge of section 1. Be careful in making these hats that you don't get the head size too small, for they can look decidedly close fitting and yet be perfectly comfortable.

Two attractive ornaments are shown, an aeroplane and a Scotch terrier, either one of which you can easily make from a contrasting color. For the older woman, or for formal wear, other ornaments, such as a rhinestone buckle, a flat feather ornament, or bow of ribbon, are more appropriate.

Strange Weddings

> Have you ever seen a wedding so outlandish that it upset all your ideas of the traditional ceremony? Some marriages are foreign and quaint in their adherence to ancient customs; others are ultra modern in their haphazard speed and unconventionality. The Tribune would like to knew the story of the strangest wedding you've ever seen. We will pay $1 for every letter published. Address Strange Weddings, Chicago Tribune.

An Audience of Two.

The bride was the only child of wealthy parents, and her mother maintained she should have an elegant wedding.

The groom was far from rich, and being employed in a large city several hundred miles from the girl's home town she insisted on marrying him there to save him traveling expenses.

Though her mother knew no one in the ctiy to invite to the wedding, she reserved a church, minister, organist, and high priced choir for the occasion, and had the church elaborately decorated with ribbons, flowers, and white carpets in the aisles, and ordered a most beautiful outfit for her daughter.

The ceremony was performed and the singing and decorations were enjoyed by an audience of two—the bride's father and mother. Afterwards the party had dinner at a large hotel.

No wedding trip followed, for the bride and groom went to housekeeping immediately. M. M. S.

THE CHEEKIEST PERSON I EVER MET

> Send us a short, to the point reminiscence of cheekiest person you ever met, and we'll pay you $1 for it if we print it. All letters must be addressed to the Cheekiest Person Editor, The Tribune, Chicago.

Borrowed a Hat to Keep.

When I was 16 my mother allowed me to go into a millinery store to learn to make my own hats. The first one I made was beautiful, and on Thursday, before I had worn it, a friend dropped in, admired it, tried it on, and asked if she might wear it that evening, as she was to visit people who were strangers to me.

I reluctantly consented, thinking she would return it in the morning. She never did return it. Friday night she wore it to a church social, Saturday to choir practice, and Sunday morning and evening in the choir loft.

Monday my indignant mother made me go after the hat. My friend, Lelia, seemed surprised and asked me why I was not wearing her old hat which she had left for me.

There were a dozen unsightly hatpin holes through the delicate pink and white maline and straw. As we attended the same church, as long as I wore that hat some one was sure to ask what I was doing with Lelia's hat. M. S.

A Human Sponge.

A few winters ago we had some deep snow, so that the drifts to the outer buildings were ten feet high and the walks to town where we got supplies were not shoveled for about four days.

The day before the storm a cousin came to visit and of course was snowed in and was compelled to remain more than the afternoon when he came.

After the storm had subsided and the drifting ceased my husband took his shovel and worked for hours alone till he had made a path to the street. My cousin then thought he would go uptown and I said to him, "I wonder if you will get me some sausage for breakfast and a loaf of bread?" as I was tired baking bread and eating eggs. After awhile he came home with the articles and when I asked him how much I owed him for them, he calmly said, "Thirty-five cents," and I paid him. He had been marooned with us four days and helped to eat what we had in store. B. K. A.

Making the Guest Pay.

One day I was invited to a friend's house for lunch. Instead of preparing lunch at home, she asked me if it would be all right with me if we went to a nearby restaurant.

The checks came to $1.80 and she asked me if I would lend her that amount until we got home, as she only had a few dollars with her and wanted to do some shopping on the way. I gave her $2. She paid the cashier, kept the 20 cents change and that was the last I ever saw of my $2. R. J. M.

Plenty of Nerve.

Last year a neighbor bought a car but had no place to keep it, so we offered him space in our garage to use until he had one built. He used the garage several months, for which we charged him nothing.

He often drove a few miles into the country to gather wild blackberries, so one day when he was ready to go I asked him if he would take me and two guests with him. When we returned I thanked him, and laughingly asked, "How much do we owe you?"

He replied in all seriousness, "Fifty cents each," which I paid, and he accepted. E. H. D.

Keep Your Skin Young

DO you know that just beneath that soiled, discolored, faded or aged complexion is one fair to look upon? Nature causes the normal skin to peel off in tiny, unseen, flour-like particles, a little each day, renewing the complexion of youth naturally, but there comes a time when this skin shedding slows up. Worry, overwork, sickness, inactivity are reasons that cause the face to be blotchy, discolored, pimply and old looking. The thing to do, if you wish to look your prettiest at all times, is to assist nature in the process of absorption by using pure Mercolized Wax. Get an ounce at any drug store or beauty counter and use as directed. It gently but surely peels away the outer scarf skin, removing freckles, pimples, blackheads or a muddy complexion. The underneath skin, now in evidence, is clear, pink, fresh and velvety, and the entire face looks years younger. Mercolized Wax brings out the hidden beauty.

To quickly remove wrinkles and other age lines we recommend a face lotion of unusual merit: one ounce powdered saxolite and one-half pint witch hazel.

Care of Babies

This baby has never had a day's sickness and never a cross or fretful spell that lasted an hour. And what do you suppose is responsible for this healthy, happy condition? Not diet, for he has eaten just about anything and everything a child could eat. Not drugs, for he has not been dosed with opiates; he has never had a drop of paregoric. Nor has his sensible mother ever made him taste castor oil. Yet his nerves are sound and his little bowels are strong, and when he does seem the least restless or wakeful, or out of sorts—or likely to be—his mother has him all serene again in ten or fifteen minutes!

The secret of this complete freedom from the many ills and upsets so common to infants? Plain old-fashioned Castoria. A million and more mothers swear by Castoria, and no wonder! A few drops and an approaching fever, colic, diarrhea or constipation seems to vanish in thin air. Castoria is purely vegetable; that is why physicians tell parents they may use it freely with children of any age—the youngest infant. And how they love the taste!

One word of warning; get the pure, real Castoria. Fletcher's Castoria is the original. It is the kind doctors specify. And with every bottle comes a book on "Care and Feeding of Babies" that is worth its weight in gold to any mother or prospective mother. So, remember; tell your druggist you wish Fletcher's Castoria.

The Strange Adventures of Young Robinson Grewso

By KEMBLE

His ma called him Robin; his dad called him son;
He grew like a weed and thought it great fun,
So he called himself Robinson Grewso.

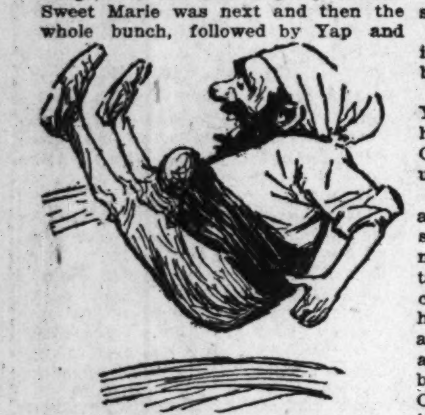
YAP, the dog, ran a few hundred yards up the beach, his nose to the ground, and the puffing band stringing out behind him. Suddenly he stopped short and pointed, not with his nose, but with his right paw.

"In yonder cove," he growled.

And sure enough, under a covering of broken boughs floated the pirate craft. The boys lost no time in pulling her out from her hiding place, for they must start at once if they were to overtake the pirates and prevent them from stealing everything at Robin's camp.

"Everybody pile in," shouted the leader. "Up with the sail and get after them."

Roy, with his two airplane chicks squawking and flapping their huge wings, was the first to jump aboard. Sweet Marie was next and then the whole bunch, followed by Yap and Chin Chin. The catapult gun was run up into the bow and Sundae placed the gum sticking shot in place. Then the race began. A good mile ahead they could see the pirate crew, every inch of sail crowded on their craft, looking anxiously back at their followers.

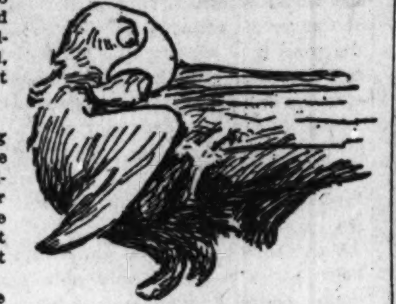


In the fat tummy

Robin quickly discovered that they were not gaining on the enemy and Roy was having a frightful time trying to restrain the airplane chicks. They saw the pirates and wanted to fly to them. Then Dode, the genius, hit upon a bright idea.

"Let's give them a little rope and make them pull us. They can fly all right. What say, mates?"

A mighty cheer went up, and soon the airplane birds were winging it straight for their former owners and pulling the boat through the waters at a great rate. At first the pirates were panic stricken, but soon their terror turned to joy. They pointed upward and cheered; for, sailing high overhead was the old mother airplane bird, making wide circles as she whirled her propeller bill and uttering loud squawks of anger. Nearer and nearer to Robin's boat she came and then, with a mighty swoop, nearly carried the mast away.



A flying leap

"I'll fix her if she does that again!" shrilled Chin Chin.

Robin gazed in amazement. "This is no time to be funny, old bird! Get busy and do something."

"That's just what I'm going to do. You watch little Oswald when that old hen makes another dive for us," and Chin Chin rolled his eyes and ruffled up his feathers.

Again the big bird circled and came at the boat like a rocket and just as she was about to hit it, Chin Chin made a flying leap and grabbed her tail feathers with his beak and both claws. Away the old hen zigzagged; her rudder was out of gear and Robin and his mates sent up a wild whoop as she landed in the water. Overboard went Robin and swam to rescue Chin Chin. With the old parrot soaking wet, he climbed aboard and on shot the boat toward the enemy.

The big chicks took no notice of their mammy's plight, but flew straight for the pirates. Now the boats were side by side. Blip! went the catapult gun and the gum sticking shot landed plumb in the fat tummy of the chief. Overboard he went.

Blip! another shot, this time a miss. The boats drew closer together and Robin gave the order to "board her." With the jab poles jabbing the pirate crew went overboard like so many frogs.

Swimming their fastest they struck out for the old airplane bird, who was still afloat.

And then, as Robin and his victorious pals sailed away with their own boat in tow, they beheld the pirate chief sitting astride the airplane bird trying to straighten out her tail feathers.

ISN'T IT ODD?

By William Atherton DuPuy

ISN'T it odd that government scientists should find it possible to convert a race of five toed guinea pigs into a race of five toed pigs! Here is the way it came about.

Guinea pigs were raised for scientific purposes at one of the government's experiment farms. It was found that once in a while a pig appeared which had a fifth toe. The family that produced it, they figured, had within it a tendency toward fifth toes. By crossing this pig with members of the group from which it came they got several pigs with the fifth toe. They bred these together and presently had a generation all of which had the fifth toe.

This showed the power of selective breeding, which has great value. They carried the idea further. There sometimes occurred, also, a guinea pig that was albino, all white with pink eyes. One of these appeared among the five toed pigs. They followed the same principle of selective breeding for albinos with pink eyes and finally produced a race of guinea pigs with five toes that were albino.

Then selections were made for curly haired pigs. This quality was eventually developed. So had a generation been created that had three strange characteristics that had but rarely existed in their ancestors of a few generations before—pigs that were five toed, were albinos and were curly coated.

The principle back of this selective breeding is, of course, the basis for the development of different strains in plants and anmials. It was by this sort of selection that a strain of white faced catttle was developed. It was by this sort of selection that it came to pass that there are police dogs, bull dogs, poodle dogs. It was by this sort of selection that chrysanthemums were developed from daisies. It is through selection of this sort that there came to be chrysanthemums of many colors. It was through this sort of selection that the giant tomatoes of the dinner table were developed from the small, watery "love apple" of two generations ago. This selective breeding, in fact, is one of the biggest ideas in all livestock and animal breeding and has been worth uncounted millions to the human race.

Virginia's father traveled and was home only two of three times a year. She asked her mother for new roller skates and her mother said, "Why don't you ask your father for them when he comes home?"

Virginia replied, "But I don't know him well enough, mother." B. F. R.

Charles and Freddie had stayed with their grandmother while their mother was sick in the hospital, and grandmother and daddy had kept, as a great surprise, the news that they had two new baby sisters.

Today the boys returned home and were eagerly waiting the arrival of their mother. Freddie was the first to spy her. "Charles," he called joyously, "here's mother."

Then as he perceived that she had a baby in each arm he gasped and stuttered, "and ah-a-a-, gosh, if she ain't brought home a whole taxicab full of babies." D. A. S.

Dr. Caldwell's 3 Rules Keep You Healthy

Dr. Caldwell watched the results of constipation for 47 years, and believed that no matter how careful people are of their health, diet and exercise, constipation will occur from time to time regardless of how much one tries to avoid it. Of next importance, then, is how to treat it when it comes. Dr. Caldwell always was in favor of getting as close to nature as possible, hence his remedy for constipation, known as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, is a mild vegetable compound. It can not harm the most delicate system and is not a habit forming preparation. Syrup Pepsin is pleasant-tasting, and youngsters love it. It does not gripe. Thousands of mothers have written us to that effect.

Dr. Caldwell did not approve of drastic physics and purges. He did not believe they were good for human beings to put into their system. In a practice of 47 years he never saw any reason for their use when a medicine like Syrup Pepsin will empty the bowels just as promptly, more cleanly and gently, without griping and harm to the system.

Keep free from constipation! It robs your strength, hardens your arteries and brings on premature old age. Do not let a day go by without a bowel movement. Do not sit and hope, but go to a druggist and get one of the generous bottles of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. Take the proper dose that night and by morning you will feel like a different person. Use Syrup Pepsin for yourself and members of the family in constipation, biliousness, sour and crampy stomach, bad breath, no appetite, headaches, and to break up fevers and colds. Always have a bottle in the house, and observe these three rules of health: Keep the head cool, the feet warm, the bowels open.

We would be glad to have you prove at our expense how much Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin can mean to you and yours. Just write "Syrup Pepsin," Monticello, Illinois, and we will send you prepaid a FREE SAMPLE BOTTLE.

YOU AND YOUR CHILDREN

By Mrs. Gladys Huntington Bevans

Forearmed with Truth

FOREWARNED is forearmed.

You—father and mother—are the ones to tell your children the truth about the facts of life and reproduction.

You are the ones to tell them the truth about the tremendous manifestation of nature that we call sex—and I wish we had a different name for it, one more dignified, more euphonistic.

You get to your children first with the truth before somebody else does with untruth. You get there before the boy in the street, before the girl who has picked up her knowledge here and there, distorted and unlovely, gets there first.

You get there first yourself so that your girl and your boy will all their lives have a natural feeling and understanding of their bodies and the laws of life.

If saying this over every day for a year would make it seem more important, more necessary, I should like to repeat it that many times. If you love your child, if you reverence life, get there first with all the knowledge that your son and daughter should have, so that they may be forearmed against the misinformation that they are sure to believe if they know nothing else, or nothing better to believe. Tell them the truth so that instead of being pitifully ignorant they are beautifully innocent.

First Impressions.

The first things children hear are the ones that are most apt to stay with them. Whether they are true or untrue, they will color for your children the facts they learn later. If untrue, they sometimes set up inhibitions or repulsions that hamper girls and boys all their lives. If true, such knowledge will help them to walk through the world free and understanding and make it possible for them to shed the often unpleasant misinformation that may come their way. If they hear the truth from you in the way they should, then your children will be able to understand the simple actual facts and to realize the alchemy of nature—to see it as the combination of a master mechanic and a master magician that it is.

Answer Their Questions.

Unless your boy and girl are different from most children they will begin asking you questions of all sorts very, very young. Answer those questions truthfully. If you do, they will ask you another and another from time to time and, if you answer, gradually they will build up a conception of life, an understanding of their bodies and of the reproduction of life that will be a great spiritual possession to them. It will be a bulwark of truth. It will fit sex into the pattern of life as naturally as sleep and sun and food and play and all the bodily functions fit into it.

But if you do not answer these questions, if you evade them, if you put them off, if you tell them they're too young to know this or too young to know that, they'll stop coming to you for information. Then they'll do one of several other things. Either they'll ask some one not equipped to tell them, or if they're not inquiring they'll ask no one, but will glean casually from time to time misinformation from other children. Or they will not gain much knowledge until they grow up and then the fact of these natural things will come to them as a shock. It is not an uncommon experience. I suppose, for instance, we have all heard older women say that many girls of their generation were married without the faintest conception of what the marriage relation meant. Ignorance of vital matters wasn't limited to those times.

In our day there are many families in which not a word passes between mothers and daughters and fathers and sons, or mothers and sons and fathers and daughters, of the important fundamental things of life.

Your Own Children.

If, at the present moment, your children are babies or nearly so, you are lucky because you can begin at the beginning and they will take all you have to tell them as they take everything else you give them—as a matter of course. If your children are older and you have never talked with them on these subjects—begin now. If you've brought children into the world there should be nothing under heaven that you cannot discuss with them—nothing should be a barrier between you. More than that, it is your duty to come close to them—as close to them spiritually as you were close to them in body when they were born.

None of this is mere theory that I am talking. It is proven, workable practice. I have not only seen it successfully carried out among the fathers and mothers and children of some of my friends, but I know from my own experience. It has been revealing, absorbing, to watch my boy through the years as he has heard the answers to his questions—the intense but everyday interest occasionally touched with wonder with which he has accepted the natural facts of life.

So I say again and again—get there first—forearm your children with truth.

(Another Sunday article will follow this one on the same subject.)

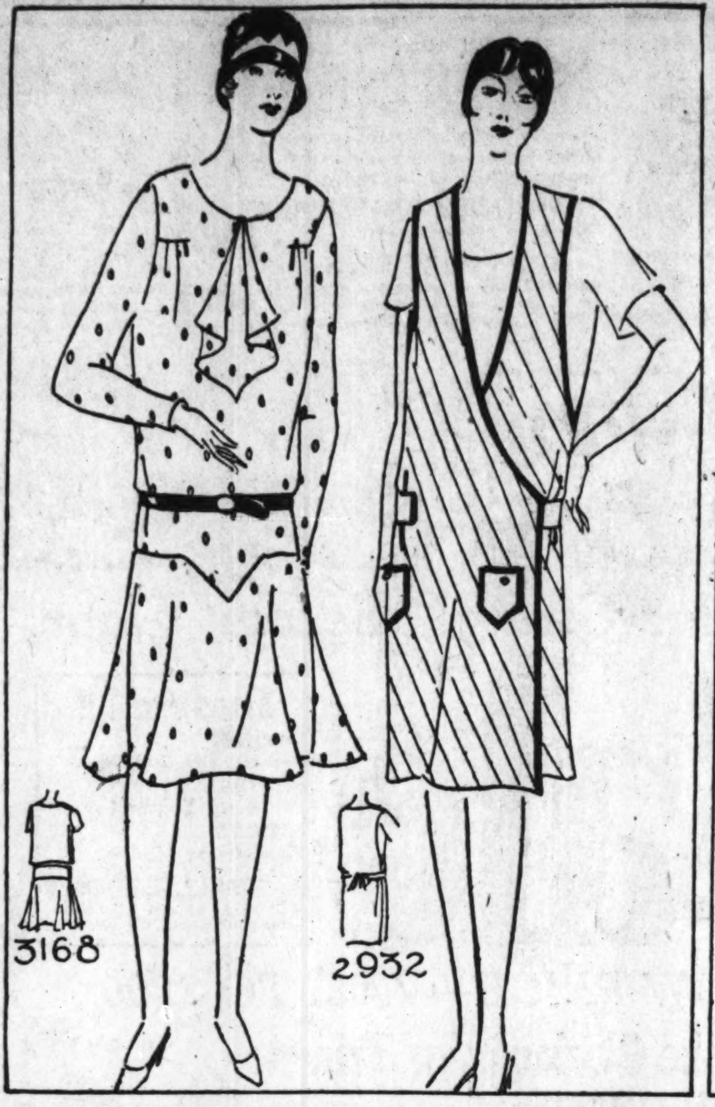
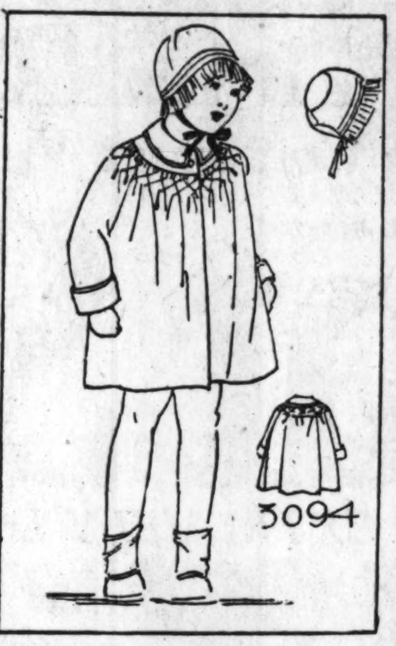
Patterns by Clotilde

Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.; Copyright, 1927, by The Chicago Tribune.





3168—Woman's and miss' dresses. Sizes 16 and 18 years and 36, 38, 40 and 42 inches bust measure. Size 36 requires 3⅜ yards of 40 inch material.

2932—Woman's and miss' aprons. Sizes 16 and 18 years and 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44 inches bust measure. Size 36 requires 3¾ yards of 36 inch material with 7 yards of binding.

3094—Child's coat and hat. Sizes ½, 1 and 2 years. The 1 year size requires 1⅝ yards of 40 inch material with 1⅛ yards of 40 inch lining.

HOW TO USE THE PATTERNS

A BECOMING, youthful slenderizing type of apron is shown in patern No. 2932. It entirely covers the dress, assuring perfect protection. The armholes are deep and comfortable, and there are two roomy patch pockets. This apron is made with reversible fronts, closing in surplice fashion, and having a narrow belt attached at either side of the front, and tying snugly in a bow in the back, holding the apron close to the dress at the waistline.

Blocked gingham, figured percale, plain or printed sateen and cotton pongee are attractive and practical materials for aprons. If this is made of a solid color, choose a contrasting shade for the binding. Or if a printed material is used choose some color used in the printed design for the binding.

There are many times when getting dinner that it is a convenience to dress before the meal, and with an apron like this to slip on over a nice frock no one need be worried about hurting it.

I imagine many mothers will be delighted to have a pattern of a baby's coat and bonnet like No. 3094. Kasha, cashmere or satin are any of the suitable materials and the directions that come with the pattern are so clear that there shouldn't be any difficulty in making them.

The coat is cut with a little round yoke that is seamed on the shoulders. And to this the coat is shirred or smocked. The full length, one piece sleeves are finished with rather deep, turned back cuffs, and the neck has a small, flat round collar. Crêpe is a favorite lining material, and choose a good quality of crêpe de chine, having it the same color as the coat, or a lighter shade of the same color.

The small bonnet or hat can be made of the coat material, and the strings will be pretty if you hemstitch the hems.

Pattern No. 3168 is for a delightful model featuring a collarless, round neckline completed with a cascading jabot, and an intriguing rippling skirt with circular fullness in the back as well as the front. The bodice part of this pretty dress is decidedly long waisted, and has an unusual line across the bottom in the front. Fullness is let in at either side of the armholes on the front, simulating a yoke.

The pattern provides for long or short sleeves, and the entire dress can be made without any trimming other than the finish at the neck, sleeve edges, the bottom of the skirt, and where skirt and waist are joined. The jabot may be made of the dress material and have picoted edges, and you no doubt will be able to find exactly the sort of narrow belt to wear with the dress. There never was a greater variety than the shops show today.

Crêpe de chine, faille crêpe, printed velveteen, wool crêpe and supple woolens are chosen by the smartly dressed woman for this style of dress.

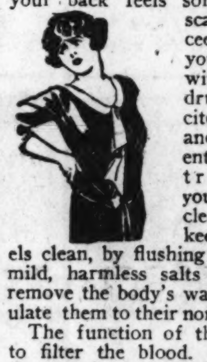
IF BACK HURTS FLUSH KIDNEYS



When your kidneys hurt and your back feels sore, don't get scared and proceed to load your stomach with a lot of drugs that excite the kidneys and irritate the entire urinary tract. Keep your kidneys clean like you keep your bowels clean, by flushing them with a mild, harmless salts which helps remove the body's waste and stimulate them to their normal activity.

The function of the kidneys is to filter the blood. In 24 hours they strain from it 500 grains of acid and waste, so we can readily understand the vital importance of keeping the kidneys active.

Drink lots of good water—you can't drink too much; also get from any pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts. Take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning for a few days and your kidneys may then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help clean and stimulate clogged kidneys; also to neutralize the acids in the system so they are no longer a source of irritation, thus often relieving bladder weakness.

Jads Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to help keep their kidneys clean and active. Try this; also keep up the water drinking, and no doubt you will wonder what became of your kidney trouble and backache.

Answers to Love Queries

By Doris Blake

Too Young to Be Steady.

"Dear Miss Blake: I am 20 years of age and go around steadily with a fellow 19. I care for this fellow but feel he is too young for me. MARIE."

He's too young for a "steady," Marie. His mind isn't settled, and his tastes are likely to change any minute, so you don't want to depend upon him entirely for your good times.

Date Breaker.

"Dear Miss Blake: I go with a young man who has broken several dates with me. Should I keep on going with him? BLUE EYES."

Having allowed him to break dates before, you can't expect he will be particular about keeping them in the future. 'Twould be better to find another beau.

Eats Pork and Beans, Cucumbers—Sleeps Just Fine—No Gas

THREE PEOPLE out of every four are afraid to eat many of the foods they like. They know that if they do they are sure to suffer from gas, sourness or indigestion. Yet, as in the case of Mr. Brooks, this condition can often be overcome.

"Gas on the stomach and nervousness made it impossible for me to do anything but worry. I always felt bloated—nights I couldn't sleep. All this has been changed since taking Adlerika. I eat anything I want now—things like pork and beans, cucumbers and fried onions. My nervousness is gone and I sleep better. I sure can recommend Adlerika."—Geo. C. Brooks, Knoxville, Tenn.

Quick Action Surprises

AS GENTLY and naturally as taking a drink of water, Adlerika acts upon BOTH upper and lower bowels, bringing immediate relief from gas bloating, intestinal stasis and chronic constipation.

The very FIRST dose of Adlerika often brings out astonishing amounts of old waste matter from the intestinal canal. This poisonous matter may have been in the intestines a long time, causing gas, headache, sleeplessness and many other symptoms. A treatment of a few weeks with Adlerika often corrects chronic constipation and intestinal stasis, so that just a small dose, now and then, keeps the intestines and stomach in a most satisfactory condition.

What Doctors Say

DR. H. LOUIS SHOUB, B. Sc., well-known New York pathologist, after laboratory tests on living subjects, states: "Adlerika very markedly reduces the number of bacteria and colon bacilli. This feature increases the therapeutic value of Adlerika, because, in addition to its intestinal cleansing action, it inhibits the growth of these intestinal bacteria."

Dr. A. J. Lancaster, a physician of over a quarter century's active experience, makes this statement: "In the treatment of gastro-intestinal disorders, (where thorough evacuation is indicated), Adlerika has no equal."

Dr. Carl Weschcke, a graduate of the world-famous medical University of Heidelberg, Germany, in his private practice, first perfected the intestinal cleanser and carminative now known as Adlerika. It is a compound of a specially processed saline intestinal evacuant with buckthorn and cascara, together with glycerine and other ingredients which expel gas and have detergent action.

Adlerika, unlike most other medicines, acts upon BOTH upper and lower bowels. It is recognized by many physicians as the one dependable remedy for gas, intestinal stasis and chronic constipation, or whenever real intestinal cleansing is needed.

Even if your bowels move every day, Adlerika may surprise you by bringing out poisonous, gas-forming matter which you would never believe was in your system.

In just a single month, over one thousand men and women wrote that they obtained wonderful relief from even a short treatment with Adlerika. Many of them said that now, after all other treatments and medicines had failed, they are at last rid of gas, indigestion, sour stomach, sleeplessness, nervousness or other trouble due in their cases to intestinal stasis. And now, these folks say, they are again able to eat and enjoy the foods they like.

No matter what you have tried for the bowels and stomach, Adlerika will surprise you.

Sold by over 39,000 druggists.

HIST! HERE'S SOME FOREIGN PROPAGANDA FOR OUR MAYOR

British Fashions Rule Our Men Folk, While Milady Looks to Paris

But There's Hope, The Price Is Always In American Dollars

By GENEVIEVE FORBES HERRICK.

If Mayor Thompson and "Sport" Herrmann, and the others ever have that big bonfire of school books alleged to be hostile to the cause of America First, they would do well to buy another box of matches, and to touch off a really big display of fireworks, not of text books, but of fashion magazines and advertisements. There is propaganda, indeed, in silks and perfumes, in cold creams and creamy cravats; propaganda for men and for women.

THE BRITISH INFLUENCE

King George, the sly dressmaker, wields a lot of influence over the way the really smart American man's pants are held up. He is a force to be reckoned with when it comes to proper cravats and aristocratic gloves. And while few local hostesses can persuade their butlers to squeeze their calves into silk stockings and knee breeches, still no American butler worthy of his hire would dare look to anything save his English cousin. That's for the men. When it comes to women, the French costumer, and hair dresser and perfumer, push King George back on his throne and take over the field. O, Italy, Spain and the Orient come in for their cut on publicity, but it's small. The royal road to style is still Bond street and the Rue de la Paix.

THE GENTLEMAN'S HAT

Don't let the mayor and his committee know about it. But here's what we learned by just the most casual investigation:

There is a picture of an exciting American football game. A pretty young man, well in the foreground, is wearing a Derby [and be sure that you pronounce the "e" as if it were "a"]. The legend beneath the picture informs us that "even at the most brilliant pageants of the year, a gentleman's hat will claim your attention." Such an arresting piece of headgear is fashioned, of course, by a London hat man. Then there is a message for the men who are "Tuxedo conscious," whatever that may be. A splendid line of thoroughly Tory vestings and facings are recommended. The background of the picture is a jolly English club.

And how is this for a bit of stylish sedition, if that's what you wish to call it? We quote it verbatim:

"Topcoats that carry a bit of Britain with them wherever they go and as long as they last. And haberdashery, remarkably well chosen and moderately priced, that reminds you of the shops at Oxford."

If that be treason, make the most of it. Then there is that new coat for men christened deliberately "Mayfair."

GOD SAVE OUR BUTLERS

So simple and guileless an implement as a shaving brush may, in the opinion of our city fathers, be an insidious instrument of British propaganda. At least one firm I know suggests "Christmas gifts for new world shavers from old world master brush makers" and has the temerity to advertise "best British brushes."

It is when it comes to the picturization of butlers that American scouts find material abundantly at hand. There he is, perfect for afternoon—black cloth coat and a double-breasted vest, dark gray striped worsted trousers—correct in every detail.

There he is, in the next picture, perfect for evening—dress coat, regulation vest and trousers to match of black dress worsted in the "conventional cloth and cut for butler's evening dress."

Nor does youth escape. What chance, the mayor will doubtless argue, has a little Chicago child against the influence of a pair of correct little British children smiling complacently from the printed page and directing us to the paragraph beneath. The paragraph goes something like this:

"With such children for inspiration, London fashions for the outdoors reach heights of smartness never quite equaled anywhere else. Here are two examples. A fine wool jersey play frock, straight from the afternoon convocations of nurses and prams in Kensington gardens, and a tweed coat which in its glowing British quality is a veritable breath of Bond street."

TRAITOROUS WORDS

Underline those words — "play frock," "prams," "Kensington gardens," "glowing British quality," and "a veritable breath of Bond street."

Yes, a bonfire of English topcoats and British galluses and the literature solemnly describing them would be a mammoth thing. But right next to it our city censor would have another rubbish heap labeled, possibly, French propaganda. And it would be piled high with perfume bottles, cold cream jars, hair curling fluids, lipsticks, and bath salts containers. The lake level could be raised a monstrous number of inches, even feet, if all the perfume that is said to be Parisian were to be poured into patriotic Lake Michigan.

Why, the adjectives alone that pile up in the announcements of French beauty unguents would fill a telephone book for a city the size, say, of Evanston.

•A BIT THICK — EH WHAT BILL?•

IT'S "LA PARFUM"

Here, again, my investigation was casual, and, of course, quite unofficial. In the first place, let us look at perfume, if that isn't a too badly mixed metaphor.

Never, never say "perfume." It is always "Le Parfum"; its particular name is always in French, written in italics, and with the English translation, in brackets, following immediately. It never comes in a bottle, always in a "flacon," and again the italics.

Then there are the descriptive words, adjectives and nouns, sprinkled about so lavishly. There is "allure" and "subtle." There is "naive" and "sophisticated." And, inevitably and everlastingly, there is "mystery," sometimes spelled "mystere," just to make it more so. Here's one example from so many:

A house of fragrance remarks: "Observing the pageant of loveliness at its Parisian source, 'Abracadabra' company interprets it in smart parfums, and with authoritative artistry this parfumeur has devised three individual odeurs." You can surely guess what the English of "parfums," "parfumeur," and "odeurs" must be, can't you?

A of this enchanting trio is booked as a thrilling fragrance which holds the very essence of the joy of life.

B is the "fresh, eager fragrance of the country after a soft spring rain. It speaks of the promise of youth."

And C is a "glorious bouquet with just a bit of mystery to make it more alluring."

RAVISHING BEAUTIES

And on occasion, the lure may be international, but with little emphasis on Plymouth Rock or the drainage canal. One brand of perfume announces a new odor. We'll call it "On the Go," because that is not its name.

"This fragrance possesses the exquisite charm, the modern feeling of those who are no longer at home on one continent, but roam over the whole world as the impulse takes them. 'On the Go' recalls so many pleasant places and charming people, going over to Paris for new frocks, motoring through shadowy English lanes, flying through the clouds to a country house party. 'On The Go' has an intangible vitality that appeals anew each time one takes the stopper from the French bottle."

Chicago historians may turn their attention from George the Third, to another "third," Napoleon this time. For a certain brand of foreign face cream for local faces announces that "the ravishing beauties of the social and professional world, in Europe, from the time of the third Napoleon, have had Creme So and So in their poudreuses."

If you wish "dramatic eyes," look to France.

Lingerie is said to "charm with a true Parisian accent, with an accent as unmistakably Parisian as if you had bought it on the Rue de la Paix."

A famous dress designer boasts that he gives "sophistication a new twist" in a quintet of models, "rich, alluring and symbolic of enchanting Paris."

ONE BIT OF SOLACE

And so it went, in this quite unofficial and volunteer investigation of mine. English cravats and French eyebrow pencils; London gaiters and Paris perfumes; British brushes and continental cosmetics.

Throughout the gloom of French phrases in italics and British phrases in capitals I found one bit of solace for the sons and daughters of the Fathers of the American Revolution.

The price is always printed in terms of the American dollars.

Try These POETIC POSERS

By Norman Lustig and William J. Fadiman.

Do you remember the old poems you were taught at school? Can you recognize the most famous lines and then tell what poem they are chosen from, and who wrote them?

The first quotation is by the gloomy author whose home still stands in a Bronx park; the second is now widely sung. Of course, every one uses the third, but where does it come from? The author of the eighth is noted as the writer of "When the Frost Is on the Pumpkin." The fifth is by a poet whose name is the title of a Catholic dignitary; and after once reading the long poem from which the tenth quotation is taken, it is impossible to forget the "glittering eye." The last line of the seventh is quoted daily, but, despite popular opinion, Shakespeare did not write it. The sixth is from the beautiful lyric by a dear friend of Shelley's; and the ninth is the opening stanza of the famous poem written in a churchyard. The fourth has nothing to do with Omar, although the Arabs are mentioned.

Counting 5 for correct title and 5 for author guessed correctly, see if you can score an average of 60 per cent. If you can't score 100 per cent, look at the answers in another column on this page.

Planes Revolutionize Polar Exploration, Says Gen. Nobile

BERLIN.—(AP)—Gen. Nobile, the Italian airship constructor and arctic aviator, in a lecture on "The Airship in the Service of Arctic Exploration" at the Charlottenburg Polytechnic, described how aviation had completely revolutionized polar exploration, pointing out that today it was possible to fly from Spitzbergen in 16 hours to the spot which took Fritjof Nansen in 1898 three days to reach.

Of the two means of aerial locomotion, Gen. Nobile gave preference to the airship, from which he said, better and more scientific investigations were possible than from an airplane, because it could be brought to a standstill in midair at a certain height, besides allowing of a greater radius of action.

From the experiences of his polar flight, May 11 to 14, 1926, the speaker deduced that to prevent the formation of ice on the airship it was necessary to cover all metal parts with a thick layer of grease and, above all, the propeller should be rendered immune against ice formation. The fatal influence of low temperatures on motors with gas valves was also to be considered. From Spitzbergen, he declared, many important flights could be undertaken, provided more appropriate bases than now existed were established.

Home Is Where You Change Clothes

LONDON.—(AP)—English home life is being killed by automobiles. Instead of wanting homes to go to, people want hotels and flats to go from.

This is the opinion of a veteran London architect, C. F. Annesley Voysey, who has been designing English houses for 53 years. He is 70 years old.

In his younger days he was kept busy designing houses, but with the advent of the automobile he finds time to plan public buildings, war memorials, tapestries, and fine carpets.

A colored man persuaded his friend, who was an aviator, to take him up in his airplane. It was at a county fair and a big crowd was present. When high in the air the aviator looped the loop, took a tail spin, skidded off into space, and, shutting off his motor, said:

"Rastus, I'll bet 100 per cent of those people down there thought we were going to fall."

"Well," answered Rastus, "I'll bet 50 per cent of the people up here thought so too."—Youth's Companion.

HOLLERAN YELL AND YOUNG INSULTS

Uncouthness Doesn't Pay

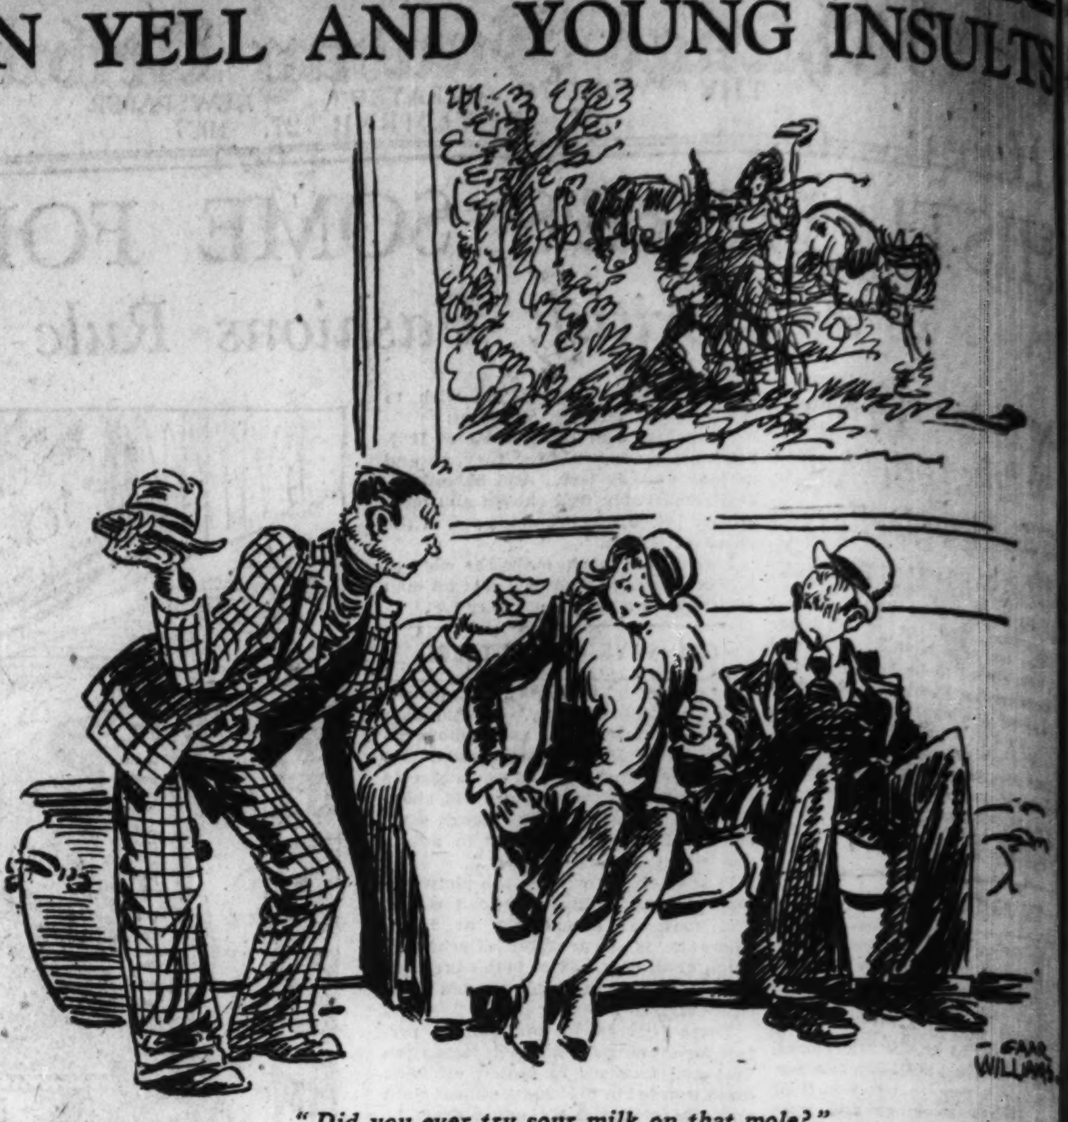
By Westbrook Pegler.

WHEN I was the manager of Young Insults I used to work my brains out at all hours of the day and night getting him out of predicaments, as he was always going around cracking insulting remarks at people in a very uncouth way and every time he would do this it would cause a predicament as these people would become insulted.

One day I introduced him to my loving helpmeet and instead of asserting "I am pleased to meet you, lady," he asserted, "Did you ever try sour milk on that mole?"

Another day when we were discussing business matters with a well to do millionaire, who was going to promote a battle of the century between my bum and another sportsman, my bum looked at a picture on the millionaire's desk and inquired, "Is that your helpmeet?"

"Yes," asserted the millionaire, "that is my helpmeet," and my bum stated, "With your dough I could do better."



"Did you ever try sour milk on that mole?"

HOW'S THE GANDER?

Another time I took him to an exclusive society mansion to box an exhibition contest in the ballroom before some refined society leaders and after the exhibition, they invited us to eat some repast. So while we were eating our repast, Young Insults turned to a refined society leader and inquired, "How is the gander?"

"What do you mean, gander?" inquired the society leader, so I explained in a cultured way that he meant, "How is your husband?"

"O," stated the society leader, "he has gone away," and of course, by this she meant that her gander was deceased, as the refined way of stating that a party is deceased is to state they have gone away. But my bum was not familiar with these customs and he thought this exclusive matron meant something else.

"Well," he stated, very uncouthly, "if I had as much funds as you have got I would certainly get him paroled."

FUN MISUNDERSTOOD

This kind of ignorant conduct made it very difficult for me to manage Young Insults. Some times he would insult officers of the law and they would put him under glass, as the slang expression goes, so I would have to wear out my brains all night long obtaining a bondsman and in the morning I would have to pay a lawyer the sum of $25 or $50 to tell the judge that my bum was just a playful, high spirited athlete and how his exhibitions in the roped arena were helping little boys to grow up with a love for self reliance, fair play and good citizenship.

Then I would have to spend some more funds for a doctor because usually the police officer would continue the good natured tussle with my boy after he got the handcuffs on him and got him in the cage and this often caused little injuries, such as a slight fracture of the skull, or the loss of a few teeth.

Whenever I would put Young Insults into the squared circle for a contest he would insult his adversary. He would smile politely, but it seemed that he could not learn anything about tactfulness, so his adversaries would always become insulted. Sometimes he would grab his adversary around their neck and whisper in their ear, "Well, I see that your loving helpmeet was running around with a bookmaker while you were fighting over in Scranton." Or, he might remark, "I hear your old mother is going to the poorhouse. That is too bad."

This would irritate this adversary and they would fling science to the windows so the contest would disintegrate into a disgusting mockery on the art of self defense, with my gentleman remaining cool and pasting the other bum in a very skillful way.

WHERE IGNORANCE IS SMART

"Why are you always cracking insults at your adversary?" I used to inquire of my bum.

"O," he would say, "I suppose it is because I am just an urchin from the dregs of a big city and do not know any better because I am ignorant."

"Well," I would continue, "why don't you take up refinement?"

"Because," he would assert, "I am too smart."

And then he would crack some insulting comment about me, and his favorite insult was to call my nose a gin lily, which was the same thing as accusing me of using too much stimulant.

In time my gentleman became famous for his clever insults and other pugilists refused to box with him, knowing that he would insult them and cause them to fling science to the windows and get pasted on their kisser. So I would sit around my favorite relaxing resort, relaxing for days at a time, trying to get up enough energy to think up some scheme to get him a contest to earn some resources. But every time I would approach some gentleman for a contest with their bum they would say, "My dear sir, we will fight your bum when he loses his voice so he cannot insult my fine, clean living, sensitive sportsman."

"YOU, TOO, JUDGE?"

It was impossible to meet him without being insulted more or less. One morning when he was in court the judge asked if he was intoxicated the night before and he replied, "You and me, both."

Thirty days later when I called for him at the jailhouse I was greatly cheered to learn that he had a very bad cold from sleeping without any blankets because he insulted the keeper and he could not speak because he had lost his voice.

"Well," I remarked brightly, "you can't insult anybody just now so I will obtain a contest for you at once because I have been sucking my paw for thirty days and I am practically in the hands of the receivers without any bum to earn funds for me."

So I obtained a contest with a prominent young bum by the name of Emil Evil, assuring his manager that my gentleman was entirely dumb from this cold and could not crack any insults. But when I informed Young Insults about this affair he took a piece of paper and wrote: "Send for Prof. Lorenzo, the tattooing artist, as I wish to be tattooed."

Thinking this was just some boyish whim, I got the professor and he brought his needles and ink and a lot of designs, such as butterflies and schooners and lodge emblems.

"What about a nice rock of ages on your chest," the professor suggested. My bum shook his head and wrote on paper:

"No rock of ages. Tattoo on my chest, 'I am fighting a bum,' in red and blue letters six inches high."

It took a couple of days for the tattooing to dry out, but in the meantime his cold became so bad that I called the doctor who used to sew up his head when he would get arrested.

"You have a bad case of bronco trouble and I will have to stick a pulling plaster on your chest," asserted the doctor, and with that he pasted the pulling plaster right over the tattooing.

My bum wrote on the paper, "That is fine, as we will leave the pla place until I enter the squared and then we will pull it off and veil this tattooed insult to my ad sary."

But, my dear sir, when we en the squared circle, our advers manager did not give us a chan unveil the tattooing, as he gr the referee by the arm, walked to our corner and said, "That pl will have to come off, as it's ag the rules."

So he reached out and gave the p ter a yank, but it stuck so hard when it came off it took away of the tattooing. And the word came off on the plaster was the dle word so that instead of re "I am fighting a bum," the tatt asserted: "I am a bum."

Well, the patrons of the many began shouting "Insults is a b and Emil Evil finally spelled ou sign, too, and began remarking " sults is a bum."

The result was very unfort because my stiff lost his te threw science to the windows and knocked into a state of uncon ness. So ever since then I have careful to avoid insulting people my bum was a sad example of a man can carry the habit to extremes that he will let fly wi terrific insult and find that insulting himself the worst of al

Haunts of Chicago's Night Life Have Sent Many Entertainers Out to Amuse the World

Gilda Gray and Sophie Tucker Got Their Starts Here

GILDA GRAY.

NOW that it's only a question of time until hip flasks will be subtracted by legal process, not guaranteed painless, from the pleasures of Chicago's night life and the prohibition shock troops are preparing to rout the last feeble rays from the cabarets, old timers have reverted to avid discussion of the "good old days."

What their conversation is actually intended to convey, of course, is the conviction that they were in reality the bad old days. A picturesque naughtiness, you understand. But, as compared with the night clubs of this age of soft drinks and tablecloth snifters, distinctly devilish.

A prolific source of argument—the exact ratio of Chicago's morals, past and present. A by-product of these reminiscences, however, proves vastly more interesting, dealing as it does with personalities instead of generalities, with the rise of former favorite entertainers as contrasted with the fall of John Barleycorn.

FORTUNE IS FICKLE

Fortune may be a fickle lady, but she has seen fit to smile benignly upon more than one of the boys and girls who once hoofed it uncomplainingly for a paltry salary in the city's nocturnal haunts. Some of those who were graduated into the theatrical big league are still twinkling as bright particular stars in that constantly changing firmament. Others have drifted into the oblivion of the Never-Never land.

It doesn't seem to be anywhere on record what a cabaret prima donna thinks about as she fixes the suspender salesman from Great Meadows with a limpid eye and warbles about one or the other of the inevitable trio from Tin Pan Alley—her mammy, or her sweetie, or the moon.

But ambition flames as brightly under the incandescents in the stuffy atmosphere of a night club as in sun flooded office or factory. And if the songstress be the kind of girl who visions herself as a sometime headliner on Broadway, the chances are about fifty-fifty that she is hoping against hope that the suspender salesman is really a Follies' scout with a discerning eye for potential talent, and that she isn't grandstanding in vain.

SHIMMYING GILDA

For precedents, if she needs to comfort herself with such reflections, there is the meteoric career of Gilda Gray, which gathered its first momentum in the resorts in Chicago devoted to dancing, dining, and drinking.

The last, it might be remarked in passing, was not the least of these in those days, being indulged in with gusto by citizens of whatever strata of the social scale, whenever the impulse moved them. It was the pre-Volstead era.

It was no theatrical scout, it chanced, who piloted Gilda of the uncertain shoulders into the path of fame and wealth in which she has strolled—or shimmied—through ensuing years. It was the enterprise of Gilda herself [born Maryanna Michalski of Milwaukee] that brought her her opportunity.

As an entertainer in the old Arsonia café, at Madison and Paulina; at the Entertainers, then operated at 35th and Indiana avenue by Doner and Gerald, and at other centers of Chicago's night life during the decade that preceded national prohibition [which automatically wiped out many a gay rendezvous], the little Polish girl did her song and dance and received her meed of applause. In those days she was billed as May Gray.

ROBBED OF JEWELS

Seeking new fields to conquer, May went to New York and made her home with a girl friend while she sought a job. She found it in the cabaret of Gil Boag, and there New York found her and the divertisement she offered—and the lean days were over.

Having already changed her first name from May to Gilda, it was in the natural course of events, it seemed, that she change her last to Boag. She has been the wife of Gil Boag, her former employer, for several years.

In the interim before her marriage, Gilda returned to Chicago for engagements here, and on one occasion, returning from an evening's appearance at a local theater, reported to police that she had been robbed of $50,000 worth of jewels. Nor was she prostrated by the loss. Her attitude of self-possessed concern intimated that even if the holdup men never were apprehended she would continue to gleam and glitter as of yore.

SOPHIE STARTS HERE

Little wonder that Gilda Gray's success has set a mark for the girls who nightly parade their talents to Chicago cabaret crowds. But it is not without its rivals.

There is, for instance, the blonde and buxom Sophie Tucker, one of the original "coon shouters." The "I knew her when" fraternity credits Sophie with having been Chicago born and bred. Be that as it may, there is little doubt that she was Chicago made, professionally. It was a Chicago newspaperman who discovered her and nicknamed her "The Mary Garden of Ragtime," a sobriquet that has stuck to the singer with the praiseworthy tenacity of flypaper.

Sophie's early stamping ground appears to have been generously distributed over the west side and in the loop. She is reported to have caroled her syncopations with vim and vigor at a place owned by Dave Lewinsohn, on the roof of the old Masonic temple, now the Capitol building.

From there she went with Lewinsohn as one of his stars to an establishment he opened at Wabash avenue and Congress street at a salary said to have been $50 a week. This cabaret, known as the Congress café, was for a considerable period one of the most popular places in the city. It is credited with being the first to introduce a floor show such as is common today, the production, with its small chorus, pointing the way toward the frequently elaborate revues now seen.

As for the measure of Sophie Tucker's progress, she has sung her sonorous ballads with unflagging zeal and at a constantly increasing weekly stipend, both in America and in Europe, until her present salary is reported, on apparently good authority, to be $3,000 every seven days.

One more mark for the mammy singers to shoot at was provided in days gone by through another blonde beauty, Bee Palmer, who shared—or rather disputed—with Gilda Gray the doubtful distinction of having originated the shimmy.

The old Arsonia knew Bee Palmer; so did the Congress café; so did the frequenters of both. She was a favorite in Chicago long before she followed the trail blazed by Gilda that led to Broadway and the Follies.

Later she toured the country in a vaudeville turn with her husband and accompanist, Al Siegal. Domestic strife that culminated in an alienation of affections suit for $250,000, filed by Siegal against Jack Dempsey, and a divorce decree seem also to have been her final bid for public attention.

Bee blamed her husband's professional jealousy of the applause she received. Siegal blamed the unprofessional attentions he charged the then matrimonially unhampered Dempsey had paid his wife. Jack claimed that he hardly knew the actress and there is no evidence that his claim ever was refuted or that the acquaintance cost him so dear.

The further matrimonial adventures of the comely Beatrice, who, like Sophie Tucker, was a Chicago product, are veiled in the same haze of uncertainty that clouds her professional career. Certain it is that her fame has not endured to the degree attained by her old time rival, Gilda Gray.

DALE WINTER SUCCEEDS

Then there was Dale Winter, who began in a south side church choir and wound up in the carbarets. Although she became best known as the second wife of "Big Jim" Colosimo, whom she married just a few weeks preceding his assassination in his own café on Wabash avenue, the erstwhile Sunday school girl showed promise of talent that might have led her along the paths of glory in the musical world, to which she aspired, according to those who say they know.

The expensive lessons Colosimo provided, however, went the way of the luxurious gowns and the gems she could have commanded as sole heir to his fortune after his death. But legal experts ruled that her marriage in another state took place too soon after his Illinois divorce from his first wife to be legal in this commonwealth. So the first wife inherited the property, and Dale Winter went into musical comedy.

And thus the success sorority of Chicago cabarets added one more to its growing list of alumnæ, for she did well by herself and her backers.

A few years ago Dale Winter married the San Francisco actor-producer, Henry Duffy. Not only has the marriage endured, but she is reputed to have scored socially on the west coast. As the high school annual used to say under the photo of the sweet girl graduate, "Her ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace."

SO DOES RAE SAMUELS

Scintillating as brightly as ever she did in the old days at the Congress café, which seems to have sponsored an extraordinary number of popular performers, vibrant Rae Samuels still writes her name in electric lights and her fame in four figures weekly. Her most recent visit behind local footlights was less than a month ago.

As a character singer Rae Samuels developed a personality that needed little grooming to blossom full blown into star material. It may or may not have helped that she married one Marty Forkins, a prize fighter who turned theatrical booking agent. They went east, and under her husband's management Rae climbed steadily into further favor with her songs and skits.

These, though, do not by any means comprise the sum total of the stars who will attend if the sorority ever stages a homecoming. Valeska Suratt will be there. So will Frances Kennedy—now retired to quiet domesticity, by the way. So will Nora Bayes, née Goldberg, who gravitated to Chicago, like Gilda Gray Boag, by way of Milwaukee. And scores of lesser celebrities.

But what of the younger generation that clogs and clowns from dusk to dawn to charm dull care away for the night club dalliers and to keep the cake in the cuboard? The law of averages is taking care of its own, one hears. For instance, two little dancers from the Midnight Frolics have recently been recruited into featured rôles in the Follies. They are Dorothy Ellsworth and Olive McClure.

MUCH STRICTER NOW

Things in the cabarets are not what they were in the "good old days," say the old timers. And "they certainly aren't," agrees Ernie Young, Chicago producer, to whom the majority of the girls looking for cabaret positions apply sooner or later.

"Then," he explains, "it was part of the work of the entertainers to mingle with the patrons and to dance with those that wanted partners, or otherwise see to it that they enjoyed themselves. Now a cabaret that permits its girls to visit at the tables is classed as a 'joint.' In the majority of the better cafés the girls are not even permitted to enter through the restaurant. They must use a side door, and may have no callers except in the social room provided for that purpose back of the stage—if there is one.

"They used to get by and into the shows even if they were green as grass, but we are coming more and more to demand some sort of training. Most of the girls that come to me now are youngsters, some from country towns, others from Chicago. Lots of 'em bring their mothers with them the first time. We're more particular than we used to be, and the general run of girls is all right, though, to be sure, a hard one slips through now and then."

The standard wage for the revue chorus girl seems to be $35 a week. Featured members of cabaret productions receive anywhere from around $100 up to $300 weekly. Beyond that horizon lies stardom and the skyrocketing salaries.

BOYS MAKE GOOD

They would scarcely be eligible for membership in the sorority, but two of the sterner sex attained, measure for measure, as sterling success as any of their fair contemporaries among the footlight favorites.

One is Frisco, whose little known first name is Joe, and whose original port of entry was Des Moines, Ia. The other is Bob Adams, who with Sidney Gibson as a partner used to convulse the patrons of Freddie Train's old stand, on Wabash, near 22d, with their musical acrobatics.

Adams and Gibson were the first to intersperse their duties with sessions of mountain climbing and what not on the piano, which came in for a lot of punishment. They usually ended up their stunts by walking down the keys. Adams became a rolling stone that gathered plenty of moss. He is a headliner in Europe today. Gibson remains in Chicago, comparatively obscure.

From a sidewalk shuffler with music in his heels, who would perform any time, anywhere, for pitched nickels and quarters, Frisco evolved into one of vaudeville's most highly paid attractions. He started the strut, they say, and, for all I know to the contrary, he may be strutting yet.

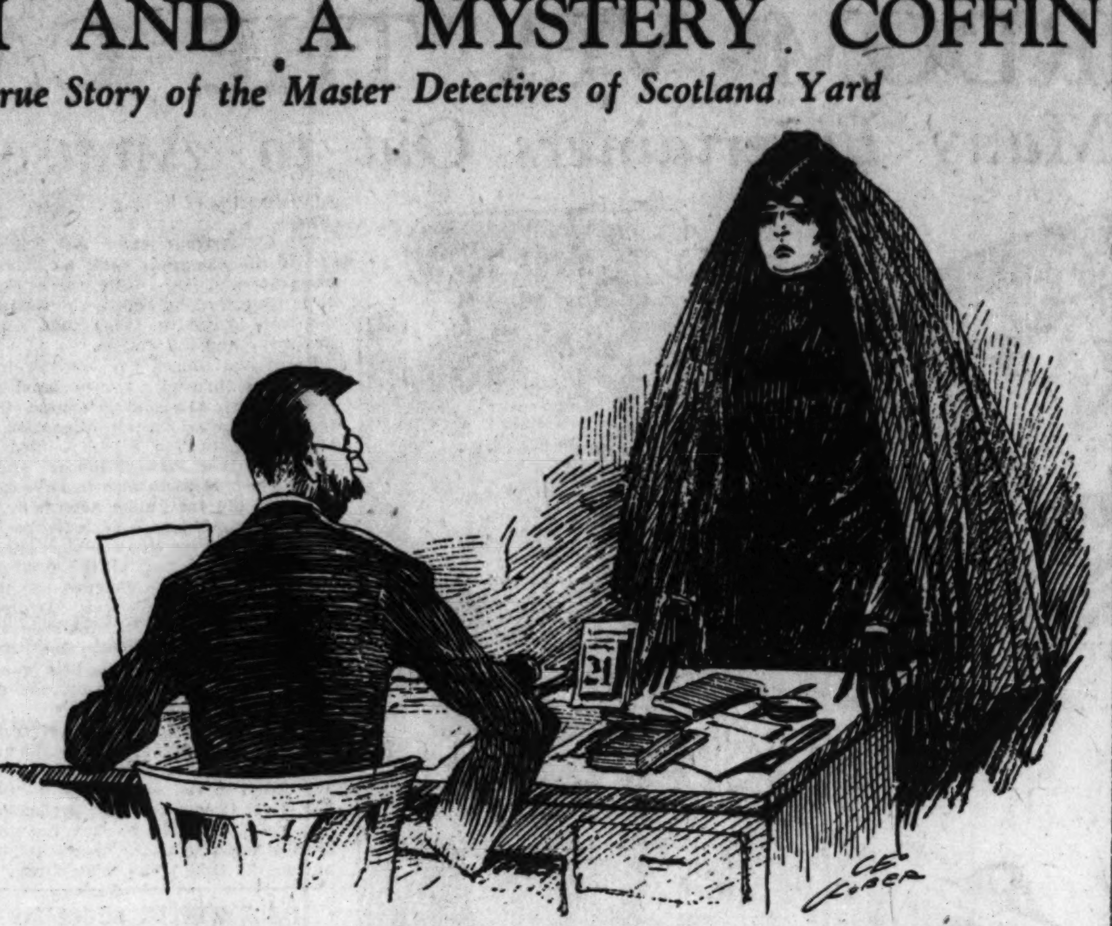
A SLEUTH AND A MYSTERY COFFIN

Another True Story of the Master Detectives of Scotland Yard

Culture Matches Wits With a Man Who Says He's Dead

By George Dilnot.

[Foremost authority on Scotland Yard.]



Clad in the deepest black, she appeared at the office of the insurance company in Paris.

THERE is no doubt that Nathaniel Druscovich ultimately made a fool of himself. He allowed himself to become the tool of a gang of crooks and he paid the penalty. That is a matter of police history with which I have little to do here. The catastrophe of his career was his own fault, but it should not be permitted to obscure the merits of one who in his own day showed many of the qualities of a master detective.

At the time of which I am writing Druscovich was the pet of Scotland Yard, a man of whom much was expected. He had a reputation for quick witted intelligence and resource that had been earned in some remarkable cases. He stood out among his colleagues for the reason that he was a man of culture and education. In those days Scotland Yard men, however effective they may have been, were of a rougher, cruder type than those of today.

A dapper man, something of a fop in dress, was Druscovich, with an extensive knowledge equally of foreign languages and foreign criminals. Nearly every continental case that reached Scotland Yard was passed on to him, and he usually handled them with competence and ingenuity.

PORTLY AND PROSPEROUS

Properly I should have begun this story not with Druscovich but with M. Vital Douat, portly and prosperous, and owner of apparently one of the most flourishing wine businesses in Bordeaux.

He and Mme. Douat, as plump and shrewd as her husband, lived, in a manner becoming the dignity of a great merchant, in a magnificent villa on the outskirts of the town. They entertained on a grandiose scale, and, as you will have perceived, were not least among the citizens of a great city. There may have been malicious tongues, but pouf! any successful man is open to the scandal of the envious. Such people were beneath the contempt of a prince of commerce.

It was strange that a prudent, farseeing man, such as M. Douat was held to be, should have neglected one obvious safeguard for the benefit of his devoted wife until he reached middle age. The cares of business and of social life were heavy. He was to be forgiven if he had forgotten to insure his life.

INSURED FOR $25,000

He recognized the injustice in time. The point was no sooner brought to his mind than he traveled to Paris and opened negotiations with one of the biggest insurance companies in France. With a touch of pomposity he explained who he was and presented introductions. He proposed, if arrangements could be satisfactorily made, to take out a life policy for a sum that in these days would be represented by between $25,000 and $35,000 in United States money.

So impressive was his demeanor that the insurance company smoothed the way for him and, after a medical examination, he paid the first premium and returned to Bordeaux with the policy in his pocket. With a devotion that was only natural he confided the document to his wife.

Shortly after this it became a matter of comment in certain circles in Bordeaux that all was not well with the affairs of M. Douat. He carried his head as high as ever, but there were firms who felt they had been a little incautious. They had extended credit to the limit with the plausible Douat and they thought it was time he should show the color of his money. The wine merchant airly waved these things aside and pushed in several more large orders. These were not accepted and it was made evident something would have to be done about the cash question.

WIDOW'S WEEDS

At this crisis M. Douat took a plunge that has been the resource of lesser men. He went bankrupt.

Odd to relate, his misfortunes did not arouse the sympathy of his many acquaintances. There were not wanting slanderers who hinted Douat had not made a bad thing out of his bankruptcy and that he still had a well filled stocking stowed away somewhere.

So persistent was this story that the authorities began to pry into it. M. Douat resented the slur on his good faith. He shook the dust of Bordeaux from his feet, embraced his dear wife—they could not prove any fraud against her—and departed unostentatiously to London to make a fresh start in the world.

Mme. Douat, thus left alone, bore up uncommonly well. She had lost no weight when, clad in the deepest black, she appeared at the office of the insurance company in Paris and, with tears in her expressive eyes, announced the death of her husband. Her grief had not affected the most complete and business-like precautions. She had, in order and ready for the strictest inspector, all the documents of proof of the death of Vital Douat. Her story was complete in every detail.

AFTER THE CASH

When he had gone to London he had taken mean lodgings at a little house in Ann street, Plaistow. There on Nov. 29 he had died of aneurism of the heart. Here was a certificate from the medical man who had attended him. Here was another certificate from the registrar of deaths. Here was a receipt for the burial fees at St. Patrick's cemetery. The widow ventured to presume that these things were only formalities. No doubt the money would be paid over at an early date.

An urbane official spread his hands in a bland gesture.

"We shall be happy to expedite a settlement by every means in our power," he said. "If you will leave these documents with me the matter shall be put in hand at once."

"How long will it take?" demanded the business-like madam.

He lifted his shoulders. "I cannot say. There is a routine—a method—in these matters. It may be a week—ten days. When we are satisfied."

Mme. Douat caught him up quickly. "When you are satisfied! What more do you want? Surely these papers show without doubt that my husband is dead?"

OVERPLAYS HER HAND

This was the point at which Mme. Douat went perhaps a fraction too far. The official was struck. Why should she be so extraordinarily eager? There was something in her manner as well as in her words that made an impression on his mind. It was not altogether usual for a grief stricken widow, hard upon the death of her husband, to come quite so completely prepared with formal proofs as this lady. The thing might be entirely straightforward, but it would bear looking at.

He put a few polite but searching questions to the woman, and her replies determined him that it would be well to withhold the money until a great deal more was known about the dead man and about her. After all, only one premium had been paid on a comparatively big life insurance.

So, at last, he dismissed her, and an emissary was dispatched down to Bordeaux to learn something about the couple. On his report a great light was borne upon the company. The coincidence of life insurance, fraudulent bankruptcy, flight and death was far too extraordinary. When the lady renewed her demands with threats of legal intervention unless the claim was immediately settled she was met with a refusal framed in terms not quite so polite as before.

HOW TO PROVE IT?

But, however suspicious the circumstances might appear, the company officials knew that unless they could prove a swindle they would sooner or later have to pay. So they consulted a high official of the Service de Surete—the French detective force—who informed them Douat already was wanted for the fraudulent bankruptcy affair. It was believed Douat really had gone to London. The detective said he would ask Scotland Yard to look into the matter.

So it was that the papers ultimately were passed over to Druscovich.

"It's a funny business," said Williamson, the superintendent. "See what you can make of it."

"If these certificates are authentic," observed the other, "this man should be dead and buried."

"The insurance company is inclined to think that the death happened at a very convenient time for the lady," remarked Williamson, and Druscovich nodded.

ON THE TRAIL

The Surete had ascertained the date and the boat on which Douat was believed to have sailed, but there was no record of any one of that name having arrived in England. Druscovich studied a passenger list and made precise inquiries of the manner and appearance of each person. He struck the names out until only one was left. That was a gentleman who called himself Signor Roberti.

By all accounts Roberti was a jovial, fat Frenchman. No one knew who he was or where he had gone to after landing. The detective inclined to a strong impression that Roberti could be no other than the bankrupt fugitive.

Druscovich went to have a look at the house in Ann street, Plaistow, which had been given as the place of death. It proved to be a dingy workman's dwelling, which a weatherworn notice board proclaimed to be to let. The landlord was easy to find and was quite willing to tell all he knew.

DEATH OF A FRIEND

"There was a foreign gentleman took the place a few weeks ago," he said. "Called himself Bernardi. He couldn't speak English very well but, as far as I could understand him, he was a waiter or something like that, and he wanted a place where he could stay and look after a sick friend. References? No, he gave me no references. He did better than that. He paid a month's rent down, and that was good enough for me."

"Did you see anything of his friend?" asked Druscovich, casually.

The landlord stroked his chin. "No. Can't say I did. Struck me as funny at the time. He hadn't been there a day or two when he told me his friend had died. There was something wrong with his heart. Bernardi gave him a grand funeral—it took place on a Sunday—but he never came back to Ann street again. I reckon he didn't care to stay in a place where his pal had died."

Some hours Druscovich spent in chatting to other inhabitants of Ann street. It became plain that Bernardi was the jovial Roberti of the boat. But in Ann street he had kept close to his rooms and had scarcely spoken to any one. No one had seen his friend, nor had a doctor been noticed calling at the house. Druscovich began to consider the possibility that he had stumbled on a case of murder.

FORGERY

He already had assured himself of one thing. If the death certificate was a forgery it had not been written by either Douat or Mme. Douat. The signature was hard to decipher and there was no address. After close examination he read the name as "Critti." The reference books showing there was a doctor of that name, Druscovich called upon him. The doctor examined with a puzzled face the sheet of paper he was supposed to have signed.

"This is certainly a forgery," he declared. "It is not in the least like my writing and there is no attempt at imitation. I have never known a man named Vital Douat, and I have certainly never attended a patient at Plaistow. I know nothing at all about it."

[Copyright: 1927.]

(Druscovich found Douat's coffin and caused it to be reopened. What he found there and how the criminal finally was run to earth will be related in the Metropolitan section next Sunday.)

Pigeons Steal Metal for Nests

LONDON.—(AP)—The management of a firm of iron and steel merchants was greatly puzzled over the mysterious pilferings of bicycle spokes, fragments of iron, and small pieces of sheet metal from the yard.

A close watch was kept, and the thieves were detected.

They proved to be pigeons, and they used the metal for their nest. Their home was 16 inches high and weighed 22 pounds.

Queen Victoria Ate Rapidly; Guests Hard Pressed

LONDON.—(AP)—Queen Victoria was such a rapid eater that her guests had to speed up to keep their plates from being snatched away from them before they were half finished.

This fact is revealed in Lord Riblesdale's "Impressions and Memoirs," which has just been published under the authorization of his daughter, Lady Wilson.

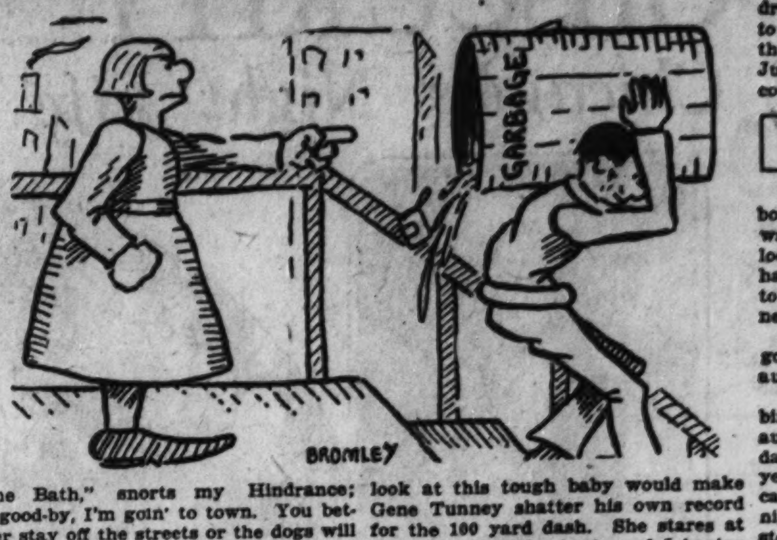
Queen Marie of Roumania, bears a resemblance to her distinguished grandmother in this respect. Guests at the royal board in Bucharest have the same race the late Lord Riblesdale says.

Of course royalty is served first and gets started on its food ahead of humble guests, and royal servants are such sticklers for form that everyone has to stop eating when the ranking member of the royal family has finished a course.

SNOWSHOE'S PERSONAL APPEARANCE

Well, I Guess That Maybe Clothes Do Make the Man

By Snowshoe Al.



"LISTEN to me, you goofy lookin' hobo!" says my dear wife the other morning. "Just because you stay home all day an' wrestle with a typewriter is no reason why you should neglect your personal appearance which, by the way, is bad enough at its best. You've been wearing that same shirt for five days!"

"What about it?" howls me. "It still has all the buttons on it and there ain't no holes in it, so why is all the grief, huh?"

"I could sling a snappy answer at you," says her, "but I fear it would go over your head, an' I am not in the mood to cast any pearls in your direction unless it's necessary. However, I would like to know when you intend to shave. You ain't pulled a razor across that pan of yours for at least four days, an' you are beginning to look like a landscape. Beat it into the bathroom an' scrape the foliage off your mug before some mushrooms commence to spring up. If a rabbit ever saw your face he would mistake it for a field of clover."

A CLOSE SHAVE

"I don't feel like shaving this morning," says I; "anyhow, I am not going any place, so what difference does it make how I look?"

"Shame on you for taking such a lopsided view of the matter," says her; "you should always try to look nice, because you never know when some people might drop in to visit us. Wouldn't you feel embarrassed if somebody should ring the doorbell right now?"

"You're damn right I would!" says I; "I would have to tell him to wait a couple more weeks for his money."

"Furthermore," says her, "it's about time you got those pants pressed, as they contain more wrinkles than a prune's overcoat. Also, I wish you would quit wearing that dirty, old, ornery looking sweater! It's so full of holes that when you wear it on the street people will mistake you for a piece of Swiss cheese on parade."

"Get it all out of your system, kid," says I, "so you won't have to start over again in the morning."

"An' another thing!" squawks her; "you seem to spend most of your time around this joint making the poor little canary bird take a bath instead of taking one yourself."

HUSBAND DESERTION

"What about it?" says me; "you never heard of a piano mover playing a piano, did you?"

"Lay off the dumb remarks an' go disguise yourself as a human being," says she. "Fool yourself! Pretend you are going to a masquerade an' wash your face so people won't recognize yuh."

"Nix," says me, "that's out! This is a free country (? ? ? ? Hurray!) and although it may have a few crippled laws such as 'Thou shalt not let us catch thee drinking' and 'Thou art not allowed to murder cake-eaters' and et cetera, thank God there ain't no rules like 'Thou must crawl into a clean shirt every day' or 'Get thee into the bathroom and mow down them whiskers.' As long as I don't have to go down town I will dress the way I please, and I can't help it if some people think I look like a Knight of the Road."

"Well, you can rest assured they won't think you look like a Knight of the Bath," snorts my Hindrance; "good-by, I'm goin' to town. You better stay off the streets or the dogs will be running you up and down the alleys."

4 BLOCKS EQUALS 2 MILES

After she had went, I decided maybe I should take a walk, because the doctor told me I should stroll at least two miles per day for exercise whether I liked it or not, otherwise I might grab myself an acute attack of fallen arches, or double-jointed indigestion, or some such contagious disease, so I starts out to walk four blocks, because in this town, you know, four blocks equals two miles. I discovered this interesting fact by watching taxicab meters what ring up ten cents every half mile. Five thousand two hundred and eighty feet equal 13½ miles unless the chauffeur happens to accidentally bump the meter with his elbow, in which case you get thrown for an additional loss which equals the distance between Detroit's five yard line and New Orleans' goal post, allowing for detours by way of San Antonio. Well, as I started to say before, I put on my ornery looking old sweater, slung a dirty cap over one ear, and went outside.

We live in a big new court building which is one block long. It contains 136 apartments and the 136 apartments contain 135 radios. (Mine is already ordered, but somebody's Credit Dept. is evidently still trying to decide whether or not I can be relied upon to come across with "three dollars per week, plus a small carrying charge, plus 6 per cent interest on overdue payments.") Funny thing about them 135 radios: they are always all tuned in on the same football game, so I can usually walk back and forth the entire length of the building without ever missing a single play.

SECOND STORY ARTIST

As soon as I got downstairs I prepares to take my walk and listen to the football battle at the same time, but was prevented from doing so because some dame sticks her nose out of a window on the second floor and squawks:

"You come right up here this minute! I've been looking for you."

"All right, lady," says I, wondering what it was all about, as I never steal any milk or morning papers on the second floor, although I will admit that I have been tempted to do so at times, because the folks on the third floor often fool me by ordering buttermilk, which certainly tastes like hell in coffee.

I goes up and knocks on the door, and when she opened it she slips me a look which would freeze alcohol. This Minnehaha was built like an overstuffed hippopotamus, and consisted mostly of muscle. She looked like a cross between Strangler Lewis and any other three guys on earth. One look at this tough baby would make Gene Tunney shatter his own record for the 100 yard dash. She stares at me for one solid minute and I begins to feel like Daniel did when he was a week-end guest in the lions' bungalow. Then she opens her mug and separates herself from a half acre of verbal hell.

FIREPAN INTO FIRE

"What do you mean," she yells, "by not removing our garbage for the last two days? A fine janitor you are! For ten cents I would break you up an' scatter you to the four winds! You dirty loafer! Get out on the back porch an' remove that garbage right now!"

"But, lady," howls me, "I am not——"

"O, yes you are!" squawks her. "Don't tell me you're not going to do it, you dizzy lookin' bum! An' you're going to do it this very minute, or I'll use you to beat carpets with."

Well, I admit that maybe I was dressed kind of frowzy, but I never expected to be mistaken for a Boiler Room Rajah. I looks this female bruiser over and decides that a good way to commit suicide would be to argue with her, so I grabs the can of sweet smelling Odds and Ends and drags it down the back stairs. Then to avoid any more monkey business of this nature, I beats it down the alley. Just as I crossed Thome Avenue a couple Flat-Foots nailed me.

COPPED BY A COP

"What are you doing in this neighborhood?" says one; "we've been watchin' you for three days! You look like a desperate character an' we have a dirty idea that you is planning to hold up that drug store on the corner! Hold still till we search you."

"Control yourself," says I; "you've got me wrong! I'm a respectable author!"

"Youse is a liar," says the other bird; "I once saw a picture of an author, so youse can't get away with dat noise! Authors wear bow ties an' yellow gloves, an' dey all carry a cane. Listen, bum: Last Monday night somebody held up a grocery store in dis neighborhood. Where was you last Monday night?"

"Last Monday night I was down at the Hamilton club, bowling with some guys named Gere and Robinson and Jim Kennedy and 'Handy Andy' Anderson and——"

"Lay off dat racket," says he; "you couldn't even get in the back door of dat place."

"I was all dressed up that night. Honest, I was!" says I.

BACK ON THE JOB

They asked me where I lived and I told them, so they walks back through the alley with me to make sure I wasn't slinging them any mush. The big dame on the second floor was standing on the back porch looking around.

"Lady," says one of the coppers, "does this guy belong in this building?"

"He certainly does," says the dame; "send him up here! I've got something else for him to do."

So they chased me up to her apartment again and I had to fix a couple leaky faucets.

Yeh, I guess a guy really should take care of his personal appearance.

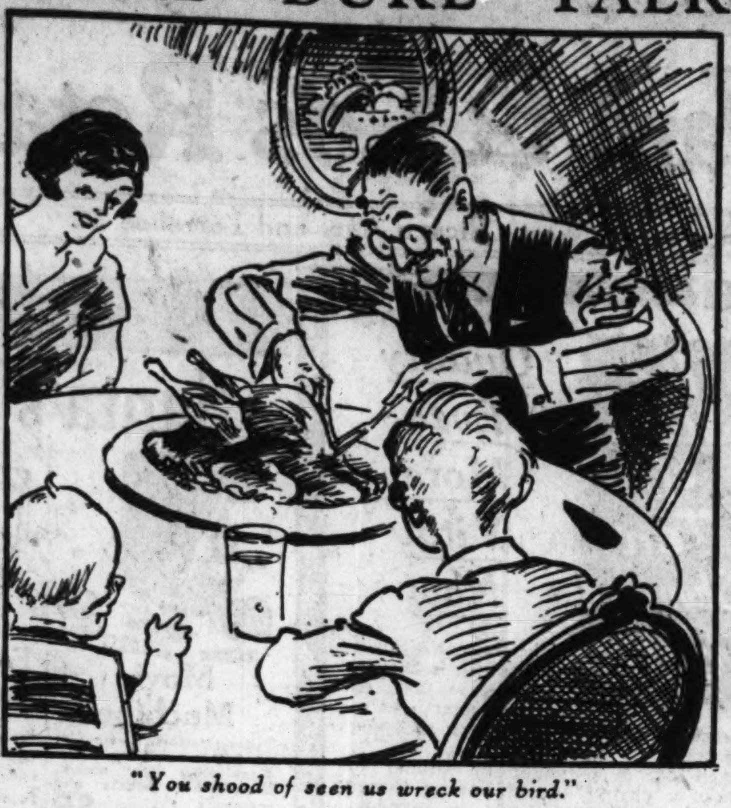
AND NOW THE DUKE TALKS TURKEY

Resorts to Strategy to Make the Day a Real Thanksgiving

By Duke Bakrak.



"You shood of seen us wreck our bird."

To men, all Thanksgiving days in tha past have been about ten degrees less than minus. Last Thursday was one what I cood actually call plus additional. The reason was that me and tha B. and C. and tha kids ate by ourselves. This meant that if you wanted all white meat you didn' get a piece of neck and a piece of tha Mama's mind. Seems that, as long as I can remember, are family has been the goat for free eats. The funny part of it is that every friend or relation who ever parked their dogs under our table had more money in one vest pocket than we had in tha bank. I've always had a sneaking hunch that the first thing a certain guy did when he got home was to put 7 or 8 bucks in the old sock and say to himself, "Duke, you're the berries, three more invitations from you and another two flat building is ours." I'm not mentioning any names, but if I ever find out that this same Charley Nelson is the stiff that puts the slugs in our baby's bank, I'm gonna accuse him openly.

KAYOED BY THE B. & C.

The annual debate entitled "Whose guests get invited this year" was duly held two weeks ago. Our esteemed chairman, Mrs. Bakrak, presided. Tha chairman agreed that Mrs. Bakrak wood take tha affirmative and Mrs. Bakrak tha negative. The judges were Mrs. Bakrak. Ten minutes for opening remarks and five minutes for rebuttal were allowed each side. Mrs. Bakrak spoke thirty minutes. It seemed to me that tha contest was fairly even, but tha judges decided Mrs. Bakrak was tha victor.

Reading of tha minutes of last year's meeting was continually being interrupted by the male members present. He was immediately told to button up his siren. After tha sargent at arms [whose office really calls for every light duties] took tha hound around tha block, filled four milk bottles, hung out the ice card, wound up the clock, and wrapped up tha dirty clothes for tha laundry tha meeting was adjourned at eleven P. M.

The following day I got to thinking that I'd be damned if I wood be Santy-Claus to a pack of hungry wolves and starving hyenas every year. The more I thought of it the madder I got, and that night I called a special meeting of the board. Two of tha directors nearly got into a fist fight. After I got tha floor my argument was to tha effect that when my dad figured I was a man, he'd put long pants on me and as long as I was tha only member present being dressed that way it was up to me to prove the ole gent's trust. After this brilliant bit of repartee, she's got tha nerve to tell me that if she hadn't of married me I woodn' have any pants at all. To which I replys that I yet got to see a naked batchelor.

"IT'S MY TREAT"

Last year, between tha second and third helping, Cousin Emily pulls the old bologny, "Next Thanksgiving you all hafta come to our house." At this remark Aunt Minnie pulls a phony peeve and says, "Not on your life. I insist upon doing the honors." This calls for a argument by my mother-in-law, who says, "If you don't let us throw tha dinner we will never speak to any of youse again."

"Goo by and goo nite."

Now my argument to tha B. and C. is that if her memory was as long as her tongue, she'd kinda hint around a little and see if any of those toreadors were still in tha bull-throwing business and whether they meant what they said or not. Her answer is that before she wood throw a hint she wood see them all in hell and if they ever ate on us again I cood hitch up tha car and dump her in a nut house.

This being a victory in my favor, we proceeded to lay out a family bill of fare and I even went so far as to say that I'd get enough bucks together to pay for tha turkey so as she woodn' hafta touch her house money. Last Wednesday night our kitchen smelt like a rose garden. There was mince pie in the oven, turkey stuffing in tha making, tha kids were cracking nuts, tha B. and C. was singing a song, something about "I'm forever bubbles blowing," and I was stretched out on tha sofa thinking how swell it was gonna be not to get up in tha morning, when all of a sudden tha telephone rings. I answered it and it ain't nobody else but Cousin Emily. After tha conversation was ended I felt a real he guy and tha Mama was grinning her head off.

SIZZLING WIRES

Here's tha dirt:

"Lo."

"Lo Duke, how's a family?"

"Fine, how's it by you?"

"Awright."

"We was wondering wy ya didn't call earlyer."

"How come?"

"Cause we wanna know what time is yer eats."

"Whad eats?"

"Ain't we turkeying with youse ta marro?"

"Not that I know about."

"Well, ats funny."

"You must got yer dates mixed."

"Didn' you say at are house last year that next year we all gotta come to your house?"

"Well maybe I did."

"Well whadda ya kickin' about, ain't we comin'?"

"W-we-well I-I-I y-yo-you s-se-see ah-ah."

"Cut tha static. If we ain't invited juss say so."

"Can't cha lissen a minit?"

"Hell, no; if yer crawfishin' I gotta beat it out quick and see if I kin still get a turkey. Goo by."

"Don't be mad on us Duke."

"Goo by and goo nite."

To make tha stuff go big I hang up tha receiver with a helova slam.

O, MIN!

Two minutes later I call up Aunt Minnie and pull the same line of chatter on her and end up by telling her it looks like we gotta have chops as it's too late to get a bird, also that tha next time she hands out invitations we're gonna insist on her putting it in writing. She also begs us not to be mad, and with that I also slip her a receiver bang.

The next on tha list was tha ma-in-law, and what I don't tell her is a shame. Not having any too much love for this trouble shooter, I end tha talk by telling her that tha next time she puts her dogs in our kennel it wood hafta be over my dead body.

Now that they think we're all mad there's no chance of them dropping in for a visit Thursday night, and I want to tell you that I think tha day is properly named Thanksgiving when relations are conspickuous by their absence.

You shood of seen us wreck our bird. Tha kids coodn' hear tha radio on account their ears was full of cranberry. When tha mince pie was brought on everybody slowed up on tha potatoes. Even tha pooch of ares got himself a belly ache.

After dinner all tha members of The Royal Order of tha Holy Knife and Fork mooched into tha parlor and took a sofa snooze. At night we all went to see a swell funny picture at tha local movie.

REAPING THE HARVEST

From a future financial standpoint, my handling tha whole affair tha way I did brings us splendid returns. Between Friday morning and Saturday night we received three invitations as follows:

Cousin Emily—Dinner a week from Sunday.

Aunt Minnie—Christmas dinner.

Tha Ma-in-law—New Year's dinner.

Nevertheless, tha invites being verbal I had Gerty Muldoon, our office stenog. acknowledge receipt of them, had Horwitz (tha celebrated Notary Public) put on his seal and for safety's sake, I kept a carbon copy.

This coming year tha guest room is gonna be a kids' playroom. Tha guest towels are gonna be used by tha family and there's gonna be a sign hung on tha door that reads, THIS FREE LUNCH COUNTER PADLOCKED FOR ONE YEAR.

P. S.—When we put up our own two flat, I might coax tha B. and C. to run a surprise party on her. The kind where everybody brings part of tha lunch.

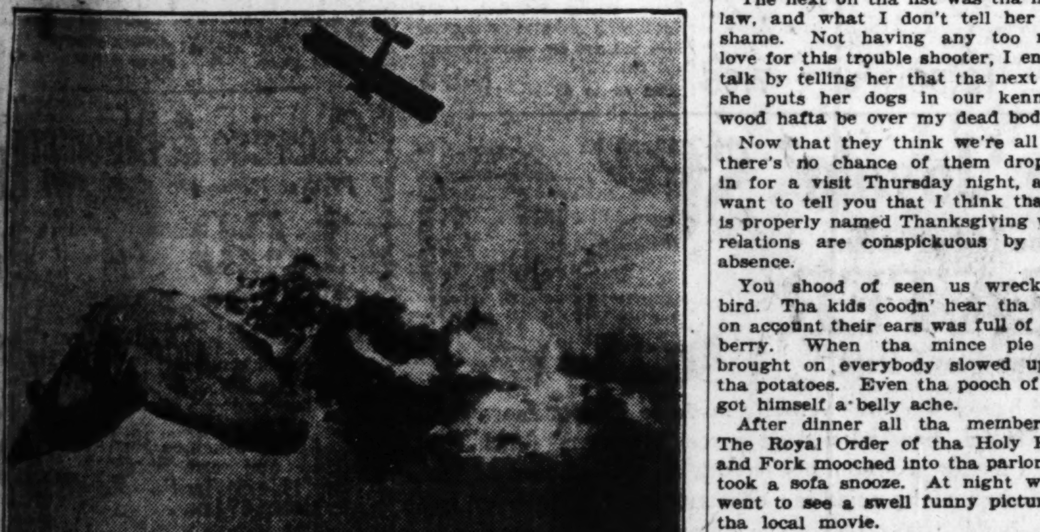
WINGS



ENEMIES MEET! Balloon and airplane! And this happens! The scene is from one of the heart-stopping air battles in "Wings," which is thrilling the crowds at the Erlanger theater.

Even Burglars Favor Tipping

LONDON.—(AP)—The tipping evil has become so intolerable in England that even burglars are victims of its abuse.

Two boys saw a pair of burglars as they left a London house with a nice load of swag. Shaking with fright at being witnesses to such an event, the lads politely asked the housebreakers if they had been stealing apples.

The thieves handed the boys sixpence and hustled away before an alarm was given.

WOUNDED FEELINGS.

"Yes," my daughter has a heart of gold."

"Really?"

"Yes, when I have a lot of washing or other hard work, the dear child shuts herself in her room—it hurts her to see me work."—Nebelspalter, Zurich.

LITTLE TALES OF BIG HEADS

What's your pet little tale of a Big Head? Send it to Big Heads, Sunday Tribune, and we'll pay you $1 if we print it.

Brickbats and Bouquets.

The other evening mother and I were going to a movie. We met my girl friend. She is 17 years old and not the least bit pretty.

Mother told her she had a pretty hat on. She replied: "O, yes, it seems like all hats look nice on me. In fact I think my clothes all look nice on me. Don't you?"

We answered yes. After we left her mother said: "She doesn't throw bouquets at herself, does she?"

P. M.

Pride Goeth Before a Snap.

An acquaintance of mine went to the circus to see her daughter ride a horse, on which she could perform many amusing stunts. The girl acted splendidly, and Mrs. S. went out into the ring to congratulate her. She stretched to kiss her when the strap from her petticoats snapped. She didn't notice it and was astonished when the crowd started to applaud. Then she walked out, proud of herself and her daughter.

A. S.

A Precocious Co-ed.

Speaking of big heads, I think of my little girl of five and a half years tops them all.

I told her brother, aged eight, that if he wasn't careful his sister would catch up to him in school. Hearing this, Eleanor came across with this:

"Bernard better be careful, 'cause when I start school I'm going to be so smart I'll be in college and Bernard will be back in kindergarten."

Powder Puff Thrown Out of Court

BERLIN.—(AP)—That lipsticks, powder puffs, and combs do not conform with the dignity of a courtroom was the noteworthy decision reached by the Berlin district judge, Dr. Wesenberg.

During a trial the judge noticed that one of the spectators, after having taken off her hat, started to powder her face and use her lipstick with avidity, finishing up by combing out her bob.

Shaking with wrath, the judge interrupted the proceedings and peremptorily ordered the lady to leave the room "for such unbefitting behavior in the dignified precincts of the court."

A PROTEST MEETING.

Jones—Will you join our indignation meeting tomorrow night, colonel. We want to make a strong protest.

Col. Pepper—With pleasure, sir. Er—what's the protest about?—Passing Show, London.

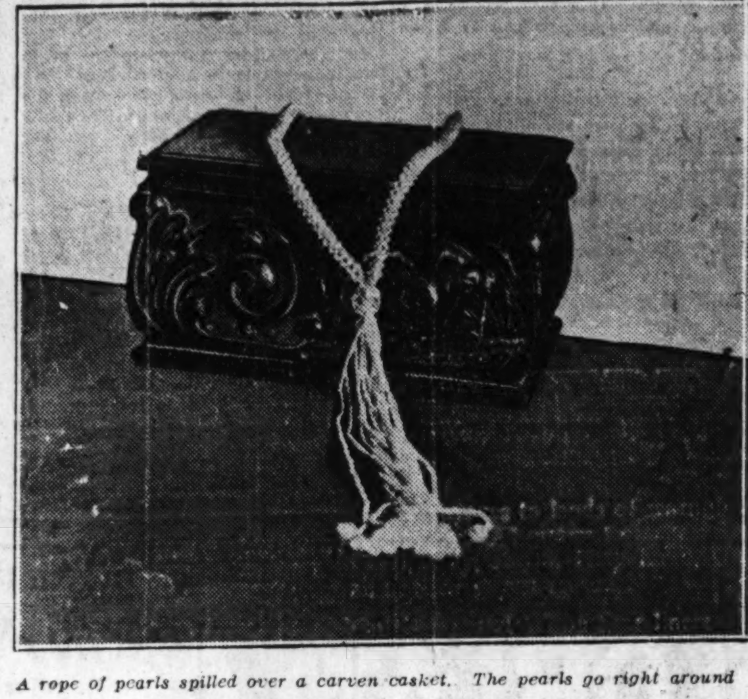
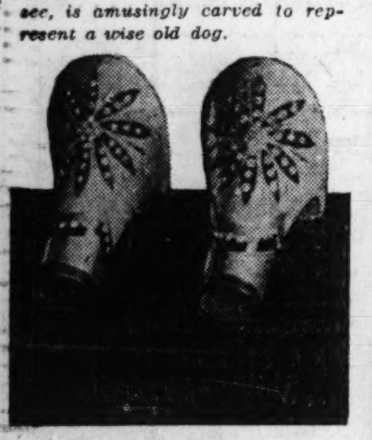
NOVELTIES IN THE SHOPS

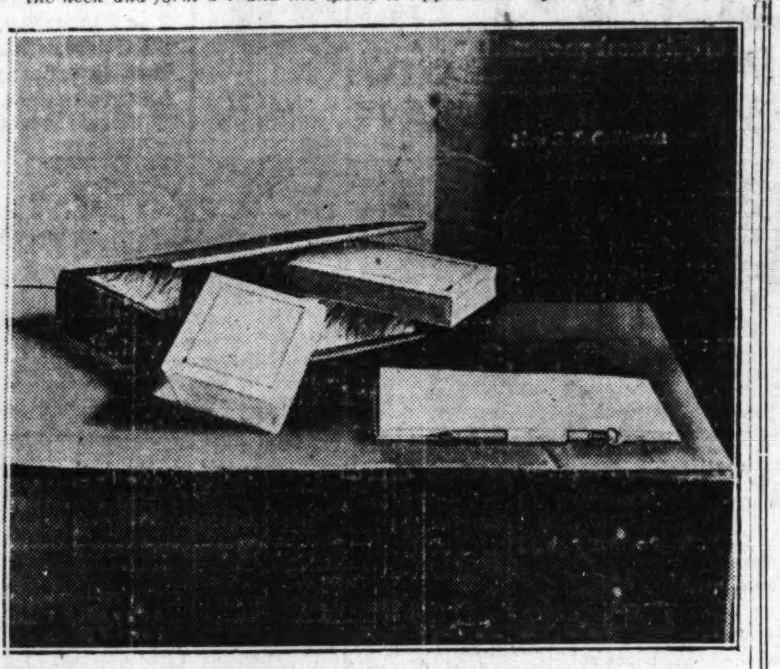
Not a monkey on a stick, not even a dog on a cane, for this, my dear children, is a fascinating umbrella which folds into a tiny smart swagger stick for days that are undecided. The handle, as you see, is amusingly carved to represent a wise old dog.



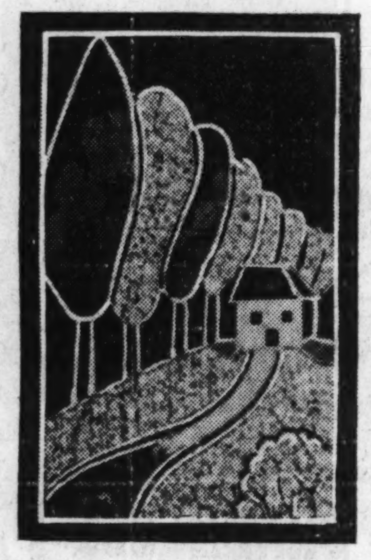
A rope of pearls spilled over a carven casket. The pearls go right around the neck and form a V and the tassel is tipped with crystal.



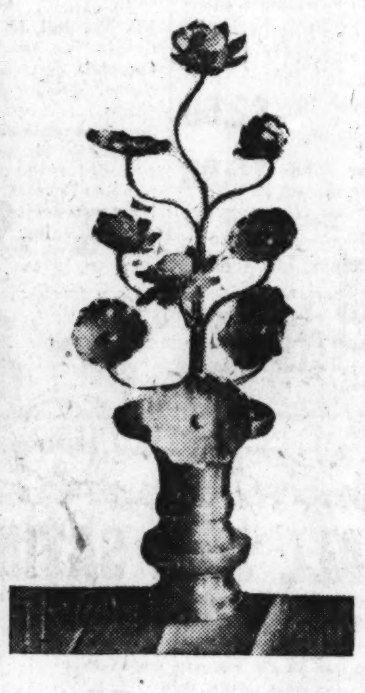
We wonder where the rest of Cinderella's shoes are, for these surely are her diamond studded silver heels. The design of the flower and the stripe is black, which makes the diamonds all the more brilliant. The heels are wooden.



When Jim is ready to play bridge at night Mary will know where to find everything, because the cards and tablet and pencil are all companions in a book of pink calf.



No, my dear children, this is not a picture for the nursery wall. It is a hatpin of enamel and brilliants, destined to brighten some small untrimmed chapeau.



A pot of lotus flowers perpetually blooming. The pot and the flowers are all wrought brass from China and once ornamented an altar of the great god, Buddh.

SURE WINNER.

Broker—My dear girl, speculation on 'change is always a big risk; one gains one day and loses the other.

Children Get Lessons in Berlin Traffic Lore

BERLIN.—(AP)—Berlin school children are being trained in the art of dodging street traffic, which is daily becoming more dangerous in this city of 4,000,000 inhabitants.

The mysteries of gyratory traffic, one way streets, the necessity to avoid jay walking, and the meaning of various traffic signals are all on the curriculum for which the street car, motor bus, and subway authorities have supplied ample material.

There will be no more tragedies of "lost children" in Berlin, since young citizens at an early age are being familiarized with all aspects of modern city traffic. Huge maps of the metropolis, illuminated with tiny electric bulbs, serve to illustrate the dangers of the streets. How to use the automatic telephone and to assist the old and feeble across the street is part of the training.

The Last Word in Paris Fashions

The Holiday Season Is Crowded with Dances. Here Are Frocks for the Afternoon Tea Dansant, and for the Formal Evening Ball.

BY BETTINA BEDWELL.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

PARIS.—(Special Correspondence.)—In this epoch of specialists and specialties, fashions come in many divisions, each one a highly specialized part of the mode. A good many women think that Fashion is one thing to all women, ladling out the healing tonic of style to pep up anemic chic. This is the cause of a great deal of the bad dressing that persists in spite of the constant and free education in the art of dress which is available to all women. We read, or hear, that something or other is the latest thing from Paris, and those who look on any style as a general practitioner, treating all cases in need of smart apparel, foolishly imagine all they have to do is to get this "latest thing," whatever it is, and they are all set for the season. This procedure is exactly like taking aspirin for a broken arm because it was so beneficial to your headache the other day. The treatment does, at best, no good, and, at worst, a great deal of harm.

Fashion, every season, consists of many specialties produced by numerous specialists for particular women and their peculiar needs. There is no such thing as one fashion for all women. And if there were, how ridiculous most of us would look. It is only because of the extreme elasticity of styles, and the special adaptation to each one, that women can be as generally well dressed as they are today. Just as there are special modes of living, so there are particular styles suitable to them. And, going further, there are clothes for all of the pursuits of these many modes of life. The way to be "in style" is to be dressed according to the interpretation that fashion gives which is most suitable to your own environment and to the activities thereof. You yourself must be the analyst and determine to what section of the many sectioned styles of Paris you belong. That is so simple that any woman can do it without brain fag.

The next thing to do is to divide your day and evening into the number of varying parts any day is subject to, and choose your clothes for each of these parts. Your day may be one-third homework, one-third outside activities (such as shopping, teas, matinées, etc.), and one-third movies, dinners, dances, and so on. You will then need three types of costumes. And if you have more or less divisions, then you will want more or less varying costumes, to be smartly and appropriately frocked for each. Every woman should get busy and analyze her environment, following it up with this simple arithmetic of dividing her activities according to their clothes requirements. Then she is ready to choose her styles.

I have arranged four sketches today that are intended to give clothes ideas for one division which nowadays has a place in almost every woman's life. This is the subdivision given over to the dance. Since almost everybody dances, and since the times and places at and in which we step out to musical meter are many and varied, I have tried to make my selection of appropriate costumes cover as many as possible. Most of the dances that many of us go to are informal affairs, and some of them are in the afternoon, so that the character of the smart dance frock is often different from that of the true evening gown.

Such a dress is shown on our second figure. It is a frock designed especially for the dance by a Paris specialist in clothes creation. It is intended for thés dansants, restaurants, and other public places where jazz rhythm invites you to step out in public. Suzanne Talbot has made this dress with a soft blouse of ecru lace, having long sleeves and a draped yoke which ties in a big bow. The lower part of the bodice is pulled into folds, which are attached beneath a bow on the left hip. The skirt is made of cream colored georgette crêpe, shirred at the top and scalloped at the bottom. The shirred fullness is pressed into a series of columns which somewhat resemble plaits.

More formal is the Cheruit dance dress shown on our first figure at the left. This is the kind of frock the wise woman would choose who has need of a stunning dress, and one which may be worn at a good many particular dances. The material of which this model is made is stiff black taffeta encrusted with sprays of silver leaves. So clever are the line and the drapery of this frock it appears strikingly different from the ordinary dress. It has both individuality and chic and is suitable for repeated appearances.

The bodice is extra long; in fact, part of a slim and narrow full length slip. The décolletage is V shaped, and the tiny shoulder straps are made of rhinestones.

The bouffant skirt consists of wide ruffles, cartridge plaited at the top, and folded over on the left side to make a series of hemlines that add much to the charm of the model.

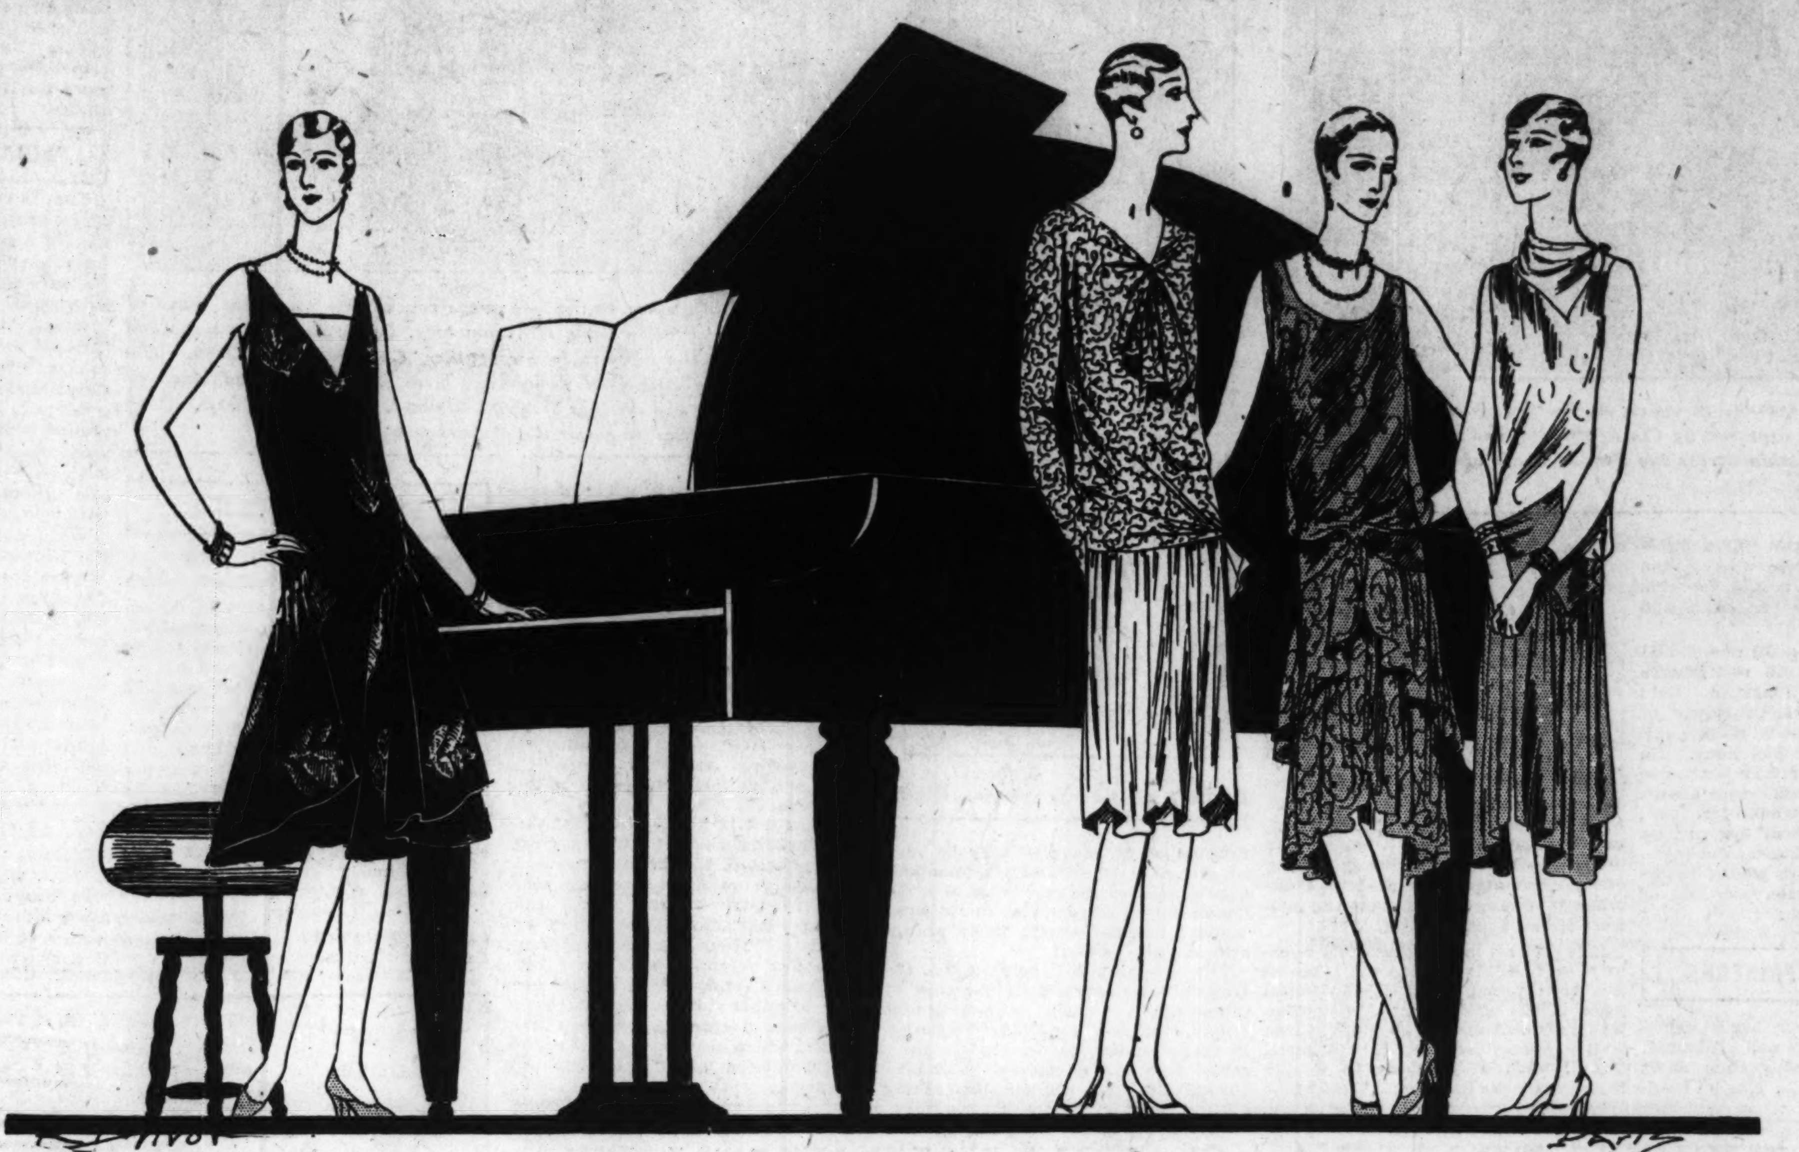
Our third model is a black lace dance frock from Redfern, which combines such extreme simplicity with such exquisite refinement that it may be worn for both exacting and informal occasions. This type of dress is especially suitable for the woman who is not quite young. The blouse, which really blouses, is not in any way adorned other than by its beautiful fabric and lines.

The skirt consists of two ruffles that are very long in back and that rise to make the hemline and the tunic decidedly shorter in front. The girdle is made of a wide band of lace, draped closely around the hips in the Spanish manner, and attached under a jeweled buckle at the center front.

Our fourth model is a dance frock from Louiseboulanger, one that is youthful and that is designed for the most exacting and exciting dances which come in the winter season for the young girl of not over 25 summers and winters. The blouse of this frock is made of pale pink lamé gauze, and it has practically no décolletage.

A small handkerchief of the same gauze is tied close about the throat. The wide, oddly shaped girdle is draped over the right hip and smoothly fitted over the left. This girdle dips in a point at the left side, front and back.

The skirt is made of dull blue panne velvet, the material of the girdle, and it is shirred so that the hemline is extremely wide. This hemline is uneven, being much longer at the sides than in the center front and back. It falls in a series of small descending folds.



The bouffant dance dress, shown at the extreme left, has a new interpretation in this Cheruit model, made of black and silver taffeta.

Next, for the tea dansant, Suzanne Talbot has designed this long sleeved model with a lace blouse, draped and tied at the neck and on the left hip, and a skirt of cream georgette with a novel, uneven hemline.

Third, the dance frock of black lace is smart for many occasions and in many places. This Redfern model has a two-tiered skirt with a hemline longer in back than in front.

The dance dress, shown last, in two colors and two fabrics, is a Paris novelty. Louiseboulanger makes the blouse of pale pink rame gauze and the skirt of dull blue velvet. A small gauze handkerchief is tied around the throat.

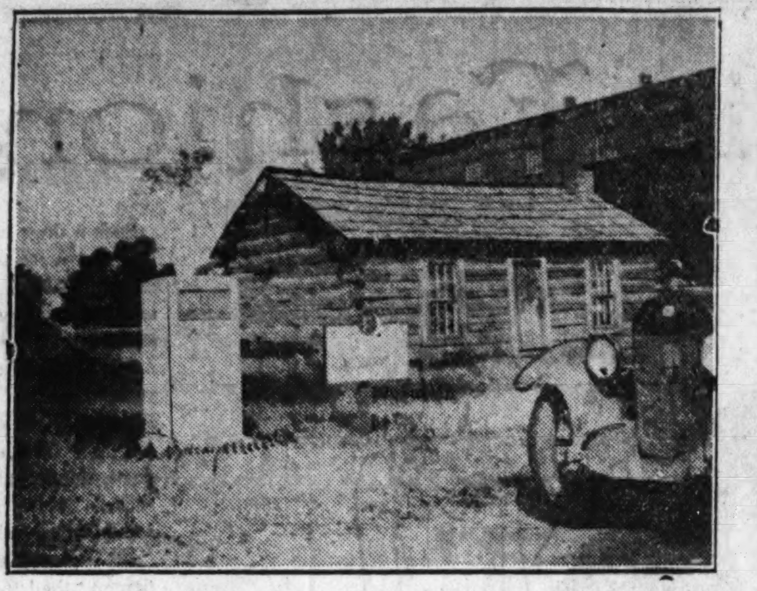
HISTORICAL AMERICA by CLIFFORD RAYMOND

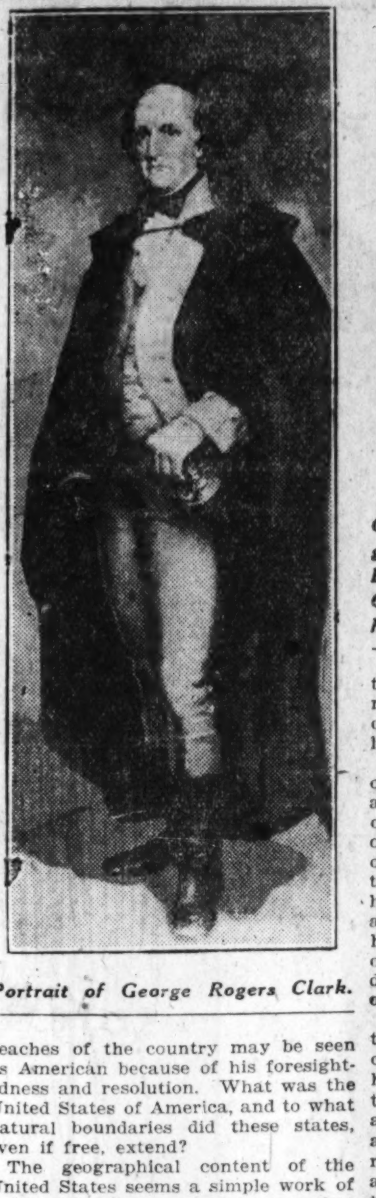
George Rogers Clark

VIRGINIA invited Indiana, other states of the old northwest territory and Kentucky to join this month in a commemorative visit to the birthplace of George Rogers Clark, and such citizens as could accept the invitation were at the exercises near Charlottesville, Va., Nov. 19, the one hundred and seventy-fifth anniversary of Clark's birth.

The sesquicentennial of his work in the taking and keeping of the debatable territory west and north of the Ohio river, which he began in 1778 by the invasion of Illinois, will have celebration next year and the year following in Illinois, Kentucky, and Indiana.



Fort Sackville, the site of which on the Wabash river in Vincennes is thus marked, was captured by Clark after he had marched a force of 130 men from Kaskaskia across the flooded lands of southern Illinois in February, 1779.



Portrait of George Rogers Clark.

The small headstone to the left in the row of five marks the grave of George Rogers Clark in Cave Hill cemetery, Louisville. The large red granite shaft to the right is to his brother, Gen. Jonathan Clark. The Daughters of the American Revolution have placed the headstones of George, Jonathan and another brother, Edmund. The great Clark's grave has no other memorial to honor the achievements of the man.

A NOTABLE FAMILY

John and Ann Rogers Clark, well to do tidewater Virginians, removing back into the Piedmont, had a notable family. Of their ten children, six were sons. Five sons were officers in the revolution. One was George, who conquered the northwest territory. Another was Gen. Jonathan Clark. A third was William Clark, later general, who with Meriwether Lewis made the exploration to the Pacific after the Louisiana purchase under President Jefferson.

Jefferson's home at Monticello adjoined the Clark property in Albemarle county.

George Rogers Clark is buried in Cave Hill cemetery in Louisville. It is a beautifully kept cemetery with conspicuous monuments to solvent respectability put up in mortuary reverence and respect.

In this large cemetery it is not easy to find Clark's grave. All the guards and grave diggers know his resting place is there and they know where it is, but when a grave has only a small headstone, the simplest of little markers, it is difficult to follow directions. The really great man of the northwest has no memorial over his grave except such a headstone and the D. A. R. marker.

To find his resting place one should be told to look for the red granite shaft of his brother Jonathan. Gen. Jonathan Clark, by some oddity of memorial regard, has a monument. George Rogers Clark has none. He has the obscurity of any estimable citizen whose good works were known only to the family which lost him. All about him sentiment has put up great and durable works to the memory of men and women whose import to their time and nation was that of other men and women.

GREATEST OF PIONEERS

Two of his brothers are buried alongside him, Jonathan and Edmund. Jonathan has the red granite shaft but all three have the simple headstones. That of George Rogers Clark is marked:

Gen'l George Rogers Clark
Born O. S., Nov. 9, 1752
Died February 13, 1818.

"O. S." means Old Style. The date by the present calendar was ten days later, Nov. 19. The illustration shows the extent to which the generations north and south of the Ohio have indicated their appreciation of the man whose vision, courage, tact, diplomacy, loyalty and fortitude combined to make the first effective unscrambling of the elements of confusion and disorder governing what is now the midwest of the United States.

It is difficult in this Louisville cemetery to find his grave, but when it has been found, there is the burial place of the great trans-Appalachian father of the American republic. Clark is the greatest of American pioneers. The Louisiana purchase in a way hangs upon his activities. The Pacific reaches of the country may be seen as American because of his foresightedness and resolution. What was the United States of America, and to what natural boundaries did these states, even if free, extend?

The geographical content of the United States seems a simple work of ordination now, except as one sees that it has even now a peculiar formation in that it ceases to use the St. Lawrence river as a natural boundary throughout its course. Something that was not a simple work of ordination made that curious splitting up of territory to the north of New England.

It was such a thing as this that all of Clark's life work was thrown against. If he had not done it some one else might have, but of that no one can safely judge. There was no one to carry the New England line up to the St. Lawrence river. If no one had carried the Virginia line west and north of the Ohio river it might have been that there now would be on this North American continent a diversity of nations comparable to that of Europe.

It was not inevitable that the thirteen English colonies, for the most part confined east of the mountains, should have had, even when free, any more than the territory over which they at that time claimed jurisdiction and authority. There was no inevitable reason for assuming that Great Britain, even if relinquishing control over these original colonies, would relinquish control over the territory west of them which already by act of parliament had been joined to the province of Quebec.

FORMERLY QUEBEC

There was nothing in the demonstrable prospects of the colonials which gave them a guaranty beyond their administrative rights when they rebelled. Great Britain had no inevitable reason to throw into their territorial possession a region she had denied belonged to them before they took to rebellion. The northwest territory which is now Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan and Wisconsin was Quebec. It was not Pennsylvania, Virginia, Maryland or New England. It was French Canada recognized as such by the British government, settled by Frenchmen and governed under French laws even under British control.

Illinois had French towns under British government at Kaskaskia and Cahokia. Indiana has another such French town at Vincennes. It was British governed Quebec and the revolution as a revolt of eastern colonies did not have a thing to do with it in the essence of its principles and declarations. The Spanish had Louisiana and the Mississippi. The British had this extension of Quebec down to the Ohio from the lakes and the revolution was to prove whether the colonies in their own territory could or could not win their fight to conduct their own affairs. But it was not in the avowed principles of the revolution to gain more territory and run other peoples' affairs.

WINS NEW TERRITORY

That is exactly what George Rogers Clark proposed to do and did do. He carried a successful campaign of territorial acquisition into enemy territory. He won the territory and in spite of subsequent adversities it was held.

Gens. Arnold and Montgomery, Thomas and Sullivan, statesmen such as Franklin and Chase and Carroll of Carrollton went to Canada with muskets and rifles and with printing presses and persuasions to try to win one-tenth of the resources to the American republic which Clark conquered and forever sealed to the United States with less than two hundred men.

What Arnold's men did in going up the Kennebec and crossing the Lake Megantic carry into the valley of the Chaudiere to assault Quebec, Clark and his smaller force equaled not only in crossing the unknown lands of Illinois from Fort Massac to take Cahokia and Kaskaskia but in the greater act of fortitude in crossing again the marsh lands and swollen rivers to take Vincennes and thus take from the British any title to claim to the northwest territory.

ACTING FOR VIRGINIA

Clark was acting for Virginia. He was the commander of a Virginian army commissioned by Gov. Patrick Henry of Virginia during the revolutionary war to protect Kentucky, which was Virginian territory, from Indian attack stimulated by the British posts, principally on Detroit.

If it had not been done successfully even Kentucky might not have survived such attacks and the American frontier when the treaty of Paris was considered, might not have gone beyond the proclamation line of 1763, when it was decreed by the ministry of George III. that the English colonies should not go west of the origin of streams flowing into the Atlantic. All the great watershed of the American mid region south of the lakes flows into the Gulf of Mexico.

George Rogers Clark by his own personal perceptions, activities, and sacrifices is the direct architect of the destiny which kept the United States free to extend to the Pacific. It may have been in inevitabilities above personalities. It might have been in the order of things impossible to avoid the present sweep of the United States. Of that it is difficult to judge. It is to be seen where checks were maintained and where inevitability has accommodated itself to human direction.

UNPLEASANT STORY

Without Clark there might have been another Europe here, with Great Britain, France, and Spain much better established as to navigation, resources and territory than they are in Africa.

There is no question in all the involved and controversial history of the event that Clark was the outstanding figure. He was the man who by sheer personality, some such as Washington's, controlled men and events. He suffered from criticism and contempt, from slander and scandal, much from lack of support and neglect. He has been condemned as a drunkard. His obligations were dishonored. Men who trusted government to be honorable as he did, such men as Pollock and Vigo, were ruined. It is an unpleasant story and the whole tale is none the more pleasant for Clark's unmemorialized grave in the Great Cave Hill cemetery of Louisville.

SCIENCE STUDIES THE WEIGHT PROBLEM

And Makes Interesting Discoveries About Obesity and Excessive Thinness.

by Antoinette Donnelly

NEW YORK.—[Special Correspondence.]—Yes, there is a difference between obesity and overweight. You cannot say that all persons of superfluous weight are so because of overfeeding and sedentary habits, or a combination of both.

At the Michael Reese hospital, Chicago, an interesting study among patients, among the student nurses and other members of the staff, on obesity and overweight has been going on for the last seven years, a report on which is offered in a recent issue of Hospital Topics and Buyer.

"We have to admit that certain obese persons are right when they declare they cannot lose weight even on greatly limited diets," states Dr. Strouse. "Our studies have proved that there is a condition of constitutional obesity in which the weight gain upsets all our accepted relationships between food intake, energy expenditure, and weight."

Also, Dr. Strouse claims that a difference has to be admitted, at least in degree, between obesity and overweight. Overweight usually results from overfeeding, sedentary habits, or a combination of both. Some cases of obesity unquestionably follow the same causes.

"This group of overweight persons is benefited by a disciplinary regimen of limited, regulated food intake and increased activity," the doctor states.

"It is the smaller contingent of obstinate overweight that consistently resists all ordinary methods of correction—the cases of 'unexplained' obesity that figure so prominently in medical literature, in which the tendency to accumulate and deposit fat seems to be quite independent of any of the usual causes of increased weight that prompted the series of experiments begun in 1920.

The attempt was made to discover the particular manner in which the fat man utilizes his food which enables him to save and store food components that the excessively thin man either converts into free energy available for work or eliminates as excess material.

Among the interesting facts in obesity revealed by the experiment is that both over eating and under exercise are common faults, yet excessive obesity is comparatively rare. Conversely, another extreme is observed in a fairly large percentage of healthy but thin persons whose food intake is constantly in excess of their calculated needs, yet who cannot gain weight under any circumstances.

Two Clinical Cases.

A clinical test was made on a thin, healthy man of 39, an active worker who ate normal food and slept six or seven hours out of the twenty-four. On a four week's vacation he increased his food intake by half, mostly in carbohydrates, slept from ten to fourteen hours a day, and reclined quietly in the open air most of his waking hours. At the end of this period he was considerably refreshed, but he had made no weight gain whatever.

Another experiment concerned a girl of 15, excessively heavy, whose basal metabolism was below normal. On a carefully planned diet considerably below her calculated basal requirements and with no restriction of bodily activity, she gained 3.3 pounds in sixteen days.

This study expanded into a major research project in metabolism and Dr. Strouse and Dr. Chi Che Wang have in readiness for publication now a statement of far reaching importance on the relationship of metabolism to human types and body build.

Of this they are positive: There is a constitutional type of obesity, requiring something more than weighed and measured rations or the specific regulation of diet by other means.

During the experiment, the importance of serving tasteful meals to those on diets was emphasized.

"When diets are not ample, particular measures are required to keep the patients pleased," was the theory on which the experiments were worked. The patient undergoing dietary management, it was realized, should not be discouraged by unbalanced, unattractive or unduly reduced portions. The following menus, chosen at random, the report points out, show skill in the construction of low calory diets.

Extremes in Metabolism.

During the period covered by these experiments, the studies on obesity have included many patients and more volunteer subjects. They ranged from 30 per cent under weight to 140 per cent over weight. From these studies the relationship between food intake and body weight appears to present two extremes of the same metabolic problems: In the very thin healthy person who habitually eats more than his basic requirements, yet who fails under any circumstances to put on weight, and the obese person who manages somehow to store fat on a minimum diet.

Work is still in progress on the hospital test to find whether glandular extracts other than thyroid have an effect upon weight reduction. This glandular work is recognized as of much clinical importance at the present time, since there are afloat many unsubstantial claims and much untrustworthy advertising regarding it in relation to obesity.

The report hints that individual treatment will eventually replace former generalization and that "eating for efficiency" will be a specific procedure instead of a catch phrase of food faddists.

Bright Sayings of Husbands and Wives

The snappy comeback of the other half when cornered has often been a source of wonder to husbands and wifes! The husband or the wife has come across with a bright saying that will never be forgotten by the other half of the matrimonial sketch. What was that bright saying, Mr.? Mrs.? Send it to us, and we'll pay you $1 for it if we print it. Address Bright Sayings of Husbands and Wives, The Chicago Tribune, Chicago.

Turn About.

Young Johnson got married. On his first pay day he gave his wife thirty dollars of his thirty-five dollar salary. The next week he reversed the process.

"But, George," protested his wife, "how do you expect me to get along on five dollars?"

"Hanged if I know," he replied. "I had a rotten time myself last week. Now it s your turn." G. W. A.

A FRIEND IN NEED

by Sally Joy Brown

APPEALS FOR BABY THINGS ARE POURING IN

WE are always happy and willing to help the babies—and right now they need help badly. When we think of the infant clothing, cribs, carriages, and baby beds which are being outgrown every day in Chicago before they have lost all their usefulness, is there any reason why we should let this condition exist another day?

At present, for example, we have one woman whose husband is dead and who has a three months old baby. Buying a baby buggy is out of the question.

Again, we have a number of expectant mothers who would look forward to the advent of the new life with great joy and happiness if only they could see how the necessities for the newcomer would be provided. Can we let such mothers be worried when among us there are many whose children have outgrown their first outfits and we can give the clothing and bedding to help another little one just as easily as we could put it away where it would accomplish nothing?

We have appeals and needs for anything and everything useful in baby care. Bedding, beds, cribs, bassinets, and clothing can be put into service immediately to relieve the desperate need.

How easily we can turn distress into happiness—those of us with little children in the family. An infant in any family in comfortable circumstances seldom wears out its clothes. It outgrows them, and there they are—ready for a lot more service, if only we give them.

Think of the need there is right now, please, and let me know you will contribute.

Offers Pair of Galoshes.

"I have a pair of black galoshes, size 8, which I will gladly give to some woman who needs them. Miss S."

With cold weather and snowy walks here for a long stay, we'll all need overshoes. If these are in your size and you can't afford a pair, let me know.

For an Invalid.

"I am wondering if you have any man who could use an abdominal truss. It is in good condition and some one suffering from hernia might be glad to have it. Mrs. O. H."

Thank you so much, Mrs. O. H.! I know one of our invalid readers will be grateful to you for contributing to his comfort.

Mr. E. M. Merchant of 665 43rd St., Louisville, Ky. is one of the champion horseshoe pitchers of the country. Here he tells how REM made a perfect score against his cough.

REM scores a "ringer"

for Champion Horseshoe Pitcher

"I was recently laid up for a week with a bad cold and a cough that I got travelling around pitching horseshoes," says Mr. Merchant. "I do that a lot for I was Kentucky's Ringer Champion in 1924. One Sunday morning I noticed a REM ad in the paper and decided I'd try it, for what I had been using hadn't helped me any. It proved to be the best cough medicine I'd ever used. By the time I'd taken two doses, my cough was considerably better. Before long it was entirely gone."

Grateful users recommend REM. It's different. It clings to your throat, soothes the irritation and quiets the cough. Pleasant to take and perfectly harmless. "Money back," if it doesn't help you.

Insist on REM! Remember, its effectiveness is largely due to a special ingredient, not in ordinary cough syrups.

DISAPPOINTMENT.

[From Our New York Correspondence.]

One misses western men, my dear.
There are Beau Brummels, D'Artagnans and Cyranos,
With all the kick—
Boiled out of them.
I feel like a little girl
Who sees, dismayed,
Her doll's—unbreakable.

CURTAIN:

[Mamie Hickey's shorthand diary has been telling her experiences in the chorus of a Broadway show for almost four weeks.]

"Tell me not in mournful numbers
Life is but an empty dream!"
'Tis a nightmare full of horrors;
Oft one rouses with a scream.
And "the saddest words," I'm thinking,
Ever pen or type can write
I've just lamped upon the call board
Scrawled "This show will close tonight."

STYMIED.

Fate, can't I coax you to make me an actress?
Make me one quickly, I earnestly pray,
Else, as a proper maid, how I can I ever
Do fullest justice to this negligee?

Rainbow hued gauzes must languish, defeated,
Drooping, secluded, where traffic is rare.
Only a third act could get this gown over—
Fate, must I waste it on dumb desert air?

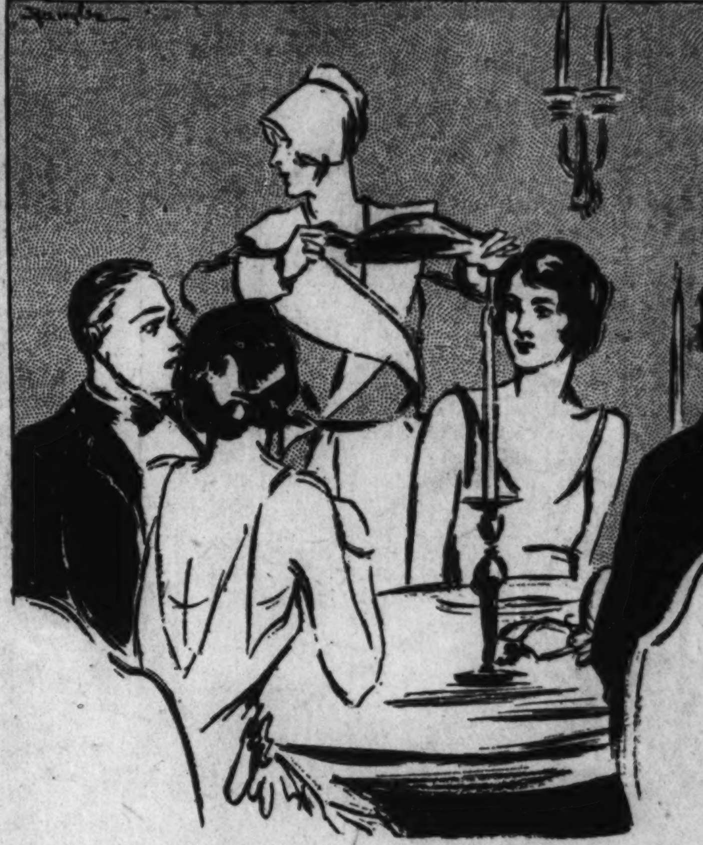
AN EARLY AMERICAN DINNER



Mrs. Harry Plans and Gives One for the Epicurean Delight of a Visiting Frenchman

By Persis Standish.

A DISTINGUISHED French scientist who came to America on business was more or less pushed by Mr. Boss into Harry's care. Of course, Mrs. Harry was delighted, because she is more or less inclined to be a Franco-maniac in a mild way and because the scientist himself proved to be a charming person, rather youngish and having a delightful sense of humor.

Mr. Boss already had introduced him to a number of persons besides the Harrys, and so, of course, he was having a fairly busy time. He dined with the Harrys several times en famille and went with them to the few restaurants where the cooking would not make a Frenchman cringe—none of them fashionable, of course.

His Kind of Girls.

After she had got to know him pretty well, Mrs. Harry proposed giving a dinner party for him. She said: "I wanted to wait until I knew whether you expect women to be well informed or pretty before asking them to dinner to entertain you. I want you to have a good time, you know."

"Do you know now what kind of girls I like?" asked the scientist.

"Yes," said Mrs. Harry, "I think I can guess that you like a reasonable combination of intelligence and looks."

"I will tell you," said the scientist, "just what kind of girls I like."

"Well?" said Mrs. Harry.

"American girls," said the Frenchman, gallantly.

"I like everything about your country except one thing," he continued, "the elaboration, the exaggerated way in which most people shower a stranger with lavishness. You alone of all the persons I have met have not striven to impress me with your wealth and influence."

"O, well," said Mrs. Harry, "I have neither, you see."

An American Dinner.

"You wouldn't if you had," said the scientist rather cryptically, "but I will allow you to give the dinner party if you will promise me that it shall be simple—not more than six persons and not more than four courses. As simple as possible and your everyday linen—no lace, madam—and no gold table service."

Mrs. Harry laughed: "You make things easy for me, indeed. I think I shall give you a truly American dinner."

"O, that would be delightful," he said. "I shall be no end grateful for that and I shall be able to tell about it, when I go home, as the happiest time of my visit."

"Had you not better wait until afterwards," said Mrs. Harry, "to say nice things about it—or do you consider that it will be easier to say them now?"

"To show you how really anxious I am to enjoy the party. I hope you mean to give it this week."

So Wednesday night was settled and Mrs. Harry began on Monday to plan her Pilgrim Father dinner. She drove out into the country and got a turkey for the main course. She had no appetizer, because that would count as a course and she did not intend either to repeat French recipes or compete with them.

So the first course was black bean soup with cornsticks; the second was roast turkey, cranberry jelly, and mashed potatoes. She remembered that the French do not like to eat their vegetables and meat together and that there probably was no Pilgrim Father salad, and so she had a clever vegetable course for the third. It consisted of succotash made of tomatoes, corn, and lima beans, and with this she served hot baking powder biscuits, although she was in doubt as to whether they did not originate at a much later date and from a southerly direction. However, she didn't have time to ask Miss Eddington about them and she needed them to make the course good. For dessert she had pumpkin pie and cheese.

The dinner was a great success and the scientist said he believed the pilgrims Mrs. Harry represented at the feast must have had French blood somewhere, because nothing so good as that menu could have come from England or, in fact, from anywhere else by ancestry except la belle France.

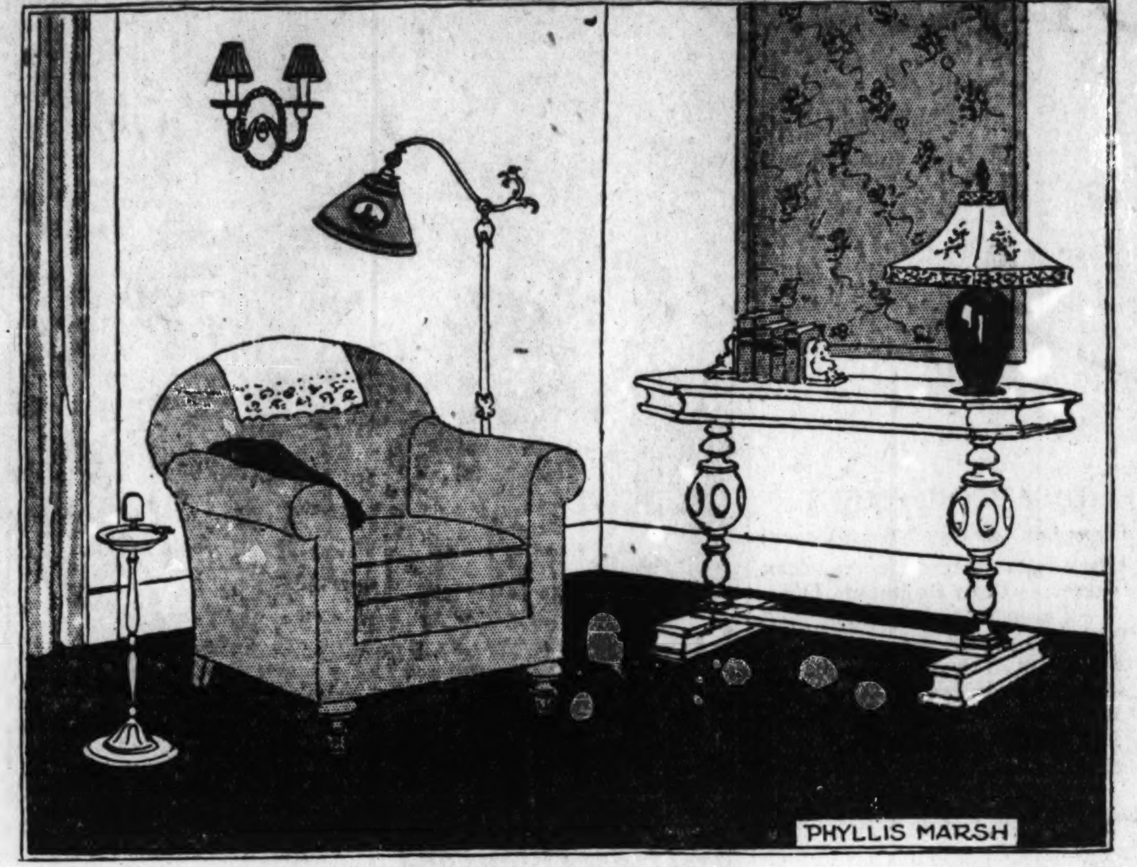
The HOME HARMONIOUS

Lamps and Lighting Fixtures, If Carefully Chosen, May Make the Simplest Room Charming

Phyllis Marsh will be glad to assist the homemaker in any problems pertaining to home building and home furnishing. Address your letter to Phyllis Marsh, The Tribune, Chicago. Inclose stamped addressed envelope for personal reply.



A well lighted corner of an attractive living room.

By Phyllis Marsh.

THERE is nothing quite so charming or decoratively effective in any room as attractively shaded lamps or lighting fixtures. Whether they be in the form of wall sconces or side lights, central chandeliers, simple drop lights, table or floor lamps, they may be capable of either making or marring the decorative quality of any room.

For the average home the suspended central ceiling fixture in the living room is never as satisfactory or decorative as side lights, floor and table lamps. However, in the dining room it is quite appropriate to use the chandelier type of central lighting fixture which boasts of several upright electric candles. These should be arrayed with small shades to shield the eyes from all unnecessary glare. There are various other types of suspended lighting fixtures designed for use in halls, bedrooms, kitchens, and bathrooms.

Artificial light must be so distributed that it will be convenient to those using it and at the same time give a room a balanced appearance. For instance, do not have one end of a room well lighted while the other is in shadow. The room will lack balance and that quality of repose necessary to the comfort of the occupants.

In selecting any type of floor or table lamp it is well to remember that it is going to serve a two fold purpose. First, it is primarily to be used to read, sew, or write by, and, secondly, it must be artistic and of such type that it will fit into the style of room in which it is to be used. Direct or unshaded light should always be avoided, as it is most trying to the eyes and too glaring ever to be artistic.

No living or dining room is ever complete without its sconces or sidelights. There are various styles and designs for the house of colonial spirit, for the house of Spanish or Italian character, and for the house of early English or French peasant or cottage style, as well as for the home of nondescript character. The number of sidelights used and their size will be determined by the size of the room. It is always advisable to shade them with appropriate looking shields or shades in either parchment, silk, or chintz, as their style demands. If this cannot be done, then select frosted bulbs and those of amber tint, rather than white.

With the sidelights chosen, the next thought of the home decorator will be toward the selecting of the necessary table and floor lamps for the living room. Every living room has or should have its various individual groupings which, when carefully arranged, make an interesting ensemble and complete unit of the room. These groupings require for use as well as decoration the support of lamps, either in the form of table or floor lamps. After the choice of style has been made, it is well to see that the floor lamp is of proper height for the chair at which it is to be placed. Both from the standpoint of proportion in relation to the chair and the comfort of the person reading it is essential that the height be correct.

A shade of extreme color is never satisfactory to read, sew or write by and should never be used. This does not mean, however, that it cannot be of some soft warm tint of yellow, orange or light rose, but it does mean that the extreme inside lining should be either white or cream. A shade which is narrow at the top and flares considerably at the bottom will radiate light farther than one of more upright lines or of bell shape style. One of the most simple, inexpensive and satisfactory types of floor lamps for reading purposes is of wrought iron and is usually topped by a parchment paper shade. Then there are numerous other styles of floor lamps such as the junior, bridge, and piano lamp.

Table lamps and their shades are many and varied and in styles and designs appropriate for all types of rooms. There are simple styles and elaborate and formal ones and each has its proper place in the scheme of decoration. If the base of the lamp is pronounced in its decoration, it is advisable to select a shade of less ornate character, but if it is of simple style, then the shade may be more decorative. The shade of any lamp should look like an integral part of the lamp rather than an appendage simply added on to it for use without thought as to proportion, balance, harmony and unity. Many an artistic lamp is spoiled by being adorned with a shade which is too large and too ornate for the base. The contour of the shade should be in keeping with the contour of the base if the two are to become a harmonious unit.

It is also necessary that a table lamp be in correct proportion to the table upon which it is being used, and that it is neither too high nor too low for the comfort of those using its light. The shade should come down far enough on the lamp base to just cover the socket. It is especially essential when selecting silk and georgette for the making of shades, that the material be as attractive looking in daylight as by artificial light.

When selecting several lamps for a room, introduce various styles for variety and do not choose all the floor lamps of the same height. More than two table lamps of the same design are not advisable and these two should be arranged in bisymmetrical balance on a long davenport table. Small lamps at each end of a mantel over a fireplace may be arranged in the same manner, which is also an attractive way to adorn a dressing table with Dresden style figurine lamps.

When selecting a shade frame and the necessary materials with which to cover it, there are several questions the home decorator must ask herself. It is assumed that the lamp base is already selected and that it is in absolute harmony both in color and character with the room in which it is to be used.

1. Is the size and shape of shade frame in proportion and appropriate to the style of the lamp base?
2. Are you selecting the correct type of materials for the character of the base?
3. Is the color suitable and does it look as attractive when lighted as when not?
4. And last but not least, is the trimming appropriate with the entire ensemble?

Today's illustration displays a comfortable spot in a homelike, nondescript type of living room, which owes a great deal of its charm and attractiveness to the fact that it has been illuminated most carefully, carrying out every detail as to utility and decoration.

The TRIBUNE COOK BOOK

Fandango Styles in Foods with Garlic Perfumes and Other Spanish Exuberances Are Coming Vogues.

All recipes have been scientifically tested by Miss Eddington with current market materials and are indorsed by her.

SPANISH influences in art, architecture, music, grill work for screens and balconies, smoothed back glossy hair, garlic odors, etc., have been accumulating for some time until now they tell us we are to have a Spanish winter.

Spanish we may be, then, but there are good reasons why it is easier said than done, especially if we would have anywhere nearly the classic dishes of Spain and those consistent with the exuberance of that romantic figure of the Spanish cavalier with his guitar singing to the dark lady with a rose in her teeth. Spain has, too, some of the most romantic geographical names in all the world—Salamanca, Cadiz, Andalusia with its practical Malaga and many others, and perhaps their foods were up to these names. Yet foods were certainly as diverse over the whole of the ancient Iberian peninsula as Spanish foods are in this modern world—greatly diversified, because Spain has embraced the islands of the sea, Mexico, South America, etc.

The Roman eminences, Seneca, Martial, Lucan, were born in a highly cultivated Spain, and in no Latin works can we find more about foods than in Martial's. I once went through 600 pages of his translated poems to learn about the foods and eating of Martial's day, and it was entertaining no end. In those days men would almost sell their souls to get dinner invitations to great establishments. But we might even go back of Rome for influences discoverable in the common life of Spain. The peninsula was popular and worked by the Phoenicians, and since we can find in Marseilles, France, ways of cooking fish traced back to the inventors of the alphabet, we may easily believe that the Phoenicians influenced cooking in Spain greatly in their day, and a bit to this day.

And when the Moors came into Spain with their arts and sciences and great agricultural industry they set up many things, very likely a dietetics, for they knew how to live. They were theologians and philosophers as well as scientists. Not all the influences by any means went out from Aragon and Castille, although princely peoples have always found a way of living in a princely fashion. Malaga was Moorish and we have Malaga grapes and Malaga raisins to this day, and there have been marvelous Malaga wines. The Moors were perfectionists, and probably it was they that dried fruit and packed it more perfectly than ony one else ever has and passed the knowledge on. And besides the raisins, there have been delicious dried dates and figs sent out from the port of Malaga.

We have reason to believe that Pheonician influences lasted in Barcelona, which is in one of the great eating provinces in Spain today, our foreign correspondents tell us, with restaurants in unbelievable numbers. Granada has been great for its pleasant foods as well as for its remarkably romantic name and fame. The emblem of the city is the pomegranate, a fruit of eminence in Spain and more popular with us each year.

We have reason to believe that the surest way—but it is certainly a laborious one—to learn about what foods to set up in Spanish ways is to read books of travel on Spain—some are lovely to read—Spanish histories, and to study a Spanish dictionary, and also to go to museums where there are Spanish things to see, including pots and "braseros" or braising pans.

Spanish Cook Books.

As to Spanish cook books we would say that they are difficult to peruse, for we have a shelf full, gathered variously from Cuba to California, many of them printed in Spain. [There are many words in them not to be found in dictionaries, yet the dictionaries give many definitions which are equivalent to recipes.]

Judging by the first recipes given in the majority of these books, sauces are the leading items in Spanish cookery, although we know that it really is Spanish stews that rank as most national. But sauces and stews may be quite closely related, and Spain has given to universal cookery the brown sauce, which contains as many ingredients as the national olla or olla prodida.

Spanish Fruits.

The Seville orange and others of Spanish growing were familiar to the world and eating literature long before the Spaniards planted an orange tree on what is now United States soil, and, judging by what we see in Cuba and California, and what we have read about Mexico, anywhere where Spanish influences have prevailed, the orange and lemon have received loving attention and widest use, and appreciation.

In a hundred year book on Spain is to be found reference to the Spanish proverb concerning the fit time to eat oranges, which characterizes them as gold in the morning, silver at noon, and lead at night. You may call your morning orange juice, then, a Spanish "refresco."

Cuba seems to have fruits in endless variety, and it is perhaps the Spanish influence there, as well as climatic judgment, that has led to their serving their fruit wealth in ways unusual to us, and to serve many fruit juices and purées profusely in places corresponding to our ice cream parlors or "fountains." Cocoanut, pineapple, and banana are eaten in mountain sized heaps, and the mango with most interesting ceremony.

And fruits are preserved in these Spanish colonies, as in Spain. The Spanish West Indies has not only given sugar to the wide world but it has contributed guava jellies to international menus, and many an item less well known than this popular concomitant of cream cheese.

Spanish Raw Materials.

Of really Spanish raw materials we may have in our larder there are not a few, and we might easily have more if it was commercially important to import them even from Cuba. Of course, the Malaga raisin is one of the superlatively good things and used to be served with nuts and oranges on old time holiday tables in New England, where seaborne foods used to be so common.

Spanish olives are in our markets and there is no salad oil superior to the best of Spanish olive oils. Almost any salad with tomatoes and a Spanish oil may justifiably be called a Spanish salad. And when eggs are cooked in olive oil—a good deal of it—as is customary in Spain, humble eaters sop up all the oil with bread. A simple luncheon for the poor in the Spain of late date is "a hunch of bread and a bowlful of olives for each," or a salad.

But a luncheon in Spain, as a friend of mine describes it in one of her books on Spain, that was good enough for the Cid, consisted of "Cold soup like a melted salad, a perfumed stew in which were strangely mingled Malaga potatoes, white wine, honey, cinnamon and cloves, and, for a crowning bliss, a dish of sugared chestnuts overflowed by a sirup whose every spoonful yielded a new flavor—lemon peel, orange peel, tamarind and a medley of spices."

Of course, these chestnuts were like the French marrons, before they are taken out of the sirup and dried. In trying to make even these latter it is best to leave them in a sirup, or preserved until shortly before they are to be dried and served as a confection.

People who live down in southern Florida and Cuban waters, where the flying fishes play—to use a Kipling phrase—know not only the Spanish mackerel but some fish of as brilliant color as the most flamboyant trees and flowers of the land, and deserving of such names as parrot fish.

Spanish Eatables.

A thick and cinnamon flavored hot chocolate is called Spanish chocolate, whether you get it in Italy or Coronado Beach, Cal., where cinnamon toast has also a popularity, and very likely deserves the cognomen Spanish. In California, as in Mexico, one can buy wonderfully carved "swizzle sticks," a utensil for milling chocolate, also a utensil which has many different names in the wide, wide world, where eggs are whipped with it, or that Italian egg specialty, zabaione, and other such things in Germany, but none has been gotten up with carving and inlaying more elaborate than the Mexican utensil, which also has a Cuban name, and probably was first designed in Spain.

Spanish Mexican.

In Mexico and in New Mexico and perhaps all along the Mexican border the peppery things seem the most characteristic—tamales, tortillas, chile con carne, and frijoles. The latter beans are far more like our own kidney beans [beloved of the Creoles, who are part Spanish] than is the garbanzo or Spanish pea — curious thing and hard to cook—which is so universally used in Spain in stews and everywhere, probably, where Spanish influences are strong. Its character affords the best proof, other than a knowledge of their meager fuels, why the Spanish have understood slow cooking, for with any other sort these cannot be made edible. The last vestige of heat in a coal is utilized in cooking in all poor countries, and Spain has been poor.

The Spanish Stew.

The olla podrida of Spain, containing often fish, flesh, fowl and any vegetable, egg and oil, is a great national dish, and it is hard to tell whether this name or puchero is the more universal term for it and there seems to be a score of names for Spanish stews, if no more, as a perusal of the dictionary more than a perusal of cook books shows. Good stews are inevitably the product of slow cookery, and slow cookery has other reasons for prevailing in Spain besides the scantiness of fuel to make hot fires.

The olla was an earthen pot, perhaps not as fragile as the almost universal and fragile cazuela of Mexico and Cuba, where a nest of four or five play cazuelas are sold as souvenirs—replicas of the real thing. In Cuba the most characteristic thing served in this dish seems to be rice with chicken [arroz con pollo] which is fricassee of of chicken over boiled rice.

Jealousy

We're all acquainted with jealousy, the monster that smashes love affairs, wrecks homes causes business quarrels, and generally plays havoc with us mortals. We'd like to know your most notable experience with a jealous person or persons. If you have encountered a situation where jealousy led to a tragic or ridiculous climax, tell us about it. Prompted by Envy.

I had many friends at school and was frequently invited to their homes. The beautiful furnishings of these homes made me hesitate to invite these friends to my own, which lacked everything lovely save a fine old painting. This was a picture of one of my ancestors and had been in the family several hundred years.

One of the young men in the party was an art student and was quite the rage with all the girls. He admired my picture and asked to call again to study it.

My chum, who had admitted her fondness for this young man, left saying she was going home for a headache powder. One of the boys offered to take her in his car, but she declined.

When the young man called again and we were looking at the picture we discovered a large hole in the canvas. This was made by acid and ruined the picture. We later confirmed our suspicions that this girl purchased the acid when she pretended to go home for the powder. M. C. H.

Naughty Girl.

After I had, for three years, been petted and spoiled as the only child, and consequently the only grandchild, my parents became the proud possessors of a baby boy. I had been an adored daughter but now there was a boy and, besides being adored, he was adorable, with a head full of golden curls in contrast to my straight brown locks.

Even at that early age I noticed the remarks made about what a nice baby he was and always, always those curls. When he was a little over a year old, I. then past four, took my brother and a pair of scissors under the bed and cut every curl.

As I know you're curious I will add that I did not get the deserved spanking. I had just miraculously recovered from a severe illness and my parents feared the result of punishment. Perhaps, too, they were thankful my brother escaped more serious damage. MRS. P. H. S.

SCOTT'S EMULSION

MOTHER!

Look at Child's Tongue if Sick, Cross, Feverish

Look at the tongue, mother! If coated, it is a sure sign that your little one's stomach, liver and bowels need a gentle, thorough cleansing at once.

When peevish, cross, listless, pale, doesn't sleep, doesn't eat or act naturally, or is feverish, stomach sour, breath bad; has stomach-ache, sore throat, diarrhœa, full of cold, give a teaspoonful of "California Fig Syrup," and in a few hours all the foul, constipated waste, undigested food and sour bile gently moves out of the little bowels without griping, and you have a well, playful child again.

You needn't coax sick children to take this harmless, "fruity laxative;" they love its delicious taste, and it always makes them feel splendid.

Ask your druggist for a bottle of "California Fig Syrup," which has directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly on the bottle. Beware of counterfeits sold here. To be sure you get the genuine, ask to see that it is made by the "California Fig Syrup Company." Refuse any other kind with contempt.

When to Suspect Acid Scalp

It isn't age that dulls the hair. Nor frequent washing or curling. If your hair lacks all life and lustre, it may be due to a condition you can correct in twenty-four hours. Acid scalp.

Neutralize the acid secretions of the scalp, and your hair will have the lovely sheen that makes any hair so attractive. A few drops of Danderine will do this; and as its name implies, Danderine is a scientific dandruff dissolvent. Five minutes after Danderine is applied, every particle of dandruff has been dissolved!

Acid scalp should be suspected if your hair is at all stiff or stringy, or won't hold a wave. Another sign—not so easily detected in one's self—is an acrid odor to the hair when it is warm, or after exercise. And for thirty-five cents at any drugstore, you can get a bottle of Danderine that will keep your hair soft and sweet and "on its good behavior" for weeks!

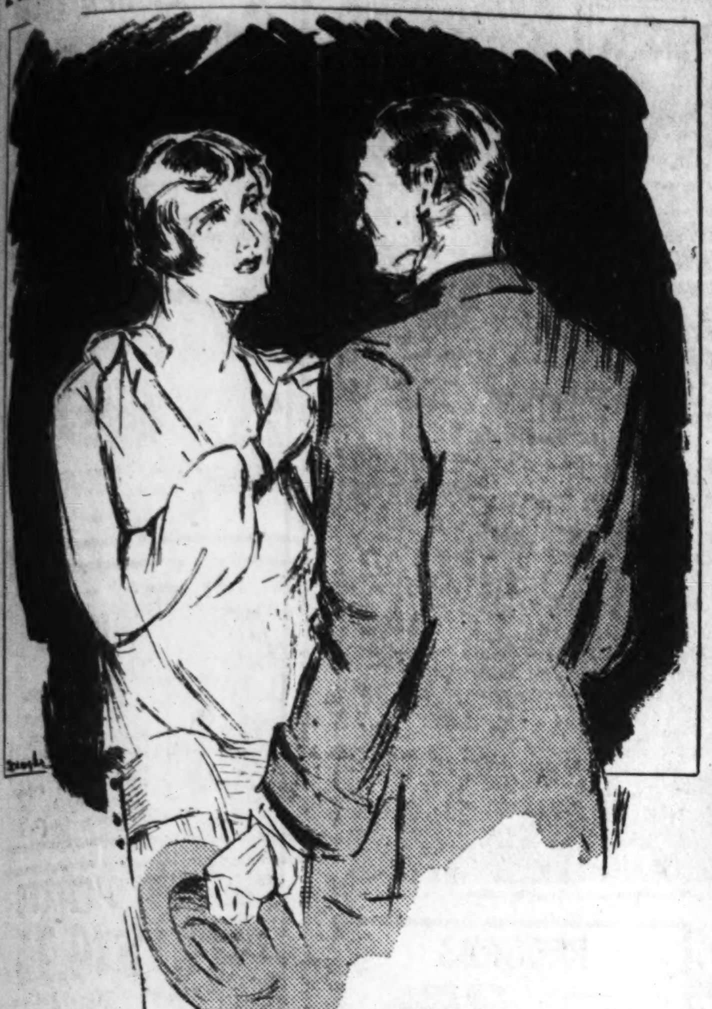
A FEW WORDS TO FATHERS



What Kind of Mates Are You, Men? Are You the Sort That Are Easy to Love—or Not?

By Doris Blake.

WHY all the magazine articles, why all the newspaper articles, the sermons from pulpits and judicial benches about woman and her job of keeping the home fires burning? How about the other party? How about his duties? Are we to believe that his are executed in the sight of man, God and his wife when he brings home a pay envelope, which half the time his wife doesn't get an even break on?

"In this appalling increase in divorce, of which we are reminded almost daily, is it possible to believe that woman is the sole cause and with her alone lies the remedy? Does not the old bromide about it taking two to make a quarrel serve in the instance of divorce? And being so, why not ask oftener 'Are Men Husbands?' instead of 'Are Women Wives?' 'Are You on Your Job, Old Frozen Face, Grouch or What Have You?' 'Are You the Sweetheart She Married?' 'Are You a Sympathetic, Loving Husband?' et cetera, et cetera." —Weary.

Fair enough, Weary! Let's ask it. What kind of mate are you, anyway, Old Dear?

Just stand still a minute until we get the tape out and see if we have been measuring the wrong person for shortcomings that lead to domestic friction!

Of course, when you married, one of the dreams you had was to be met on your return from work by a charmingly frocked, adorably coiffured, sweetly smiling dear who would offer her arms and lips affectionately while you secretly marveled how such sweet deserts could be meted out to one so undeserving.

Now that you may not be met with the coveted warmth of affection do you ever ask yourself if you might not be responsible for the change? Do you take a real interest in your home? Or, as a homemaker, do you think your job is done with the financing of it?

Of course, you have to go to shop or office every morning, put in a full day of struggle and toil. You have to buck competitors. You have hours, days, perhaps, of anxiety that are grilling. You're doing it all for the little woman and the children. You're honestly intent on getting ahead that they may have more comforts or luxuries, as the case may be; and you, yourself, may be able to enjoy some of them, too. But do you become possessed of the feeling that because of this effort of yours you alone are entitled to all the consideration at the end of the day; that you should be absolved from blame should a worried mood pursue you to the doorstep and the absent minded peck that you bestow be accepted, not at its face value but as meaning your heart is always in the right place, though your moods may vary?

Meet Her Half Way.

If you expect the little woman to greet you warmly, isn't it only fair that you give her the chance with a display of affection yourself? Unhappily, where the emotions are concerned, women are peculiarly sensitive. A warm response is easy enough, however, if there is a smile and a happy greeting to respond to.

Few of us are so phlegmatically built as to escape moods entirely. The wife is expected to respect those of her husband. She accepts the old alibi of business worries for his moments of silence, indifference or curtness because it is her job to try to "understand" her husband. How about husbands striving a bit, too, to understand that the life of a woman with a couple of children to look after during the day is likewise apt to be harassed beyond measure by mischief or accidents they fall into? In between watching them, there are sewing jobs, mending, planning of meals, cooking, doing those hundred and one things around a house to improve its appearance so "John" will have a charming home to bring his friends to.

Suppose, at the end of one of these days, her greeting is a bit preoccupied, a little understanding might save that sulky hour before and during mealtime. A cheery word, an honest interest in what has engaged her day would clear the atmosphere.

Some men seem to expect to walk into a home and find things just as they would be in a hotel. And take just about as much interest in how the management conducts things as there. And their attitude toward the whole place is one of "I pay for it. Why shouldn't it be so?" Praise is the last thing that ever occurs to them to offer. No home was ever broken where praise was given freely.

We hear a good deal of counsel administered to wives about being polite and nice to husbands' friends. Courtesy to a wife's friends is quite as much in order. It is the same gross affront to snub Emma X in your own home as for your wife to "freeze up" when Bill B drops in. If she is willing to accept invitations with you to the homes of friends of yours, what right have you to refuse to play bridge or dine with a woman friend of hers?

Affection Is Appreciated.

How often do you bestow on your mate those little marks of affection so dear to her—an unsolicited caress, a hug, a word of flattery? These are the things that mean more to woman's happiness than motors, pearls or diamond bracelets. The latter are presented on rare occasions but the other little things that make life sweet may be offered frequently and often, and more than anything else to keep alive the love in a woman's heart.

Are you the kind of man who thinks women are incompetent to handle money? If so, have you ever given your wife an honest chance to prove what she could do with it? You aren't the ideal husband just because you give her enough to buy food and clothing for herself and for the family. More bitterness in homes is caused over the money question than any other. Men are woefully short sighted who do not take their wives into their financial confidence.

Half of the extravagances of women are due to ignorance of their mates' earning power or are committed in a spirit of indifference as to whether things can be afforded or not. When the wife is let in on the partnership she knows how the balance sheet stands and there are very, very few wives who will break the confidence placed in them on money matters. When lean days are fallen upon, lean days are lived in the knowledge that when fuller days arrive they, too, will be shared equally.

Hard to Adore.

The matters of looks, charm and attractiveness, in spite of the repeated warnings to curl-papered, kimonoed, flat heeled and sallow complexioned women, isn't alone the woman's job where domestic harmony is concerned. An unshaven man, bay-windowed, purple-faced, careless about his linen, his shoes, is just as likely a target for a woman's scorn as the woman who lets her youth and looks get away.

We're not recommending that the wife of such a one transfer her affections to some slenderer, younger male, but there isn't any reason why the world shouldn't say if she did: "It's the husband's own fault. How can you expect a woman to love a man like that?"

If the wife doesn't keep herself charming and attractive enough to hold her husband, she receives very little consolation if he makes off with a younger, prettier woman.

Are you one of these fathers who believes himself to be a good parent because he brings home gifts of toys and on occasional evenings spends a crowded hour of fun and frolic with them, paying the bills but leaving their upbringing entirely to mother? An absentee father, says Harvey O'Higgins,—one who leaves the upbringing of a son to his mother—does the boy a great wrong. If he becomes so absorbed in his profession or in his business as to neglect his children and forget his wife, she is dissatisfied with him and her revolt is unconsciously imitated by her children.

THIS PATTERN FOR 22" HEAD SIZE

Here Is an Interesting Little Felt Hat That May Be Made by the Home Milliner.

ANOTHER one of those interesting close fitting felt hats is shown here, and it can be made in any shade of felt that you like. There are only three pieces in this hat, and it is easy to make and will be up to date and chic when finished.

The hat can be cut from a piece of felt 9x36 inches if a 22 inch head size is right for you. It can be adjusted for other sizes by changing the length of sections 1 and 3 and by the number of tucks put in.

Make small tucks in section 1, as indicated. Then join the ends of this section with the raw edges out. The crown, section 2, is joined to section 1 in the same fashion—that is, with the raw edges out. Adjust and trim the edge of section 2 to get a smooth crown.

The head size band, section 3, is folded lengthwise and sewed on the inside of section 1 at the brim edge is made of a contrasting color the folded edge should extend about one quarter inch below the brim edge of section 1. Be careful in making these hats that you don't get the head size too small, for they can look decidedly close fitting and yet be perfectly comfortable.

Two attractive ornaments are shown, an aeroplane and a Scotch terrier, either one of which you can easily make from a contrasting color. For the older woman, or for formal wear, other ornaments, such as a rhinestone buckle, a flat feather ornament, or bow of ribbon, are more appropriate.

Strange Weddings

Have you ever seen a wedding so outlandish that it upset all your ideas of the traditional ceremony? Some marriages are foreign and quaint in their adherence to ancient customs; others are ultra modern in their haphazard speed and unconventionality. The Tribune would like to knew the story of the strangest wedding you've ever seen. We will pay $1 for every letter published. Address Strange Weddings, Chicago Tribune.

An Audience of Two.

The bride was the only child of wealthy parents, and her mother maintained she should have an elegant wedding.

The groom was far from rich, and being employed in a large city several hundred miles from the girl's home town she insisted on marrying him there to save him traveling expenses.

Though her mother knew no one in the etiy to invite to the wedding, she reserved a church, minister, organist, and high priced choir for the occasion, and had the church elaborately decorated with ribbons, flowers, and white carpets in the aisles, and ordered a most beautiful outfit for her daughter.

The ceremony was performed and the singing and decorations were enjoyed by an audience of two—the bride's father and mother. Afterwards the party had dinner at a large hotel.

No wedding trip followed, for the bride and groom went to housekeeping immediately. M. M. S.

THE CHEEKIEST PERSON I EVER MET

Send us a short, to the point reminiscence of cheekiest person you ever met, and we'll pay you $1 for it if we print it. All letters must be addressed to the Cheekiest Person Editor, The Tribune, Chicago.

Borrowed a Hat to Keep.

When I was 16 my mother allowed me to go into a millinery store to learn to make my own hats. The first one I made was beautiful, and on Thursday, before I had worn it, a friend dropped in, admired it, tried it on, and asked if she might wear it that evening, as she was to visit people who were strangers to me.

I reluctantly consented, thinking she would return it in the morning. She never did return it. Friday night she wore it to a church social, Saturday to choir practice, and Sunday morning and evening in the choir loft.

Monday my indignant mother made me go after the hat. My friend, Lelia, seemed surprised and asked me why I was not wearing her old hat which she had left for me.

There were a dozen unsightly hatpin holes through the delicate pink and white maline and straw. As we attended the same church, as long as I wore that hat some one was sure to ask what I was doing with Lelia's hat. M. S.

A Human Sponge.

A few winters ago we had some deep snow, so that the drifts to the outer buildings were ten feet high and the walks to town where we got supplies were not shoveled for about four days.

The day before the storm a cousin came to visit and of course was snowed in and was compelled to remain more than the afternoon when he came.

After the storm had subsided and the drifting ceased my husband took his shovel and worked for hours alone till he had made a path to the street.

My cousin then thought he would go uptown and I said to him, "I wonder if you will get me some sausage for breakfast and a loaf of bread?" as I was tired baking bread and eating eggs. After awhile he came home with the articles and when I asked him how much I owed him for them, he calmly said, "Thirty-five cents," and I paid him. He had been marooned with us four days and helped to eat what we had in store. B. K. A.

Making the Guest Pay.

One day I was invited to a friend's house for lunch. Instead of preparing lunch at home, she asked me if it would be all right with me if we went to a nearby restaurant.

The checks came to $1.80 and she asked me if I would lend her that amount until we got home, as she only had a few dollars with her and wanted to do some shopping on the way. I gave her $2. She paid the cashier, kept the 20 cents change and that was the last I ever saw of my $2. R. J. M.

Plenty of Nerve.

Last year a neighbor bought a car but had no place to keep it, so we offered him space in our garage to use until he had one built. He used the garage several months, for which we charged him nothing.

He often drove a few miles into the country to gather wild blackberries, so one day when he was ready to go I asked him if he would take me and two guests with him. When we returned I thanked him, and laughingly asked, "How much do we owe you?"

He replied in all seriousness, "Fifty cents each," which I paid, and he accepted. E. H. D.

Keep Your Skin Young

DO you know that just beneath that soiled, discolored, faded or aged complexion is one fair to look upon? Nature causes the normal skin to peel off in tiny, unseen, flour-like particles, a little each day, renewing the complexion of youth naturally, but there comes a time when this skin shedding slows up. Worry, overwork, sickness, inactivity are reasons that cause the face to be blotchy, discolored, pimply and old looking. The thing to do, if you wish to look your prettiest at all times, is to assist nature in the process of absorption by using pure Mercolized Wax. Get an ounce at any drug store or beauty counter and use as directed. It gently but surely peels away the outer scarf skin, removing freckles, pimples, blackheads or a muddy complexion. The underneath skin, now in evidence, is clear, pink, fresh and velvety, and the entire face looks years younger. Mercolized Wax brings out the hidden beauty.

To quickly remove wrinkles and other age lines we recommend a face lotion of unusual merit: one ounce powdered saxolite and one-half pint witch hazel.

Care of Babies

This baby has never had a day's sickness and never a cross or fretful spell that lasted an hour. And what do you suppose is responsible for this healthy, happy condition? Not diet, for he has eaten just about anything and everything a child could eat. Not drugs, for he has not been dosed with opiates; he has never had a drop of paregoric. Nor has his sensible mother ever made him taste castor oil. Yet his nerves are sound and his little bowels are strong, and when he does seem the least restless or wakeful, or out of sorts—or likely to be—his mother has him all serene again in ten or fifteen minutes!

The secret of this complete freedom from the many ills and upsets so common to infants? Plain old-fashioned Castoria. A million and more mothers swear by Castoria, and no wonder! A few drops and an approaching fever, colic, diarrhea or constipation seems to vanish in thin air. Castoria is purely vegetable; that is why physicians tell parents they may use it freely with children of any age—the youngest infant. And how they love the taste!

One word of warning; get the pure, real Castoria. Fletcher's Castoria is the original. It is the kind doctors specify. And with every bottle comes a book on "Care and Feeding of Babies" that is worth its weight in gold to any mother or prospective mother. So, remember; tell your druggist you wish Fletcher's Castoria.

The Strange Adventures of Young Robinson Grewso

By KEMBLE

His ma called him Robin; his dad called him son;
He grew like a weed and thought it
great fun,
So he called himself Robinson Grewso.

YAP, the dog, ran a few hundred yards up the beach, his nose to the ground, and the puffing band stringing out behind him. Suddenly he stopped short and pointed, not with his nose, but with his right paw.

"In yonder cove," he growled.

And sure enough, under a covering of broken boughs floated the pirate craft. The boys lost no time in pulling her out from her hiding place, for they must start at once if they were to overtake the pirates and prevent them from stealing everything at Robin's camp.

"Everybody pile in," shouted the leader. "Up with the sail and get after them."

Roy, with his two airplane chicks squawking and flapping their huge wings, was the first to jump aboard. Sweet Marie was next and then the whole bunch, followed by Yap and Chin Chin. The catapult gun was run up into the bow and Sundae placed the gum sticking shot in place. Then the race began. A good mile ahead they could see the pirate crew, every inch of sail crowded on their craft, looking anxiously back at their followers.

In the fat tummy

Robin quickly discovered that they were not gaining on the enemy and Roy was having a frightful time trying to restrain the airplane chicks. They saw the pirates and wanted to fly to them. Then Dode, the genius, hit upon a bright idea.

"Let's give them a little rope and make them pull us. They can fly all right. What say, mates?"

A mighty cheer went up, and soon the airplane birds were winging it straight for their former owners and pulling the boat through the waters at a great rate. At first the pirates were panic stricken, but soon their terror turned to joy. They pointed upward and cheered; for, sailing high overhead was the old mother airplane bird, making wide circles as she whirled her propeller bill and uttering loud squawks of anger. Nearer and nearer to Robin's boat she came and then, with a mighty swoop, nearly carried the mast away.

A flying leap

"I'll fix her if she does that again!" shrilled Chin Chin.

Robin gazed in amazement. "This is no time to be funny, old bird! Get busy and do something."

"That's just what I'm going to do. You watch little Oswald when that old hen makes another dive for us," and Chin Chin rolled his eyes and ruffled up his feathers.

Again the big bird circled and came at the boat like a rocket and just as she was about to hit it, Chin Chin made a flying leap and grabbed her tail feathers with his beak and both claws. Away the old hen zigzagged; her rudder was out of gear and Robin and his mates sent up a wild whoop as she landed in the water. Overboard went Robin and swam to rescue Chin Chin. With the old parrot soaking wet, he climbed aboard and on shot the boat toward the enemy.

The big chicks took no notice of their mammy's plight, but flew straight for the pirates. Now the boats were side by side. Blip! went the catapult gun and the gum sticking shot landed plumb in the fat tummy of the chief. Overboard he went.

Blip! another shot, this time a miss. The boats drew closer together and Robin gave the order to "board her." With the jab poles jabbing the pirate crew went overboard like so many frogs.

Swimming their fastest they struck out for the old airplane bird, who was still afloat.

And then, as Robin and his victorious pals sailed away with their own boat in tow, they beheld the pirate chief sitting astride the airplane bird trying to straighten out her tail feathers.

ISN'T IT ODD?

By William Atherton DuPuy

ISN'T it odd that government scientists should find it possible to convert a race of five toed guinea pigs into a race of five toed pigs! Here is the way it came about.

Guinea pigs were raised for scientific purposes at one of the government's experiment farms. It was found that once in a while a pig appeared which had a fifth toe. The family that produced it, they figured, had within it a tendency toward fifth toes. By crossing this pig with members of the group from which it came they got several pigs with the fifth toe. They bred these together and presently had a generation all of which had the fifth toe.

This showed the power of selective breeding, which has great value. They carried the idea further. There sometimes occurred, also, a guinea pig that was albino, all white with pink eyes. One of these appeared among the five toed pigs. They followed the same principle of selective breeding for albinos with pink eyes and finally produced a race of guinea pigs with five toes that were albino.

Then selections were made for curly haired pigs. This quality was eventually developed. So had a generation been created that had three strange characteristics that had but rarely existed in their ancestors of a few generations before—pigs that were five toed, were albinos and were curly coated.

The principle back of this selective breeding is, of course, the basis for the development of different strains in plants and anmials. It was by this sort of selection that a strain of white faced catttle was developed. It was by this sort of selection that it came to pass that there are police dogs, bull dogs, poodle dogs. It was by this sort of selection that chrysanthemums were developed from daisies. It is through selection of this sort that there came to be chrysanthemums of many colors. It was through this sort of selection that the giant tomatoes of the dinner table were developed from the small, watery "love apple" of two generations ago. This selective breeding, in fact, is one of the biggest ideas in all livestock and animal breeding and has been worth uncounted millions to the human race.

$5 Apiece for Bright Sayings of Children

> The Tribune will pay $5 for each childish saying printed. The story told must never have been printed in any magazine or paper. It is not possible to acknowledge or return unavailable contributions. Write on one side of the paper. Address bright sayings to Aunty Bee, The Tribune, Chicago.

Virginia's father traveled and was home only two of three times a year. She asked her mother for new roller skates and her mother said, "Why don't you ask your father for them when he comes home?"

Virginia replied, "But I don't know him well enough, mother." B. F. R.

Charles and Freddie had stayed with their grandmother while their mother was sick in the hospital, and grandmother and daddy had kept, as a great surprise, the news that they had two new baby sisters.

Today the boys returned home and were eagerly waiting the arrival of their mother. Freddie was the first to spy her. "Charles," he called joyously, "here's mother."

Then as he perceived that she had a baby in each arm he gasped and stuttered, "and ah-a-a-, gosh, if she ain't brought home a whole taxicab full of babies." D. A. S.

Dr. Caldwell's 3 Rules Keep You Healthy

Dr. Caldwell watched the results of constipation for 47 years, and believed that no matter how careful people are of their health, diet and exercise, constipation will occur from time to time regardless of how much one tries to avoid it. Of next importance, then, is how to treat it when it comes. Dr. Caldwell always was in favor of getting as close to nature as possible, hence his remedy for constipation, known as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, is a mild vegetable compound. It cannot harm the most delicate system and is not a habit forming preparation. Syrup Pepsin is pleasant-tasting, and youngsters love it. It does not gripe. Thousands of mothers have written us to that effect.

Dr. Caldwell did not approve of drastic physics and purges. He did not believe they were good for human beings to put into their system. In a practice of 47 years he never saw any reason for their use when a medicine like Syrup Pepsin will empty the bowels just as promptly, more cleanly and gently, without griping and harm to the system.

Keep free from constipation! It robs your strength, hardens your arteries and brings on premature old age. Do not let a day go by without a bowel movement. Do not sit and hope, but go to a druggist and get one of the generous bottles of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. Take the proper dose that night and by morning you will feel like a different person. Use Syrup Pepsin for yourself and members of the family in constipation, biliousness, sour and crampy stomach, bad breath, no appetite, headaches, and to break up fevers and colds. Always have a bottle in the house, and observe these three rules of health: Keep the head cool, the feet warm, the bowels open.

W. B. Caldwell M.D.

YOU AND YOUR CHILDREN

By Mrs. Gladys Huntington Bevans

Forearmed with Truth

FOREWARNED is forearmed.

You—father and mother—are the ones to tell your children the truth about the facts of life and reproduction.

You are the ones to tell them the truth about the tremendous manifestation of nature that we call sex—and I wish we had a different name for it, one more dignified, more euphonistic.

You get to your children first with the truth before somebody else does with untruth. You get there before the boy in the street, before the girl who has picked up her knowledge here and there, distorted and unlovely, gets there first.

You get there first yourself so that your girl and your boy will all their lives have a natural feeling and understanding of their bodies and the laws of life.

If saying this over every day for a year would make it seem more important, more necessary, I should like to repeat it that many times. If you love your child, if you reverence life, get there first with all the knowledge that your son and daughter should have, so that they may be forearmed against the misinformation that they are sure to believe if they know nothing else, or nothing better to believe. Tell them the truth so that instead of being pitifully ignorant they are beautifully innocent.

First Impressions.

The first things children hear are the ones that are most apt to stay with them. Whether they are true or untrue, they will color for your children the facts they learn later. If untrue, they sometimes set up inhibitions or repulsions that hamper girls and boys all their lives. If true, such knowledge will help them to walk through the world free and understanding and make it possible for them to shed the often unpleasant misinformation that may come their way. If they hear the truth from you in the way they should, then your children will be able to understand the simple actual facts and to realize the alchemy of nature—to see it as the combination of a master mechanic and a master magician that it is.

Answer Their Questions.

Unless your boy and girl are different from most children they will begin asking you questions of all sorts very, very young. Answer those questions truthfully. If you do, they will ask you another and another from time to time and, if you answer, gradually they will build up a conception of life, an understanding of their bodies and of the reproduction of life that will be a great spiritual possession to them. It will be a bulwark of truth. It will fit sex into the pattern of life as naturally as sleep and sun and food and play and all the bodily functions fit into it.

But if you do not answer these questions, if you evade them, if you put them off, if you tell them they're too young to know this or too young to know that, they'll stop coming to you for information. Then they'll do one of several other things. Either they'll ask some one not equipped to tell them, or if they're not inquiring they'll ask no one, but will glean casually from time to time misinformation from other children. Or they will not gain much knowledge until they grow up and then the fact of these natural things will come to them as a shock. It is not an uncommon experience. I suppose, for instance, we have all heard older women say that many girls of their generation were married without the faintest conception of what the marriage relatiion meant. Ignorance of vital matters wasn't limited to those times.

In our day there are many families in which not a word passes between mothers and daughters and fathers and sons, or mothers and sons and fathers and daughters, of the important fundamental things of life.

Your Own Children.

If, at the present moment, your children are babies or nearly so, you are lucky because you can begin at the beginning and they will take all you have to tell them as they take everything else you give them—as a matter of course. If your children are older and you have never talked with them on these subjects—begin now. If you've brought children into the world there should be nothing under heaven that you cannot discuss with them—nothing should be a barrier between you. More than that, it is your duty to come close to them—as close to them spiritually as you were close to them in body when they were born.

None of this is mere theory that I am talking. It is proven, workable practice. I have not only seen it successfully carried out among the fathers and mothers and children of some of my friends, but I know from my own experience. It has been revealing, absorbing, to watch my boy through the years as he has heard the answers to his questions—the intense but everyday interest occasionally touched with wonder with which he has accepted the natural facts of life.

So I say again and again—get there first—forearm your children with truth.

(Another Sunday article will follow this one on the same subject.)

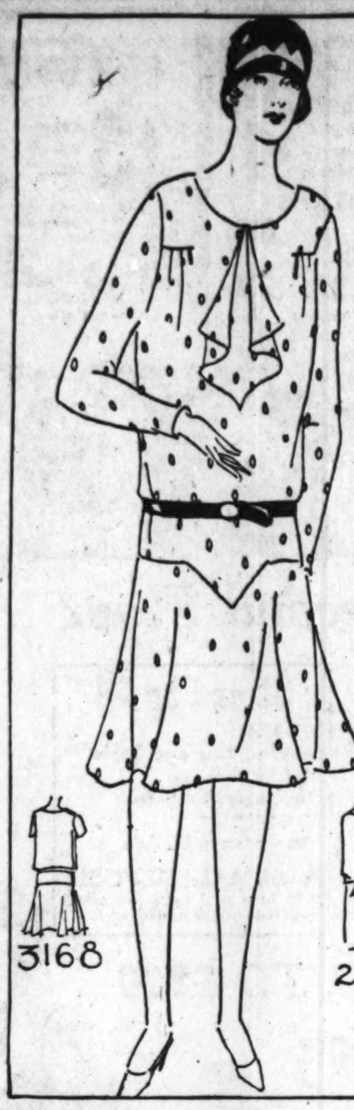
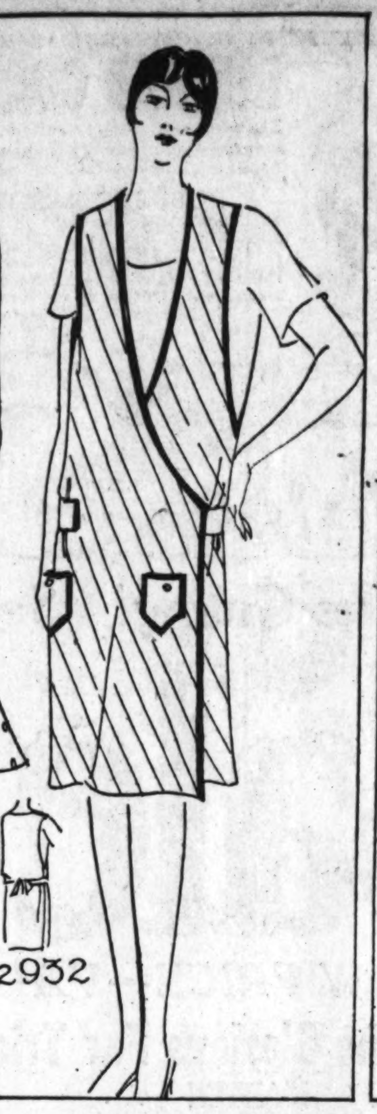
Patterns by Clotilde

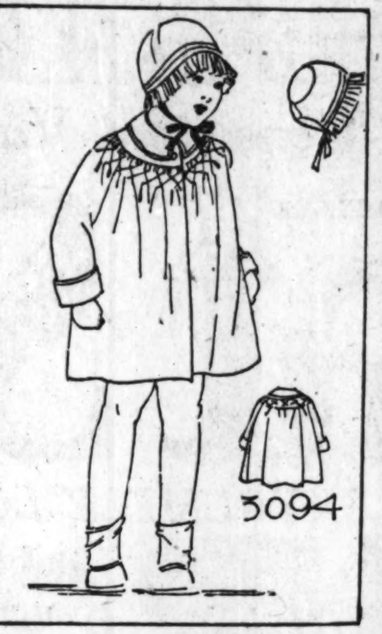
Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.; Copyright, 1927, by The Chicago Tribune.



3168—Woman's and miss' dresses. Sizes 16 and 18 years and 36, 38, 40 and 42 inches bust measure. Size 36 requires 3⅜ yards of 40 inch material.



2932—Woman's and miss' aprons. Sizes 16 and 18 years and 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44 inches bust measure. Size 36 requires 3¾ yards of 36 inch material with 7 yards of binding.



3094—Child's coat and hat. Sizes ½, 1 and 2 years. The 1 year size requires 1⅝ yards of 40 inch material with 1½ yards of 40 inch lining.

HOW TO USE THE PATTERNS

A BECOMING, youthful slenderizing type of apron is shown in patern No. 2932. It entirely covers the dress, assuring perfect protection. The armholes are deep and comfortable, and there are two roomy patch pockets. This apron is made with reversible fronts, closing in surplice fashion, and having a narrow belt attached at either side of the front, and tying snugly in a bow in the back, holding the apron close to the dress at the waistline.

Blocked gingham, figured percale, plain or printed sateen and cotton pongee are attractive and practical materials for aprons. If this is made of a solid color, choose a contrasting shade for the binding. Or if a printed material is used choose some color used in the printed design for the binding.

There are many times when getting dinner that it is a convenience to dress before the meal, and with an apron like this to slip on over a nice frock no one need be worried about hurting it.

I imagine many mothers will be delighted to have a pattern of a baby's coat and bonnet like No. 3094. Kasha, cashmere or satin are any of the suitable materials and the directions that come with the pattern are so clear that there shouldn't be any difficulty in making them.

The coat is cut with a little round yoke that is seamed on the shoulders. And to this the coat is shirred or smocked. The full length, one piece sleeves are finished with rather deep, turned back cuffs, and the neck has a small, flat round collar. Crêpe is a favorite lining material, and choose a good quality of crêpe de chine, having it the same color as the coat, or a lighter shade of the same color.

The small bonnet or hat can be made of the coat material, and the strings will be pretty if you hemstitch the hems.

Pattern No. 3168 is for a delightful model featuring a collarless, round neckline completed with a cascading jabot, and an intriguing rippling skirt with circular fullness in the back as well as the front. The bodice part of this pretty dress is decidedly long waisted, and has an unusual line across the bottom in the front. Fullness is let in at either side of the armholes on the front, simulating a yoke.

The pattern provides for long or short sleeves, and the entire dress can be made without any trimming other than the finish at the neck, sleeve edges, the bottom of the skirt, and where skirt and waist are joined. The jabot may be made of the dress material and have picoted edges, and you no doubt will be able to find exactly the sort of narrow belt to wear with the dress. There never was a greater variety than the shops show today.

Crêpe de chine, faille crêpe, printed velveteen, wool crêpe and supple woolens are chosen by the smartly dressed woman for this style of dress.

Answers to Love Queries

By Doris Blake

Too Young to Be Steady.

"Dear Miss Blake: I am 20 years of age and go around steadily with a fellow 19. I care for this fellow but feel he is too young for me. MARIE."

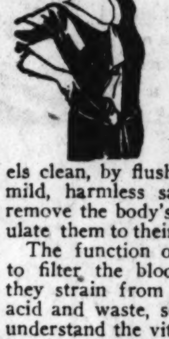
He's too young for a "steady," Marie. His mind isn't settled, and his tastes are likely to change any minute, so you don't want to depend upon him entirely for your good times.

Date Breaker.

"Dear Miss Blake: I go with a young man who has broken several dates with me. Should I keep on going with him? BLUE EYES."

Having allowed him to break dates before, you can't expect he will be particular about keeping them in the future. 'Twould be better to find another beau.

IF BACK HURTS FLUSH KIDNEYS



When your kidneys hurt and your back feels sore, don't get scared and proceed to load your stomach with a lot of drugs that excite the kidneys and irritate the entire urinary tract. Keep your kidneys clean like you keep your bowels clean, by flushing them with a mild, harmless salts which helps remove the body's waste and stimulate them to their normal activity.

The function of the kidneys is to filter the blood. In 24 hours they strain from it 500 grains of acid and waste, so we can readily understand the vital importance of keeping the kidneys active.

Drink lots of good water—you can't drink too much; also get from any pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts. Take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning for a few days and your kidneys may then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help clean and stimulate clogged kidneys; also to neutralize the acids in the system so they are no longer a source of irritation, thus often relieving bladder weakness.

Jads Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to help keep their kidneys clean and active. Try this; also keep up the water drinking, and no doubt you will wonder what became of your kidney trouble and backache.

Eats Pork and Beans, Cucumbers—Sleeps Just Fine—No Gas

THREE PEOPLE out of every four are afraid to eat many of the foods they like. They know that if they do they are sure to suffer from gas, sourness or indigestion. Yet, as in the case of Mr. Brooks, this condition can often be overcome.

"Gas on the stomach and nervousness made it impossible for me to do anything but worry. I always felt bloated—nights I couldn't sleep. All this has been changed since taking Adlerika. I eat anything I want now—things like pork and beans, cucumbers and fried onions. My nervousness is gone and I sleep better. I sure can recommend Adlerika."—Geo. C. Brooks, Knoxville, Tenn.

Quick Action Surprises

AS GENTLY and naturally as taking a drink of water, Adlerika acts upon BOTH upper and lower bowels, bringing immediate relief from gas bloating, intestinal stasis and chronic constipation.

The very FIRST dose of Adlerika often brings out astonishing amounts of old waste matter from the intestinal canal. This poisonous matter may have been in the intestines a long time, causing gas, headache, sleeplessness and many other symptoms. A treatment of a few weeks with Adlerika often corrects chronic constipation and intestinal stasis, so that just a small dose, now and then, keeps the intestines and stomach in a most satisfactory condition.

What Doctors Say

DR. H. LOUIS SHOUB, B. Sc., well-known New York pathologist, after laboratory tests on living subjects, states: "Adlerika very markedly reduces the number of bacteria and colon bacilli. This feature increases the therapeutic value of Adlerika, because, in addition to its intestinal cleansing action, it inhibits the growth of these intestinal bacteria."

Dr. A. J. Lancaster, a physician of over a quarter century's active experience, makes this statement: "In the treatment of gastro-intestinal disorders, (where thorough evacuation is indicated), Adlerika has no equal."

Dr. Carl Weschcke, a graduate of the world-famous medical University of Heidelberg, Germany, in his private practice, first perfected the intestinal cleanser and carminative now known as Adlerika. It is a compound of a specially processed saline intestinal evacuant with buckthorn and cascara, together with glycerine and other ingredients which expel gas and have detergent action.

Adlerika, unlike most other medicines, acts upon BOTH upper and lower bowels. It is recognized by many physicians as the one dependable remedy for gas, intestinal stasis and chronic constipation, or whenever real intestinal cleansing is needed.

Even if your bowels move every day, Adlerika may surprise you by bringing out poisonous, gas-forming matter which you would never believe was in your system.

In just a single month, over one thousand men and women wrote that they obtained wonderful relief from even a short treatment with Adlerika. Many of them said that now, after all other treatments and medicines had failed, they are at last rid of gas, indigestion, sour stomach, sleeplessness, nervousness or other trouble due in their cases to intestinal stasis. And now, these folks say, they are again able to eat and enjoy the foods they like.

No matter what you have tried for the bowels and stomach, Adlerika will surprise you.

HIST! HERE'S SOME FOREIGN PROPAGANDA FOR OUR MAYOR

British Fashions Rule Our Men Folk, While Milady Looks to Paris

But There's Hope, The Price Is Always In American Dollars

BY GENEVIEVE FORBES HERRICK.

IF Mayor Thompson and "Sport" Herrmann, and the others ever have that big bonfire of school books alleged to be hostile to the spirit of America First, they would do well to buy another box of matches, and to touch off a really big display of fireworks, not of text books, but of fashion magazines and advertisements. There is propaganda, indeed, in pants and perfumes, in cold creams and creamy cravats; propaganda for men and for women.

THE BRITISH INFLUENCE

King George, the sly dressmaker, wields a lot of influence over the way the really smart American man's pants are held up. He is a force to be reckoned with when it comes to clever cravats and aristocratic gloves. And, while few local hostesses can persuade their butlers to squeeze their calves into silk stockings and knee breeches, still no American butler worthy of his hire would dare look like anything save his English cousin. That's for the men. When it comes to women, the French costumer, and hair dresser and perfumer, push King George back on his throne and take over the field. O, Italy, Spain and the orient come in for their cut on publicity, but it's small. The royal road to style is still Bond street and the Rue de la Paix.

THE GENTLEMAN'S HAT

Don't let the mayor and his committee know about it. But here's what we learned by just the most casual investigation:

There is a picture of an exciting American football game. A pretty young man, well in the foreground, is wearing a Derby [and be sure that you pronounce the "e" as if it were "a"]. The legend beneath the picture informs us that "even at the most brilliant pageants of the year, a gentleman's hat will claim your attention." Such an arresting piece of headgear is fashioned, of course, by a London hat man.

Then there is a message for the men who are "Tuxedo conscious," whatever that may be. A splendid line of thoroughly Tory vestings and facings are recommended. The background of the picture is a jolly English club.

And how is this for a bit of stylish sedition, if that's what you wish to call it? We quote it verbatim:

"Topcoats that carry a bit of Britain with them wherever they go and as long as they last. And haberdashery, remarkably well chosen and moderately priced, that reminds you of the shops at Oxford."

If that be treason, make the most of it. Then there is that new coat for men christened deliberately "Mayfair."

GOD SAVE OUR BUTLERS

So simple and guileless an implement as a shaving brush may, in the opinion of our city fathers, be an insidious instrument of British propaganda. At least one firm I know suggests "Christmas gifts for new world shavers from old world master brush makers" and has the temerity to advertise "best British brushes."

It is when it comes to the picturization of butlers that American scouts find material abundantly at hand. There he is, perfect for afternoon—black cloth coat and a double-breasted vest, dark gray striped worsted trousers—correct in every detail.

There he is, in the next picture, perfect for evening—dress coat, regulation vest and trousers to match of black dress worsted in the "conventional cloth and cut for butler's evening dress."

Nor does youth escape. What chance, the mayor will doubtless argue, has a little Chicago child against the influence of a pair of correct little British children smiling complacently from the printed page and directing us to the paragraph beneath. The paragraph goes something like this:

"With such children for inspiration, London fashions for the outdoors reach heights of smartness never quite equaled anywhere else. Here are two examples. A fine wool jersey play frock, straight from the afternoon convocations of nurses and prams in Kensington gardens, and a tweed coat which in its glowing British quality is a veritable breath of Bond street."

TRAITOROUS WORDS

Underline those words — "play frock," "prams," "Kensington gardens," "glowing British quality," and "a veritable breath of Bond street."

Yes, a bonfire of English topcoats and British galluses and the literature solemnly describing them would be a mammoth thing. But right next to it our city censor would have another rubbish heap labeled, possibly, French propaganda. And it would be piled high with perfume bottles, cold cream jars, hair curling fluids, lipsticks, and bath salts containers. The lake level could be raised a monstrous number of inches, even feet, if all the perfume that is said to be Parisian were to be poured into patriotic Lake Michigan.

Why, the adjectives alone that pile up in the announcements of French beauty unguents would fill a telephone book for a city the size, say, of Evanston.

.A BIT THICK — EH WHAT BILL?

IT'S "LA PARFUM"

Here, again, my investigation was casual, and, of course, quite unofficial. In the first place, let us look at perfume, if that isn't a too badly mixed metaphor.

Never, never say "perfume." It is always "Le Parfum"; its particular name is always in French, written in italics, and with the English translation, in brackets, following immediately. It never comes in a bottle, always in a "flacon," and again the italics.

Then there are the descriptive words, adjectives and nouns, sprinkled about so lavishly. There is "allure" and "subtle." There is "naïve" and "sophisticated." And, inevitably and everlastingly, there is "mystery," sometimes spelled "mystere," just to make it more so. Here's one example from so many:

A house of fragrance remarks: "Observing the pageant of loveliness at its Parisian source, 'Abracadabra' company interprets it in smart parfums, and with authoritative artistry this parfumeur has devised three individual odeurs." You can surely guess what the English of "parfums," "parfumeur," and "odeurs" must be, can't you?

A of this enchanting trio is booked as a thrilling fragrance which holds the very essence of the joy of life.

B is the "fresh, eager fragrance of the country after a soft spring rain. It speaks of the promise of youth."

And C is a "glorious bouquet with just a bit of mystery to make it more alluring."

RAVISHING BEAUTIES

And on occasion, the lure may be international, but with little emphasis on Plymouth Rock or the drainage canal. One brand of perfume announces a new odor. We'll call it "On the Go," because that is not its name.

"This fragrance possesses the exquisite charm, the modern feeling of those who are no longer at home on one continent, but roam over the whole world as the impulse takes them. 'On the Go' recalls so many pleasant places and charming people, going over to Paris for new frocks, motoring through shadowy English lanes, flying through the clouds to a country house party. 'On The Go' has an intangible vitality that appeals anew each time one takes the stopper from the French bottle."

Chicago historians may turn their attention from George the Third, to another "third," Napoleon this time. For a certain brand of foreign face cream for local faces announces that "the ravishing beauties of the social and professional world, in Europe, from the time of the third Napoleon, have had Creme So and So in their poudreuses."

If you wish "dramatic eyes," look to France.

Lingerie is said to "charm with a true Parisian accent, with an accent as unmistakably Parisian as if you had bought it on the Rue de la Paix."

A famous dress designer boasts that he gives "sophistication a new twist" in a quintet of models, "rich, alluring and symbolic of enchanting Paris."

ONE BIT OF SOLACE

And so it went, in this quite unofficial and volunteer investigation of mine. English cravats and French eyebrow pencils; London gaiters and Paris perfumes; British brushes and continental cosmetics.

Throughout the gloom of French phrases in italics, and British phrases in capitals I found one bit of solace for the sons and daughters of the Fathers of the American Revolution.

The price is always printed in terms of the American dollars.

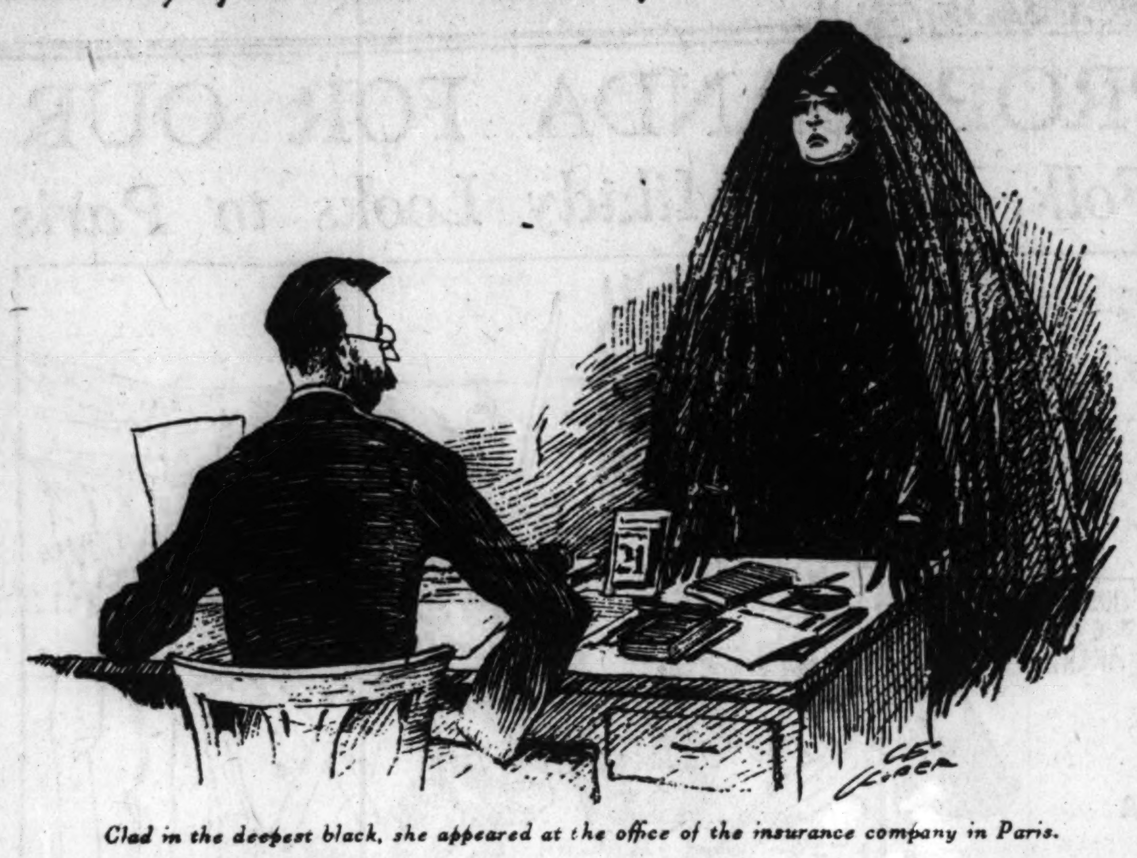
A SLEUTH AND A MYSTERY COFFIN

Another True Story of the Master Detectives of Scotland Yard

Culture Matches Wits With a Man Who Says He's Dead

By George Dilnot.

[Foremost authority on Scotland Yard.]



Clad in the deepest black, she appeared at the office of the insurance company in Paris.

THERE is no doubt that Nathaniel Druscovich ultimately made a fool of himself. He allowed himself to become the tool of a gang of crooks and he paid the penalty. That is a matter of police history with which I have little to do here. The catastrophe of his career was his own fault, but it should not be permitted to obscure the merits of one who in his own day showed many of the qualities of a master detective.

At the time of which I am writing Druscovich was the pet of Scotland Yard, a man of whom much was expected. He had a reputation for quick witted intelligence and resource that had been earned in some remarkable cases. He stood out among his colleagues for the reason that he was a man of culture and education. In those days Scotland Yard men, however effective they may have been, were of a rougher, cruder type than those of today.

A dapper man, something of a fop in dress, was Druscovich, with an extensive knowledge equally of foreign languages and foreign criminals. Nearly every continental case that reached Scotland Yard was passed on to him, and he usually handled them with competence and ingenuity.

PORTLY AND PROSPEROUS

Properly I should have begun this story not with Druscovich but with M. Vital Douat, portly and prosperous, and owner of apparently one of the most flourishing wine businesses in Bordeaux.

He and Mme. Douat, as plump and shrewd as her husband, lived, in a manner becoming the dignity of a great merchant, in a magnificent villa on the outskirts of the town. They entertained on a grandiose scale, and, as you will have perceived, were not least among the citizens of a great city. There may have been malicious tongues, but pouf! any successful man is open to the scandal of the envious. Such people were beneath the contempt of a prince of commerce.

It was strange that a prudent, far-seeing man, such as M. Douat was held to be, should have neglected one obvious safeguard for the benefit of his devoted wife until he reached middle age. The cares of business and of social life were heavy. He was to be forgiven if he had forgotten to insure his life.

INSURED FOR $25,000

He recognized the injustice in time. The point was no sooner brought to his mind than he traveled to Paris and opened negotiations with one of the biggest insurance companies in France. With a touch of pomposity he explained who he was and presented introductions. He proposed, if arrangements could be satisfactorily made, to take out a life policy for a sum that in these days would be represented by between $25,000 and $35,000 in United States money.

So impressive was his demeanor that the insurance company smoothed the way for him and, after a medical examination, he paid the first premium and returned to Bordeaux with the policy in his pocket. With a devotion that was only natural he confided the document to his wife.

Shortly after this it became a matter of comment in certain circles in Bordeaux that all was not well with the affairs of M. Douat. He carried his head as high as ever, but there were firms who felt they had been a little incautious. They had extended credit to the limit with the plausible Douat and they thought it was time he should show the color of his money. The wine merchant airily waved these things aside and pushed in several more large orders. These were not accepted and it was made evident something would have to be done about the cash question.

WIDOW'S WEEDS

At this crisis M. Douat took a plunge that has been the resource of lesser men. He went bankrupt.

Odd to relate, his misfortunes did not arouse the sympathy of his many acquaintances. There were not wanting slanderers who hinted Douat had not made a bad thing out of his bankruptcy and that he still had a well filled stocking stowed away somewhere.

So persistent was this story that the authorities began to pry into it. M. Douat resented the slur on his good faith. He shook the dust of Bordeaux from his feet, embraced his dear wife—they could not prove any fraud against her—and departed unostentatiously to London to make a fresh start in the world.

Mme. Douat, thus left alone, bore up uncommonly well. She had lost no weight when, clad in the deepest black, she appeared at the office of the insurance company in Paris and, with tears in her expressive eyes, announced the death of her husband. Her grief had not affected the most complete and business-like precautions. She had, in order and ready for the strictest inspector, all the documents of proof of the death of Vital Douat. Her story was complete in every detail.

AFTER THE CASH

When he had gone to London he had taken mean lodgings at a little house in Ann street, Plaistow. There on Nov. 29 he had died of aneurism of the heart. Here was a certificate from the medical man who had attended him. Here was another certificate from the registrar of deaths. Here was a receipt for the burial fees at St. Patrick's cemetery. The widow ventured to presume that these things were only formalities. No doubt the money would be paid over at an early date.

An urbane official spread his hands in a bland gesture.

"We shall be happy to expedite a settlement by every means in our power," he said. "If you will leave these documents with me the matter shall be put in hand at once."

"How long will it take?" demanded the business-like madam.

He lifted his shoulders. "I cannot say. There is a routine—a method—in these matters. It may be a week—ten days. When we are satisfied."

Mme. Douat caught him up quickly. "When you are satisfied! What more do you want? Surely these papers show without doubt that my husband is dead?"

OVERPLAYS HER HAND

This was the point at which Mme. Douat went perhaps a fraction too far. The official was struck. Why should she be so extraordinarily eager? There was something in her manner as well as in her words that made an impression on his mind. It was not altogether usual for a grief stricken widow, hard upon the death of her husband, to come quite so completely prepared with formal proofs as this lady. The thing might be entirely straightforward, but it would bear looking at.

He put a few polite but searching questions to the woman, and her replies determined him that it would be well to withhold the money until a great deal more was known about the dead man and about her. After all, only one premium had been paid on a comparatively big life insurance.

So, at last, he dismissed her, and an emissary was dispatched down to Bordeaux to learn something about the couple. On his report a great light was borne upon the company. The coincidence of life insurance, fraudulent bankruptcy, flight and death was far too extraordinary. When the lady renewed her demands with threats of legal intervention unless the claim was immediately settled she was met with a refusal framed in terms not quite so polite as before.

HOW TO PROVE IT?

But, however suspicious the circumstances might appear, the company officials knew that unless they could prove a swindle they would sooner or later have to pay. So they consulted a high official of the Service de Surete—the French detective force—who informed them Douat already was wanted for the fraudulent bankruptcy affair. It was believed Douat really had gone to London. The detective said he would ask Scotland Yard to look into the matter.

So it was that the papers ultimately were passed over to Druscovich.

"It's a funny business," said Williamson, the superintendent. "See what you can make of it."

"If these certificates are authentic," observed the other, "this man should be dead and buried."

"The insurance company is inclined to think that the death happened at a very convenient time for the lady," remarked Williamson, and Druscovich nodded.

ON THE TRAIL

The Surete had ascertained the date and the boat on which Douat was believed to have sailed, but there was no record of any one of that name having arrived in England. Druscovich studied a passenger list and made precise inquiries of the manner and appearance of each person. He struck the names out until only one was left. That was a gentleman who called himself Signor Roberti.

By all accounts Roberti was a jovial, fat Frenchman. No one knew who he was or where he had gone to after landing. The detective inclined to a strong impression that Roberti could be no other than the bankrupt fugitive.

Druscovich went to have a look at the house in Ann street, Plaistow, which had been given as the place of death. It proved to be a dingy workman's dwelling, which a weather-worn notice board proclaimed to be to let. The landlord was easy to find and was quite willing to tell all he knew.

DEATH OF A FRIEND

"There was a foreign gentleman took the place a few weeks ago," he said. "Called himself Bernardi. He couldn't speak English very well but, as far as I could understand him, he was a waiter or something like that, and he wanted a place where he could stay and look after a sick friend. References? No, he gave me no references. He did better than that. He paid a month's rent down, and that was good enough for me."

"Did you see anything of his friend?" asked Druscovich, casually.

The landlord stroked his chin. "No. Can't say I did. Struck me as funny at the time. He hadn't been there a day or two when he told me his friend had died. There was something wrong with his heart. Bernardi gave him a grand funeral—it took place on a Sunday—but he never came back to Ann street again. I reckon he didn't care to stay in a place where his pal had died."

Some hours Druscovich spent in chatting to other inhabitants of Ann street. It became plain that Bernardi was the jovial Roberti of the boat. But in Ann street he had kept close to his rooms and had scarcely spoken to any one. No one had seen his friend, nor had a doctor been noticed calling at the house. Druscovich began to consider the possibility that he had stumbled on a case of murder.

FORGERY

He already had assured himself of one thing. If the death certificate was a forgery it had not been written by either Douat or Mme. Douat. The signature was hard to decipher and there was no address. After close examination he read the name as "Critti." The reference books showing there was a doctor of that name, Druscovich called upon him. The doctor examined with a puzzled face the sheet of paper he was supposed to have signed.

"This is certainly a forgery," he declared. "It is not in the least like my writing and there is no attempt at imitation. I have never known a man named Vital Douat, and I have certainly never attended a patient at Plaistow. I know nothing at all about it."

[Copyright: 1927.]

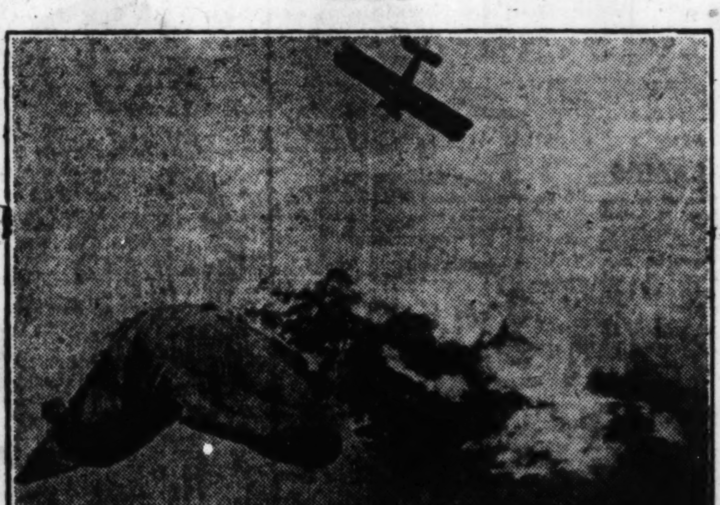
(Druscovich found Douat's coffin and caused it to be reopened. What he found there and how the criminal finally was run to earth will be related in the Metropolitan section next Sunday.)

TURNING THE TABLES.

He had bored her to distraction with his continual talk about himself. At last he produced an album of photographs and showed her a portrait of himself as a small boy upon his father's knee. The girl saw her chance, and took it.

"Who, she inquired sweetly, "is the ventriloquist?"—London Tit-Bits.

WINGS

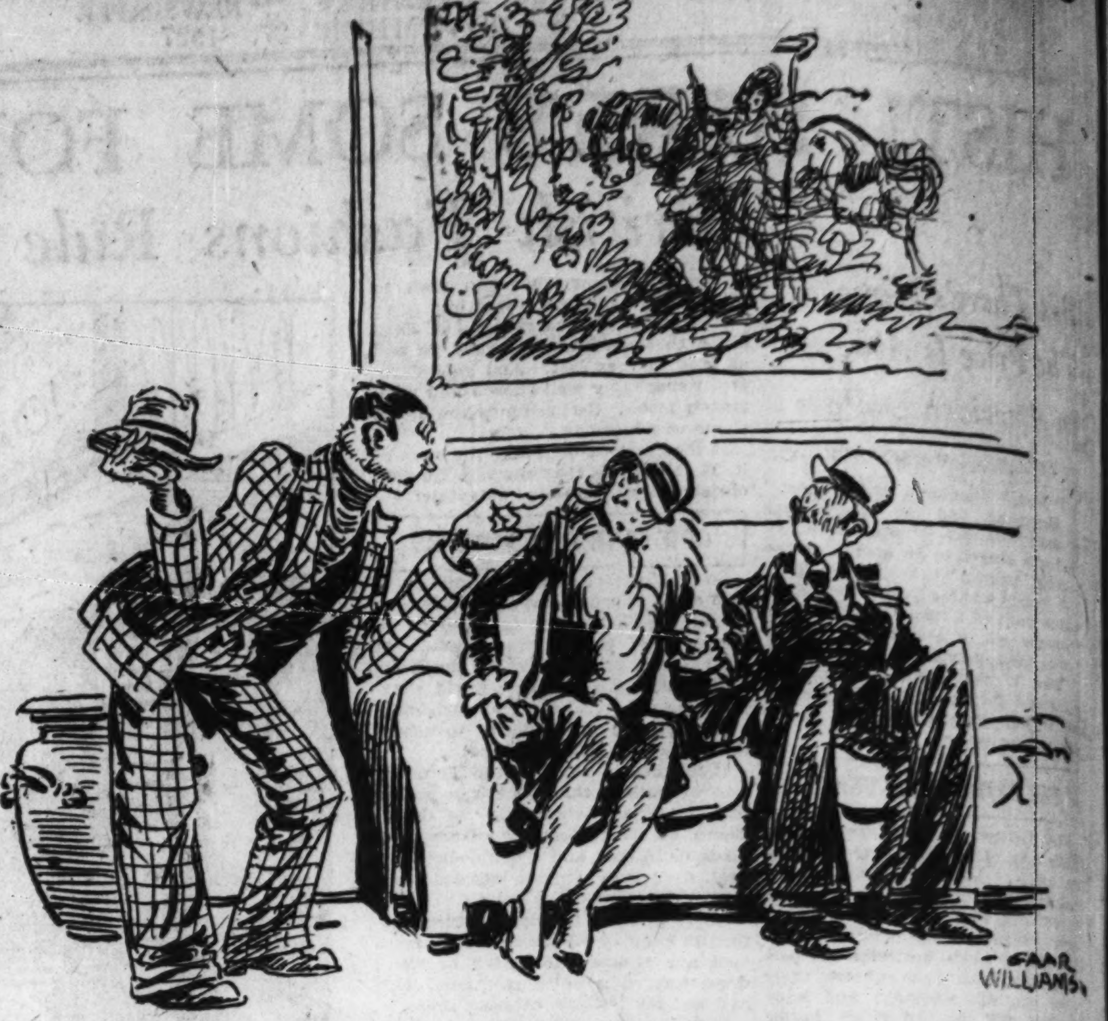


ENEMIES MEET! Balloon and airplane! And this happens! The scene is from one of the heart-stopping air battles in "Wings," which is thrilling the crowds at the Erlanger theater.

HOLLERAN YELL AND YOUNG INSULTS

Uncouthness Doesn't Pay

By Westbrook Pegler.



"Did you ever try sour milk on that mole?"

WHEN I was the manager of Young Insults I used to work my brains out at all hours of the day and night getting him out of predicaments, as he was always going around cracking insulting remarks at people in a very uncouth way and every time he would do this it would cause a predicament as these people would become insulted.

One day I introduced him to my loving helpmeet and instead of asserting "I am pleased to meet you, lady," he asserted, "Did you ever try sour milk on that mole?"

Another day when we were discussing business matters with a well to do millionaire, who was going to promote a battle of the century between my bum and another sportsman, my bum looked at a picture on the millionaire's desk and inquired, "Is that your helpmeet?"

"Yes," asserted the millionaire, "that is my helpmeet," and my bum stated, "With your dough I could do better."

HOW'S THE GANDER?

Another time I took him to an exclusive society mansion to box an exhibition contest in the ballroom before some refined society leaders and after the exhibition, they invited us to eat some repast. So while we were eating our repast, Young Insults turned to a refined society leader and inquired, "How is the gander?"

"What do you mean, gander?" inquired the society leader, so I explained in a cultured way that he meant, "How is your husband?"

"O," stated the society leader, "he has gone away," and of course, by this she meant that her gander was deceased, as the refined way of stating that a party is deceased is to state they have gone away. But my bum was not familiar with these customs and he thought this exclusive matron meant something else.

"Well," he stated, very uncouthly, "if I had as much funds as you have got I would certainly get him paroled."

FUN MISUNDERSTOOD

This kind of ignorant conduct made it very difficult for me to manage Young Insults. Some times he would insult officers of the law and they would put him under glass, as the slang expression goes, so I would have to wear out my brains all night long obtaining a bondsman and in the morning I would have to pay a lawyer the sum of $25 or $50 to tell the judge that my bum was just a playful, high spirited athlete and how his exhibitions in the roped arena were helping little boys to grow up with a love for self reliance, fair play and good citizenship.

Then I would have to spend some more funds for a doctor because usually the police officer would continue the good natured tussle with my boy after he got the handcuffs on him and got him in the cage and this often caused little injuries, such as a slight fracture of the skull, or the loss of a few teeth.

Whenever I would put Young Insults into the squared circle for a contest he would insult his adversary. He would smile politely, but it seemed that he could not learn anything about tactfulness, so his adversaries would always become insulted. Sometimes he would grab his adversary around their neck and whisper in their ear, "Well, I see that your loving helpmeet was running around with a bookmaker while you were fighting over in Scranton." Or, he might remark, "I hear your old mother is going to the poorhouse. That is too bad."

This would irritate this adversary and they would fling science to the windows so the contest would disintegrate into a disgusting mockery on the art of self defense, with my gentleman remaining cool and pasting the other bum in a very skillful way.

WHERE IGNORANCE IS SMART

"Why are you always cracking insults at your adversary?" I used to inquire of my bum.

"O," he would say, "I suppose it is because I am just an urchin from the dregs of a big city and do not know any better because I am ignorant."

"Well," I would continue, "why don't you take up refinement?"

"Because," he would assert, "I am too smart."

And then he would crack some insulting comment about me, and his favorite insult was to call my nose a gin lily, which was the same thing as accusing me of using too much stimulant.

In time my gentleman became famous for his clever insults and other pugilists refused to box with him, knowing that he would insult them and cause them to fling science to the windows and get pasted on their kisser. So I would sit around my favorite relaxing resort, relaxing for days at a time, trying to get up enough energy to think up some scheme to get him a contest to earn some resources. But every time I would approach some gentleman for a contest with their bum they would say, "My dear sir, we will fight your bum when he loses his voice so he cannot insult my fine, clean living, sensitive sportsman."

"YOU, TOO, JUDGE?"

It was impossible to meet him without being insulted more or less. One morning when he was in court the judge asked if he was intoxicated the night before and he replied, "You and me, both."

Thirty days later when I called for him at the jailhouse I was greatly cheered to learn that he had a very bad cold from sleeping without any blankets because he insulted the keeper and he could not speak because he had lost his voice.

"Well," I remarked brightly, "you can't insult anybody just now so I will obtain a contest for you at once because I have been sucking my paw for thirty days and I am practically in the hands of the receivers without any bum to earn funds for me."

So I obtained a contest with a prominent young bum by the name of Emil Evil, assuring his manager that my gentleman was entirely dumb from this cold and could not crack any insults. But when I informed Young Insults about this affair he took a piece of paper and wrote: "Send for Prof. Lorenzo, the tattooing artist, as I wish to be tattooed."

Thinking this was just some boyish whim, I got the professor and he brought his needles and ink and a lot of designs, such as butterflies and schooners and lodge emblems.

"What about a nice rock of ages on your chest," the professor suggested. My bum shook his head and wrote on paper:

"No rock of ages. Tattoo on my chest, 'I am fighting a bum,' in red and blue letters six inches high."

It took a couple of days for the tattooing to dry out, but in the meantime his cold became so bad that I called the doctor who used to sew up his head when he would get arrested.

"You have a bad case of bronco trouble and I will have to stick a pulling plaster on your chest," asserted the doctor, and with that he pasted the pulling plaster right over the tattooing.

My bum wrote on the paper, "That is fine, as we will leave the plaster in place until I enter the squared circle and then we will pull it off and unveil this tattooed insult to my adversary."

But, my dear sir, when we entered the squared circle, our adversary's manager did not give us a chance to unveil the tattooing, as he grabbed the referee by the arm, walked over to our corner and said, "That plaster will have to come off, as it's against the rules."

So he reached out and gave the plaster a yank, but it stuck so hard that when it came off it took away part of the tattooing. And the word that came off on the plaster was the middle word so that instead of reading "I am fighting a bum," the tattooing asserted: "I am a bum."

Well, the patrons of the manly art began shouting "Insults is a bum," and Emil Evil finally spelled out the sign, too, and began remarking 'Insults is a bum."

The result was very unfortunate, because my stiff lost his temper, threw science to the windows and was knocked into a state of unconsciousness. So ever since then I have been careful to avoid insulting people, as my bum was a sad example of how a man can carry the habit to such extremes that he will let fly with a terrific insult and find that he is insulting himself the worst of all.

Queen Victoria Ate Rapidly; Guests Hard Pressed

LONDON.—(AP)—Queen Victoria was such a rapid eater that her guests had to speed up to keep their plates from being snatched away from them before they were half finished.

This fact is revealed in Lord Ribblesdale's "Impressions and Memoirs," which has just been published under the authorization of his daughter, Lady Wilson.

Queen Marie of Roumania, bears a resemblance to her distinguished grandmother in this respect. Guests at the royal board in Bucharest have the same race the late Lord Ribblesdale says.

Of course royalty is served first and gets started on its food ahead of humble guests, and royal servants are such stricklers for form that every one has to stop eating when the ranking member of the royal family has finished a course.

RED HOT NEWS.

By W. M. Schwimmer.

If the king of Gigglebania
Has water on the knee,
If the queen of Humty-Dumty
gets the pip;
If the prince of Hicklesnifter
Has the slightest malady—
Merely stricken by a light attack of grippe—

Then the radio starts humming
With this flashing, smashing news,
And the papers bring out extras
With exclusive interviews;
For the world is waiting breathless
Though fresh tidings will avow—
That his majesty just stubbed his toe
And there's no danger now.

NEW SCANDAL

If I set a golfing record
Or inherited a mint,
If a two ton truck would iron out
my face;
You can bet your striped pajamas
I would not break into print,
These events would not fill up an inch of space.

For I'm not of much importance
In this consequential sphere,
And few people really care enough
To follow my career;
But I do not lack publicity,
I'll freely tell you that
My smallest act is red hot news
When published in my flat!

Hungary Has Most, Greece Boasts Least, Self-Killings

BERLIN.—(AP)—Germany enviously eyes Greece, the land without suicides.

The number of self-killings in Germany has increased, even compared with the rate during the post-war inflation period, according to the latest statistics. Stabilization of the nation's currency has not lessened individual financial distress, the principal cause of voluntary death. In 1925 there were 15,273 deaths compared with 13,149 in 1923, the height of the inflation period.

With an annual suicide rate of 2.3 to every 10,000 persons, Germany comes third after Hungary, with 2.7 and Czecho-Slovakia, with 2.6. Switzerland and Austria follow close on Germany, with 2.4 suicides out of every 10,000 inhabitants.

At the better end, Greece leads with only two suicides to every 100,000, or less than one-tenth the number in Germany. Other favorable rates are: Ireland, 3 to 100,000; Spain, 4; Lithuania, 5; and Italy, 9. The figure for Ireland is for the Irish Free State. In north Ireland there are exactly twice as many self-murders, or 6 to every 100,000 inhabitants.

Sweden, with 14 suicides to every 100,000 unit, has more than double the rate in Norway, where there are 6.

Statistics show that the southern European coutries have a smaller suicide rate than the northern, with the exception of Ireland.

Three London Hotels Started by Ex-Butlers

LONDON.—(AP)—Three of London's famous hotels owe their beginning to the ingenuity of ex-butlers who started on a shoestring.

Claridge's, patronized by royalty, is the best known of these. The queen of Norway has been staying at Claridge's recently, and during their last visit to London the king and queen of Spain also occupied the royal suite. William Claridge, retiring from service as a butler in 1850, bought with his savings Mivart's, a modest hostelry in Brook street, Mayfair, and this ultimately developed in Claridge's hotel.

Thomas' hotel, Berkeley square, was opened by a former butler of that name.

Bailey prospered, became proprietor another. Bailey's wife was a lady's maid, and assisted her husband and aided in making the name of the hotel well known to the traveling public. Bailey prospered, became proprietor of several hotels, owner of an estate in Essex, a home in Eaton square, and years ago sat in parliament as a Tory M. P. for Walworth.

REVERSED.

The sergeant paused on his nightly round and prodded the sleeping policeman. "What, asleep again?" he growled. "Can it be the force of habit?" "No, sir," answered the weary constable, "it's just a habit of the force."

British Jack Tars Now Jack Spratts

LONDON.—(AP)—British Jack Tars have become Jack Spratts. They complain there has been too much fat in their food.

The anti-fat movement started among the lower deck ratings of the navy and spread all over the ships. The grievance was that the navy rations of fresh meat contained too much fat and not enough lean, and that grease was used too freely in cooking.

Their lordships of the admiralty, after investigation, agreed with them.

Orders have gone out that Jack the Sailor must be satisfied, but, to keep peace in the navy family, the sea cooks are to be allowed to use a certain amount of fats for frying.

Even Burglars Favor Tipping

LONDON.—(AP)—The tipping evil has become so intolerable in England that even burglars are victims of its abuse.

Two boys saw a pair of burglars as they left a London house with a nice load of swag. Shaking with fright at being witnesses to such an event, the lads politely asked the housebreakers if they had been stealing apples.

The thieves handed the boys sixpence and hustled away before an alarm was given.

Brickbats and Bouquets.

The other evening mother and I were going to a movie. We met my girl friend. She is 17 years old and not the least bit pretty.

Mother told her she had a pretty hat on. She replied: "O, yes, it seems like all hats look nice on me. In fact I think my clothes all look nice on me. Don't you?"

We answered yes. After we left her mother said: "She doesn't throw bouquets at herself, does she?"

Pride Goeth Before a Snap.

An acquaintance of mine went to the circus to see her daughter ride a horse, on which she could perform many amusing stunts. The girl acted splendidly, and Mrs. S. went out into the ring to congratulate her. She stretched to kiss her when the strap from her petticoats snapped. She didn't notice it and was astonished when the crowd started to applaud. Then she walked out, proud of herself and her daughter.

A Precocious Co-ed.

Speaking of big heads, I think of my little girl of five and a half years tops them all.

I told her brother, aged eight, that if he wasn't careful his sister would catch up to him in school. Hearing this, Eleanor came across with this:

"Bernard better be careful, 'cause when I start school I'm going to be so smart I'll be in college and Bernard will be back in kindergarten."

Powder Puff Thrown Out of Court

BERLIN. — (AP) — That lipsticks, powder puffs, and combs do not conform with the dignity of a courtroom was the noteworthy decision reached by the Berlin district judge, Dr. Wesenberg.

During a trial the judge noticed that one of the spectators, after having taken off her hat, started to powder her face and use her lipstick with avidity, finishing up by combing out her bob.

Shaking with wrath, the judge interrupted the proceedings and peremptorily ordered the lady to leave the room "for such unbefitting behavior in the dignified precincts of the court."

AND NOW THE DUKE TALKS TURKEY

Resorts to Strategy to Make the Day a Real Thanksgiving

By Duke Bakrak.

TO men, all Thanksgiving days in tha past have been about ten degrees less than minus. Last Thursday was one what I cood actually call plus additional. The reason was that me and tha B. and C. and tha kids ate by ourselves. This meant that if you wanted all white meat you didn' get a piece of neck and a piece of tha Mama's mind.

Seems that, as long as I can remember, are family has been the goat for free eats. The funny part of it is that every friend or relation who ever parked their dogs under our table had more money in one vest pocket than we had in tha bank. I've always had a sneaking hunch that the first thing a certain guy did when he got home was to put 7 or 8 bucks in the old sock and say to himself, "Duke, you're the berries, three more invitations from you and another two flat building is ours." I'm not mentioning any names, but if I ever find out that this same Charley Nelson is the stiff that puts the slugs in our baby's bank,, I'm gonna accuse him openly.

KAYOED BY THE B. & C.

The annual debate entitled "Whose gonna get invited this year" was duly held two weeks ago. Our esteemed chairman, Mrs. Bakrak, presided. Tha chairman agreed that Mrs. Bakrak wood take tha affirmative and Mrs. Bakrak tha negative. The judges were Mrs. Bakrak. Ten minutes for opening remarks and five minutes for rebuttal were allowed each side. Mrs. Bakrak spoke thirty minutes. It seemed to me that tha contest was fairly even, but tha judges decided Mrs. Bakrak was tha victor.

Reading of tha minutes of last year's meeting was continually being interrupted by the male members present. He was immediately told to button up his siren. After tha sargent at arms [whose office really calls for every light duties] took tha hound around tha block, filled four milk bottles, hung out the ice card, wound up the clock, and wrapped up tha dirty clothes for tha laundry tha meeting was adjourned at eleven P. M.

The following day I got to thinking that I'd be damned if I wood be Santy-Claus to a pack of hungry wolves and starving hyenas every year. The more I thought of it the madder I got, and that night I called a special meeting of the board. Two of tha directors nearly got into a fist fight. After I got tha floor my argument was to tha effect that when my dad figured I was a man, he'd put long pants on me and as long as I was tha only member present being dressed that way it was up to me to prove the ole gent's trust. After this brilliant bit of repartee, she's got tha nerve to tell me that if she hadn't of married me I woodn' have any pants at all. To which I replys that I yet got to see a naked batchelor.

"IT'S MY TREAT"

Last year, between tha second and third helping, Cousin Emily pulls the old bologny, "Next Thanksgiving you all hafta come to our house." At this remark Aunt Minnie pulls a phony peeve and says, "Not on your life. I insist upon doing the honors." This calls for a argument by my mother-in-law, who says, "If you don't let us throw tha dinner we will never speak to any of youse again."

Now my argument to tha B. and C. is that if her memory was as long as her tongue, she'd kinda hint around a little and see if any of those toreadors were still in tha bull-throwing business and whether they meant what they said or not. Her answer is that before she wood throw a hint she wood see them all in hell and if they ever ate on us again I cood hitch up tha car and dump her in a nut house.

This being a victory in my favor, we proceeded to lay out a family bill of fare and I even went so far as to say that I'd get enough bucks together to pay for tha turkey so as she woodn' hafta touch her house money. Last Wednesday night our kitchen smelt like a rose garden. There was mince pie in the oven, turkey stuffing in tha making, tha kids were cracking nuts, tha B. and C. was singing a song, something about "I'm forever bubbles blowing," and I was stretched out on tha sofa thinking how swell it was gonna be not to get up in tha morning, when all of a sudden tha telephone rings. I answered it and it ain't nobody else but Cousin Emily. After tha conversation was ended I felt a real he guy and tha Mama was grinning her head off.

SIZZLING WIRES

Here's tha dirt:

"Lo."

"Lo Duke, how's a family?"

"Fine, how's it by you?"

"Awright."

"We was wondering wy ya didn't call earlyer."

"How come?"

"Cause we wanna know what time is yer eats."

"Whad eats?"

"Ain't we turkeying with youse ta marro?"

"Not that I know about."

"Well, ats funny."

"You must got yer dates mixed."

"Didn' you say at are house last year that next year we all gotta come to your house?"

"Well maybe I did."

"Well whadda ya kickin' about, ain't we comin'?"

"W-we-well I-I-I y-yo-you s-se-see ah-ah."

"Cut tha static. If we ain't invited juss say so."

"Can't cha lissen a minit?"

"Hell, no; if yer crawfishin' I gotta beat it out quick and see if I kin still get a turkey. Goo by."

"Don't be mad on us Duke."

"Goo by and goo nite."

To make tha stuff go big I hang up tha receiver with a helova slam.

O, MIN!

Two minutes later I call up Aunt Minnie and pull the same line of chatter on her and end up by telling her it looks like we gotta have chops as it's too late to get a bird, also that tha next time she hands out invitations we're gonna insist on her putting it in writing. She also begs us not to be mad, and with that I also slip her a receiver bang.

The next on tha list was tha ma-in-law, and what I don't tell her is a shame. Not having any too much love for this trouble shooter, I end tha talk by telling her that tha next time she puts her dogs in our kennel it wood hafta be over my dead body.

Now that they think we're all mad there's no chance of them dropping in for a visit Thursday night, and I want to tell you that I think tha day is properly named Thanksgiving when relations are conspickuous by their absence.

You shood of seen us wreck our bird. Tha kids coodn' hear tha radio on account their ears was full of cranberry. When tha mince pie was brought on everybody slowed up on tha potatoes. Even tha pooch of ares got himself a belly ache.

After dinner all tha members of The Royal Order of tha Holy Knife and Fork mooched into tha parler and took a sofa snooze. At night we all went to see a swell funny picture at tha local movie.

REAPING THE HARVEST

From a future financial standpoint, my handling tha whole affair tha way I did brings us splendid returns. Between Friday morning and Saturday night we received three invitations as follows:

Cousin Emily—Dinner a week from Sunday.

Aunt Minnie—Christmas dinner.

Tha Ma-in-law—New Year's dinner.

Nevertheless, tha invites being verbal I had Gerty Muldoon, our office stenog. acknowledge receipt of them, had Horwitz (tha celebrated Notary Public) put on his seal and for safety's sake, I kept a carbon copy.

This coming year tha guest room is gonna be a kids' playroom. Tha guest towels are gonna be used by tha family and there's gonna be a sign hung on tha door that reads, THIS FREE LUNCH COUNTER PADLOCKED FOR ONE YEAR.

P. S.—When we put up our own two flat, I might coax tha B. and C. to run a surprise party on her. The kind where everybody brings part of tha lunch.

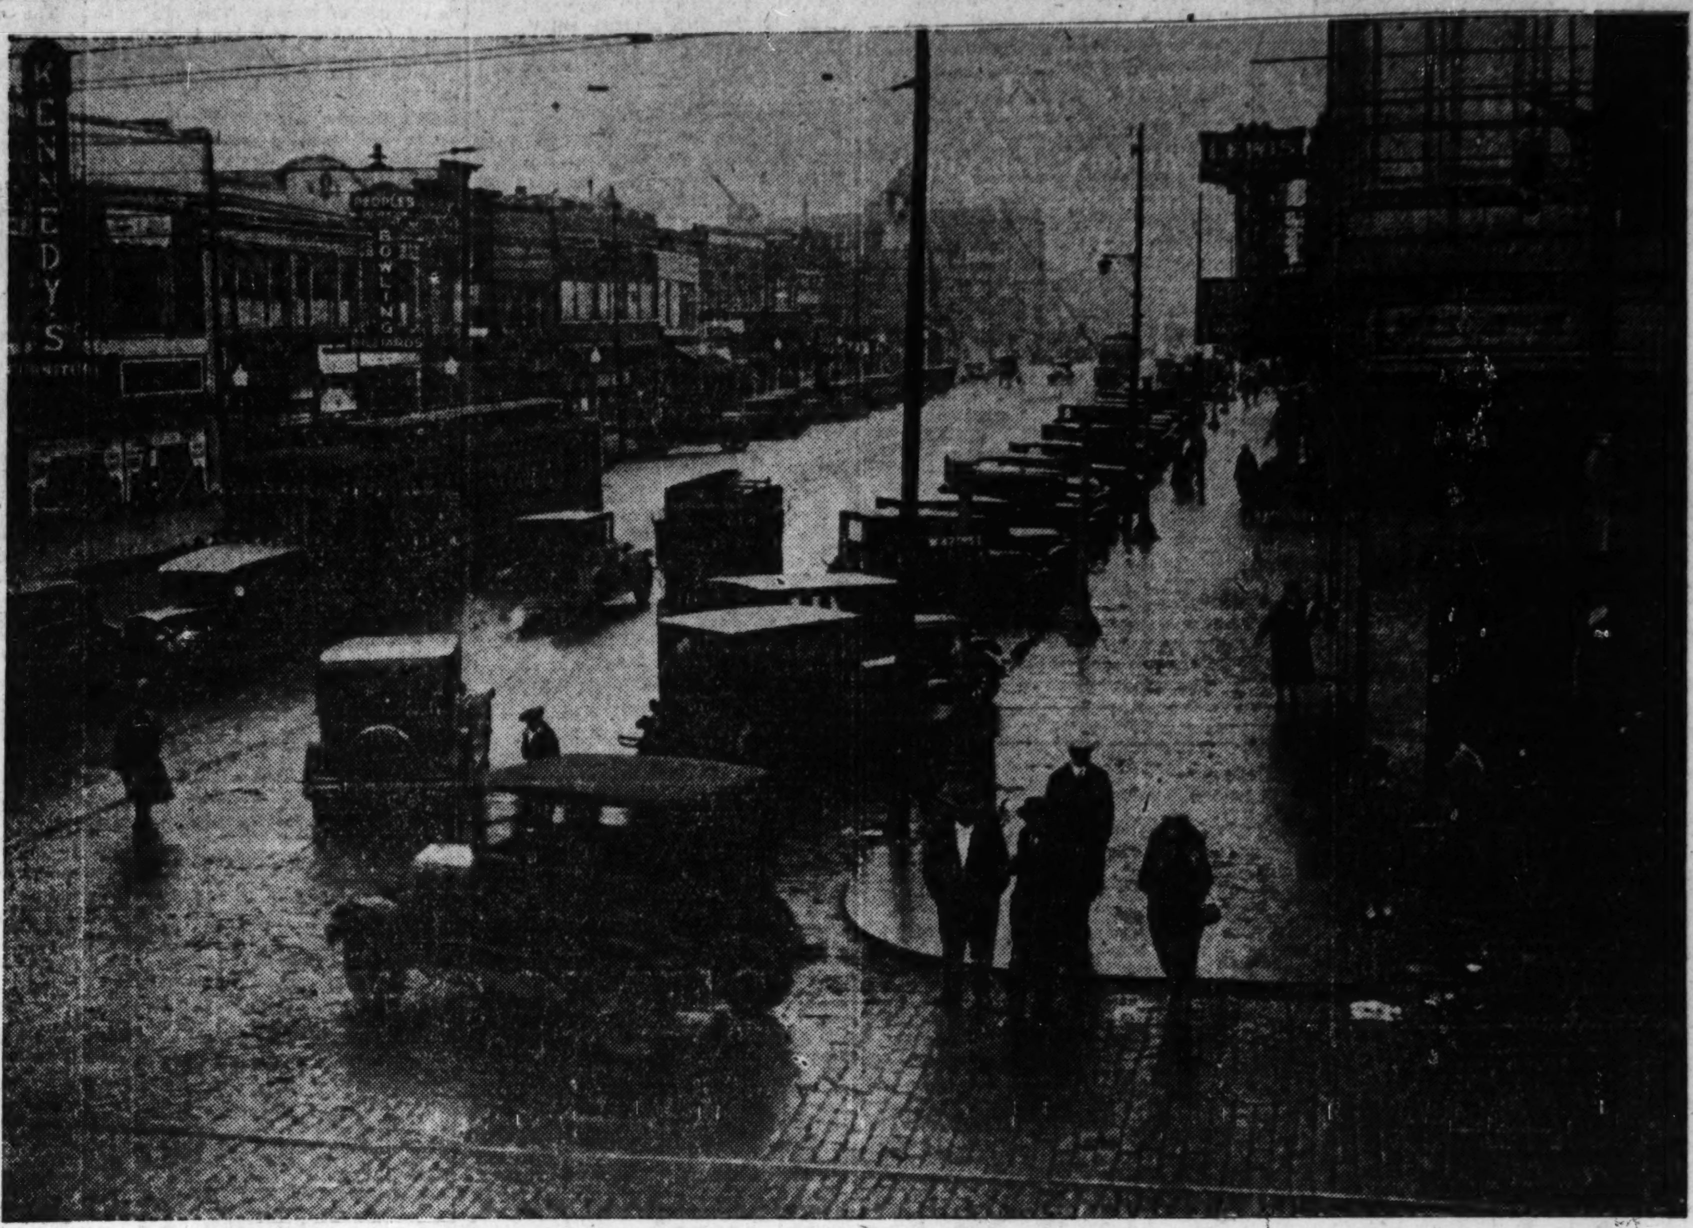
Ex-President Fights Country in Court

PARIS.—(AP)—A former president of France has, in the course of his professional duties as a lawyer, been put in the unusual position of pleading against his own country.

Alexandre Millerand, engaged by the Roumanian government as one of its lawyers in pleading a case submitted by the league of nations to the International court at The Hague, now finds himself legally fighting his native land, for France has associated itself with England and Italy in opposing the Roumanian thesis.

These nations maintain the competence of the European Danubian commission extends to Braila, while Roumania says it extends only to Galatz.

ANOTHER "BATTLE OF THE NEIGHBORHOODS"—



HOW DID CHICAGO'S "SOUTHWEST CENTER" WIN DOMINANCE?

FIFTEEN or twenty years ago, a visitor to the district "back o' the yards" would have found an old world settlement. Its 75,000 inhabitants were old world people with old world ideas. He would have been greeted by a babble of foreign tongues. Little shops lined the dark, unpaved streets—and small, shabby frame houses.

Long hours of toil in the yards left the people of Packingtown little time to think of progress. The idea of fighting for commercial independence never occurred to them.

They Learned to Fight . . . .

Then came the war. The younger generation responded by the thousands along with others from every part of Chicago. They learned new ideas and new ideals. They caught the spirit of competition and learned to fight. And they tasted victory. They were Americans.

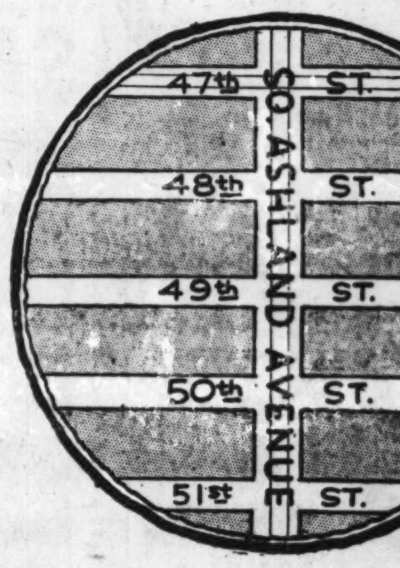
They Fought . . . .

These thousands returned determined to fight for their district, as they had fought for America. They were no longer satisfied to work for meager wages. They learned skilled trades and they earned real money. Their standard of living changed.

Streets were widened and brightly lighted. Shabby little shops were replaced with modern store buildings. Merchants learned modern merchandising methods; they went out after business and they advertised.

And They Won! . . . .

Just as superior forces won on the battlefield, so superior merchandising methods and aggressive advertising win in the field of business.



The "Battle of the Neighborhoods" is an eternal fight for commercial existence. Other merchants in other neighborhoods are constantly trying to win your trade from you. Only by vigorous merchandising and advertising can you build and maintain supremacy. One of the best examples of this is Chicago's "Southwest Center"—South Ashland avenue from Forty-seventh to Fifty-first streets. From a population of about 75,000 a few years ago, it has grown to more than 350,000 today.

Mr. James J. Pesicka, President of the Depositors State Bank, says: "Where one bank was sufficient for the $4,000,000 savings then, 85,000 depositors now have more than $24,000,000 in four banks and nearly $8,000,000 in building and loan associations."

There are three large theaters and a small modern hotel.

The corner of Forty-seventh and Ashland, which sold 12 years ago for $42,000, is worth more than $300,000 today. The entire district bustles with activity. It is prosperous, progressive, alive.

A Powerful Ally . . . .

The merchants of Southwest Center use the most powerful selling force in Chicago—the same business-building medium that has helped bring success to many other prominent, prosperous sections of Chicago.

The Chicago Tribune, long the choice of Chicago's greatest stores, now makes it possible for outlying merchants to insure continued prosperity for themselves and their neighborhoods. Through the Metropolitan Sections of The Sunday Tribune, neighborhood merchants can now buy coverage of their own part of the city only, at a rate they can easily afford.

Each part of the Metropolitan Section reaches approximately a quarter of a million families and is sold at about one-third the rate charged for full Tribune circulation.

Mr. H. C. Laycock, President of the Peoples Stock Yards State Bank at Forty-seventh and Ashland, says: "The Tribune's Metropolitan Section has been a wonderful help in the development of our Southwest Center. It gives our merchants the advantage of The Tribune's reader interest and prestige, its great sales-producing power and its thorough coverage of our district, at a rate they can well afford. It is a big thing for them and for the entire district."

Mr. Laycock is a banker; he is a friend and a business counselor to the merchants of this district. They come to him for advice and help on business and personal matters. He knows their problems and their ambitions.

The Southwest Center Associated Advertisers are the outstanding merchants of their district. They use The Tribune consistently. They know The Tribune reaches the best families in their district. They find The Metropolitan Section enables them to cover their trading area economically and thoroughly.

Competition has never been keener than today. Other merchants and other sections are making a strong bid for the business you now enjoy. The surest way to maintain and increase your present prosperity is advertising—Tribune advertising. Chicago's most successful outlying merchants will tell you that The Metropolitan Section of The Sunday Tribune is the answer.

Phone Superior 0100 and ask a Tribune man for complete information and rates.

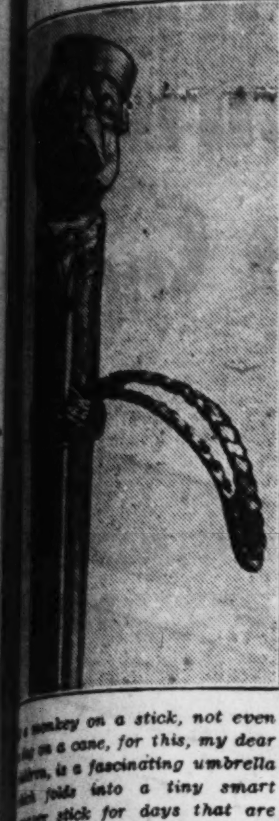
NOVELTIES IN THE CHICAGO SHOPS



monkey on a stick, not even on a cane, for this, my dear children, is a fascinating umbrella which folds into a tiny smart dapper stick for days that are undecided. The handle, as you see, is amusingly carved to represent a wise old dog.

I wonder where the rest of Cinderella's shoes are, for these surely are her diamond studded silver heels. The design of the flower and the stripe is black, which makes the diamonds all the more brilliant. The heels are wooden.

No, my dear children, this is not a picture for the nursery wall. It is a hatpin of enamel and brilliants, destined to brighten some small untrimmed chapeau.

Alas for love in summer!
Cupid has no chance.
Summer resort meetings
Scare away romance.

O, yes, love is avowed,
That we know, no doubt.
But when we're on a fortnight frolic
Dan is not about.

I have met my dream man,
And I'd marry him tomorrow.
But it's been a summer affair.
Am I, too, doomed to sorrow?

He's a handsome fool, of course,
And, as a talker, witty;
But tell me, can it be he has
A wifie in the city?

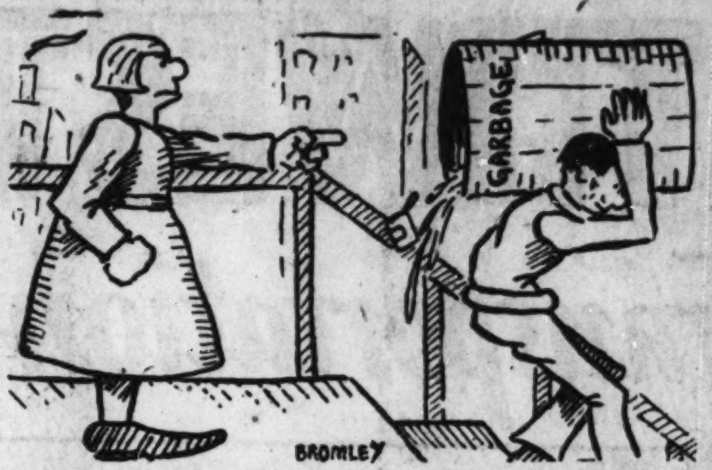
SNOWSHOE'S PERSONAL APPEARANCE

Well, I Guess That Maybe Clothes Do Make the Man

By Snowshoe Al.



"LISTEN to me, you goofy lookin' hobo!" says my dear wife the other morning. "Just because you stay home all day an' wrestle with a typewriter is no reason why you should neglect your personal appearance which, by the way, is bad enough at its best. You've been wearing that same shirt for five days!"

"What about it?" howls me. "It still has all the buttons on it and there ain't no holes in it, so why is all the grief, huh?"

"I could sling a snappy answer at you," says her, "but I fear it would go over your head, an' I am not in the mood to cast any pearls in your direction unless it's necessary. However, I would like to know when you intend to shave. You ain't pulled a razor across that pan of yours for at least four days, an' you are beginning to look like a landscape. Beat it into the bathroom an' scrape the foliage off your mug before some mushrooms commence to spring up. If a rabbit ever saw your face he would mistake it for a field of clover."

A CLOSE SHAVE

"I don't feel like shaving this morning," says I; "anyhow, I am not going any place, so what difference does it make how I look?"

"Shame on you for taking such a lopsided view of the matter," says her; "you should always try to look nice, because you never know when some people might drop in to visit us. Wouldn't you feel embarrassed if somebody should ring the doorbell right now?"

"You're damn right I would!" says I; "I would have to tell him to wait a couple more weeks for his money."

"Furthermore," says her, "it's about time you got those pants pressed, as they contain more wrinkles than a prune's overcoat. Also, I wish you would quit wearing that dirty, old, ornery looking sweater! It's so full of holes that when you wear it on the street people will mistake you for a piece of Swiss cheese on parade."

"Get it all out of your system, kid," says I, "so you won't have to start over again in the morning."

"An' another thing!" squawks her; "you seem to spend most of your time around this joint making the poor little canary bird take a bath instead of taking one yourself."

HUSBAND DESERTION

"What about it?" says me; "you never heard of a piano mover playing a piano, did you?"

"Lay off the dumb remarks an' go disguise yourself as a human being," says she. "Fool yourself! Pretend you are going to a masquerade an' wash your face so people won't recognize yuh."

"Nix," says me, "that's out! This is a free country (???? Hurray!) and although it may have a few crippled laws such as 'Thou shalt not let us catch thee drinking' and 'Thou art not allowed to murder cake-eaters' and et cetera, thank God there ain't no rules like 'Thou must crawl into a clean shirt every day' or 'Get thee into the bathroom and mow down them whiskers.' As long as I don't have to go down town I will dress the way I please, and I can't help it if some people think I look like a Knight of the Road."

"Well, you can rest assured they won't think you look like a Knight of the Bath," snorts my Hindrance; "good-by, I'm goin' to town. You better stay off the streets or the dogs will be running you up and down the alleys."

4 BLOCKS EQUALS 2 MILES

After she had went, I decided maybe I should take a walk, because the doctor told me I should stroll at least two miles per day for exercise whether I liked it or not, otherwise I might grab myself an acute attack of fallen arches, or double-jointed indigestion, or some such contagious disease, so I starts out to walk four blocks, because in this town, you know, four blocks equals two miles. I discovered this interesting fact by watching taxicab meters what ring up ten cents every half mile. Five thousand two hundred and eighty feet equal 13½ miles unless the chauffeur happens to accidentally bump the meter with his elbow, in which case you get thrown for an additional loss which equals the distance between Detroit's five yard line and New Orleans' goal post, allowing for detours by way of San Antonio. Well, as I started to say before, I put on my ornery looking old sweater, slung a dirty cap over one ear, and went outside.

We live in a big new court building which is one block long. It contains 136 apartments and the 136 apartments contain 135 radios. (Mine is already ordered, but somebody's Credit Dept. is evidently still trying to decide whether or not I can be relied upon to come across with "three dollars per week, plus a small carrying charge, plus 6 per cent interest on overdue payments.") Funny thing about them 135 radios: they are always all tuned in on the same football game, so I can usually walk back and forth the entire length of the building without ever missing a single play.

SECOND STORY ARTIST

As soon as I got downstairs I prepares to take my walk and listen to the football battle at the same time, but was prevented from doing so because some dame sticks her nose out of a window on the second floor and squawks:

"You come right up here this minute! I've been looking for you."

"All right, lady," says I, wondering what it was all about, as I never steal any milk or morning papers on the second floor, although I will admit that I have been tempted to do so at times, because the folks on the third floor often fool me by ordering buttermilk, which certainly tastes like hell in coffee.

I goes up and knocks on the door, and when she opened it she slips me a look which would freeze alcohol. This Minnehaha was built like an overstuffed hippopotamus, and consisted mostly of muscle. She looked like a cross between Strangler Lewis and any other three guys on earth. One look at this tough baby would make Gene Tunney shatter his own record for the 100 yard dash. She stares at me for one solid minute and I begins to feel like Daniel did when he was a week-end guest in the lions' bungalow. Then she opens her mug and separates herself from a half acre of verbal hell.

FIREPAN INTO FIRE

"What do you mean," she yells, "by not removing our garbage for the last two days? A fine janitor you are! For ten cents I would break you up an' scatter you to the four winds! You dirty loafer! Get out on the back porch an' remove that garbage right now!"

"But, lady," howls me, "I am not——"

"O, yes you are!" squawks her. "Don't tell me you're not going to do it, you dizzy lookin' bum! An' you're going to do it this very minute, or I'll use you to beat carpets with."

Well, I admit that maybe I was dressed kind of frowzy, but I never expected to be mistaken for a Boiler Room Rajah. I looks this female bruiser over and decides that a good way to commit suicide would be to argue with her, so I grabs the can of sweet smelling Odds and Ends and drags it down the back stairs. Then, to avoid any more monkey business of this nature, I beats it down the alley. Just as I crossed Thome Avenue a couple Flat-Foots nailed me.

COPPED BY A COP

"What are you doing in this neighborhood?" says one; "we've been watchin' you for three days! You look like a desperate character an' we have a dirty idea that you is planning to hold up that drug store on the corner! Hold still till we search youse."

"Control yourself," says I; "you've got me wrong! I'm a respectable author!"

"Youse is a liar," says the other bird; "I once saw a picture of an author, so youse can't get away with dat noise! Authors wear bow ties an' yellow gloves, an' dey all carry a cane. Listen, bum: Last Monday night somebody held up a grocery store in dis neighborhood. Where was you last Monday night?"

"Last Monday night I was down at the Hamilton club, bowling with some guys named Gere and Robinson and Jim Kennedy and 'Handy Andy' Anderson and——"

"Lay off dat racket," says he; "you couldn't even get in the back door of dat place."

"I was all dressed up that night. Honest, I was!" says I.

BACK ON THE JOB

They asked me where I lived and I told them, so they walks back through the alley with me to make sure I wasn't slinging them any mush. The big dame on the second floor was standing on the back porch looking around.

"Lady," says one of the coppers, "does this guy belong in this building?"

"He certainly does," says she; "send him up here! I've got something else for him to do."

So they chased me up to her apartment again and I had to fix a couple leaky faucets.

Yeh, I guess a guy really should take care of his personal appearance.

Swam Channel? Make Thermometer Prove Your Claim!

PARIS.—(AP)—A thermometer is being used as the test of truthfulness of those who say they swam the English channel.

Swimming experts in France generally agree that some of the France-to-England navigators could not possibly have stayed in the cold water as long as they said they did.

Both men and women swimmers in France have set the proper channel temperature at 70 degrees Fahrenheit, or even a little higher. When swimmers testify to having stayed many hours in water much colder, these experts say, there is something wrong.

The French long have regarded channel swim claims with considerable suspicion. They have become outspoken of late, and have mentioned names. They offer no proof that the various swimmers rode part way across on boats, but they say quite emphatically that no person can stay in 50 degree water for half a day, whether he is greased or not.

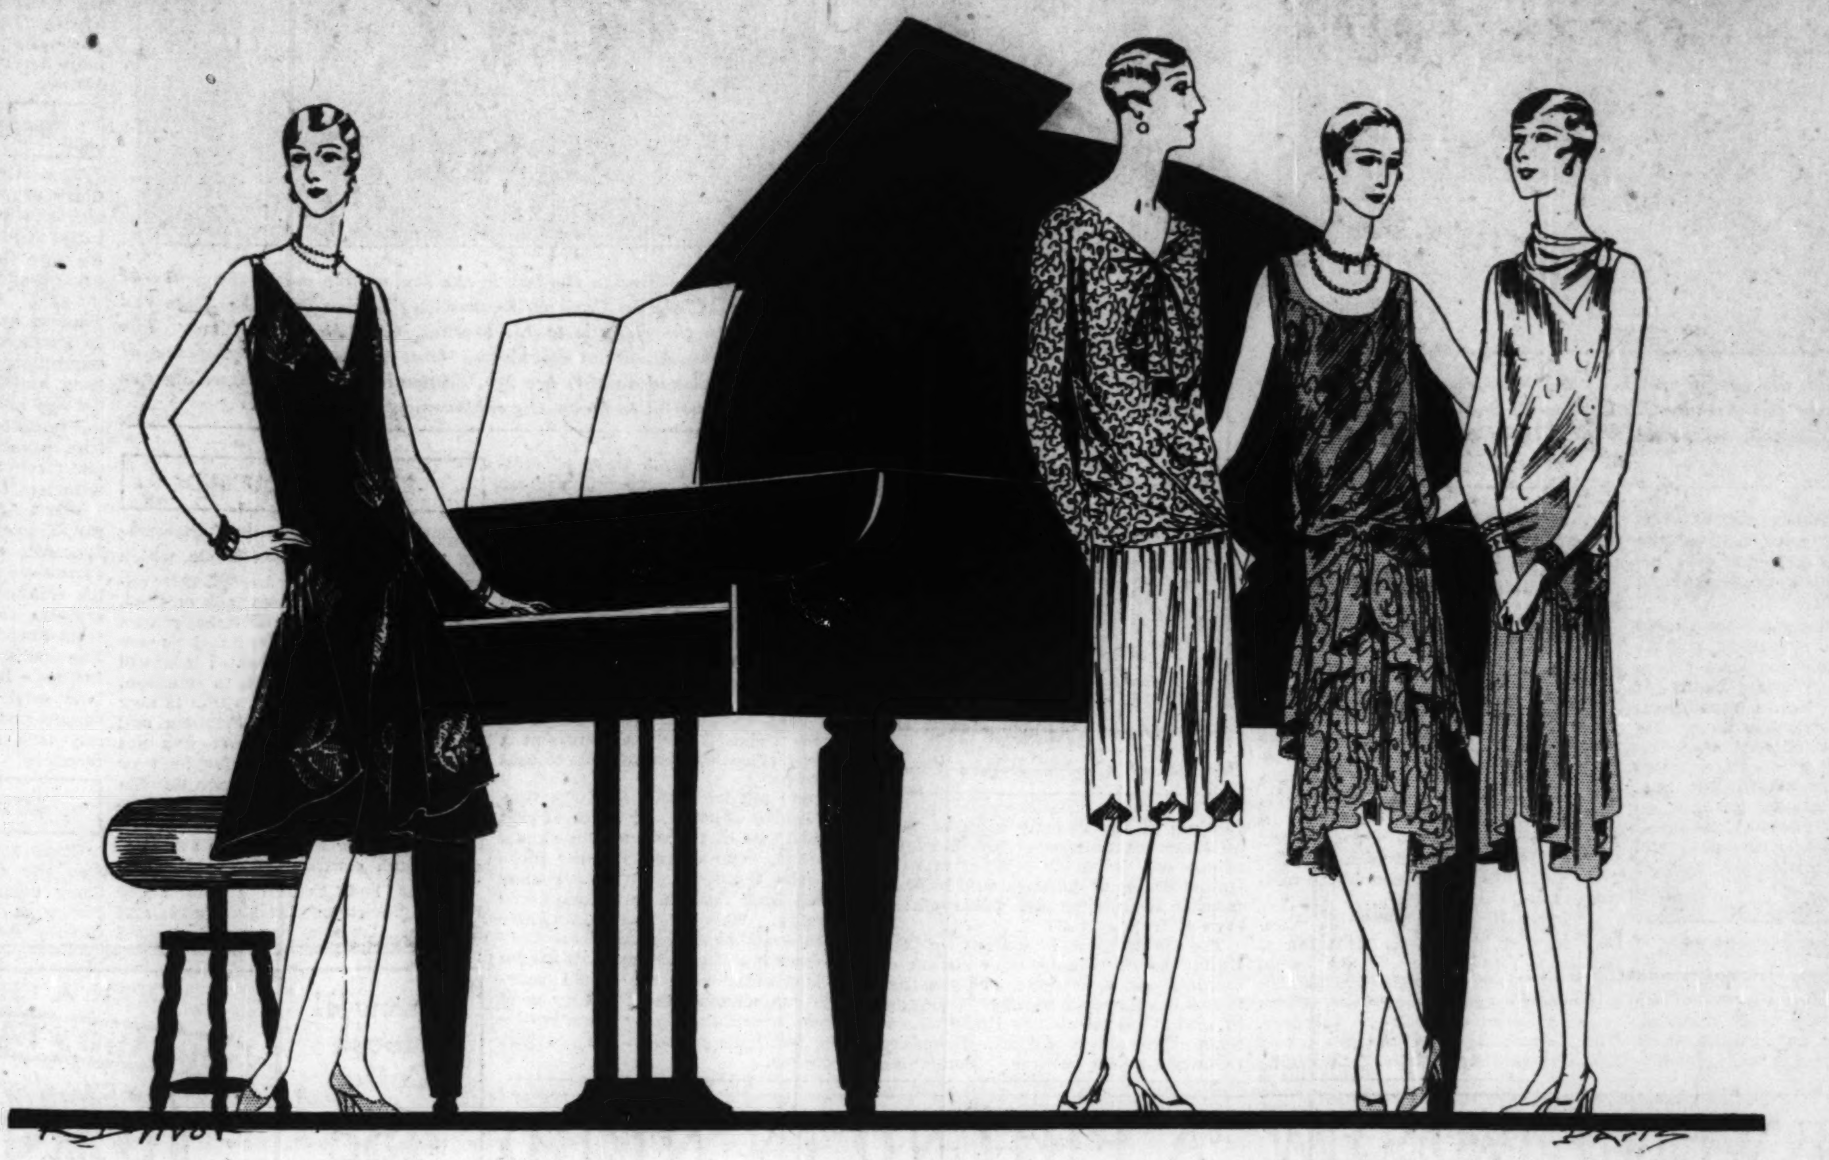
The Last Word in Paris Fashions

The Holiday Season Is Crowded With Dances. Here Are Frocks For the Afternoon Tea Dansant, And for the Formal Evening Ball.

BY BETTINA BEDWELL.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]



The bouffant dance dress, shown at the extreme left, has a new interpretation in this Cheruit model, made of black and silver taffeta.

Next, for the tea dansant, Suzanne Talbot has designed this long sleeved model with a lace blouse, draped and tied at the neck and on the left hip, and a skirt of cream georgette with a novel, uneven hemline.

Third, the dance frock of black lace is smart for many occasions and in many places. This Redfern model has a two-tiered skirt with a hemline longer in back than in front.

The dance dress, shown last, in two colors and two fabrics, is a Paris novelty. Louiseboulanger makes the blouse of pale pink lamé gauze and the skirt of dull blue velvet. A small gauze handkerchief is tied around the throat.

PARIS.—(Special Correspondence.)—In this epoch of specialists and specialties, fashions come in many divisions, each one a highly specialized part of the mode.

A good many women think that Fashion is one thing for all women, ladling out the healing tonic of style to pep up anemic chic. This is the cause of a great deal of the bad dressing that persists in spite of the constant and free education in the art of dress which is available to all women. We read, or hear, that something or other is the latest thing from Paris, and those who look on any style as a general practitioner, treating all cases in need of smart apparel, blithely imagine all they have to do is to get this "latest thing," whatever it is, and they are all set for the season. This procedure is exactly like taking aspirin for a broken arm because it was so beneficial to your headache the other day. The treatment does, at best, no good, and, at worst, a great deal of harm.

Fashion, every season, consists of many specialties produced by numerous specialists for particular women and their peculiar needs. There is no such thing as one fashion for all women. And if there were, how ridiculous most of us would look. It is only because of the extreme elasticity of styles, and the special adaptation to each one, that women can be as generally well dressed as they are today. Just as there are special modes of living, so there are particular styles suitable to them. And, going further, there are clothes for all of the pursuits of these many modes of life. The way to be "in style" is to be dressed according to the interpretation that fashion gives which is most suitable to your own environment and to the activities thereof. You yourself must be the analyst and determine to what section of the many sectioned styles of Paris you belong. That is so simple that any woman can do it without brain fag.

The next thing to do is to divide your day and evening into the number of varying parts any day is subject to, and choose your clothes for each of these parts. Your day may be one-third homework, one-third outside activities (such as shopping, teas, matinées, etc.), and one-third movies, dinners, dances, and so on. You will then need three types of costumes. And if you have more or less divisions, then you will want more or less varying costumes, to be smartly and appropriately frocked for each. Every woman should get busy and analyze her environment, following it up with this simple arithmetic of dividing her activities according to their clothes requirements. Then she is ready to choose her styles.

I have arranged four sketches today that are intended to give clothes ideas for one division which nowadays has a place in almost every woman's life. This is the subdivision given over to the dance. Since almost everybody dances, and since the times and places at and in which we step out to musical meter are many and varied, I have tried to make my selection of appropriate costumes cover as many as possible. Most of the dances that many of us go to are informal affairs, and some of them are in the afternoon, so that the character of the smart dance frock is often different from that of the true evening gown.

Such a dress is shown on our second figure. It is a frock designed especially for the dance by a Paris specialist in clothes creation. It is intended for thés dansants, restaurants, and other public places where jazz rhythm invites you to step out in public. Suzanne Talbot has made this dress with a soft blouse of ecru lace, having long sleeves and a draped yoke which ties in a big bow. The lower part of the bodice is pulled into folds, which are attached beneath a bow on the left hip. The skirt is made of cream colored georgette crêpe, shirred at the top and scalloped at the bottom. The shirred fullness is pressed into a series of columns which somewhat resemble plaits.

More formal is the Cheruit dance dress shown on our first figure at the left. This is the kind of frock the wise woman would choose who has need of a stunning dress, and one which may be worn at a good many particular dances. The material of which this model is made is stiff black taffeta encrusted with sprays of silver leaves. So clever are the line and the drapery of this frock it appears strikingly different from the ordinary dress. It has both individuality and chic and is suitable for repeated appearances.

The bodice is extra long; in fact, part of a slim and narrow full length slip. The décolletage is V shaped, and the tiny shoulder straps are made of rhinestones.

The bouffant skirt consists of wide ruffles, cartridge plaited at the top, and folded over on the left side to make a series of hemlines that add much to the charm of the model.

Our third model is a black lace dance frock from Redfern, which combines such extreme simplicity with such exquisite refinement that it may be worn for both exacting and informal occasions. This type of dress is especially suitable for the woman who is not quite young. The blouse, whi[illegible] really blouses, is not in any way adorned other than by its beautiful fabric and lines.

The skirt consists of two ruffles that are very long in back and that rise to make the hemline and the tunic decidedly shorter in front. The girdle is made of a wide band of lace, draped closely around the hips in the Spanish manner, and attached under a jeweled buckle at the center front.

Our fourth model is a dance frock from Louiseboulanger, one that is youthful and that is designed for the most exacting and exciting dances which come in the winter season for the young girl of not over 25 summers and winters. The blouse of this frock is made of pale pink lamé gauze, and it has practically no décolletage.

A small handkerchief of the same gauze is tied close about the throat. The wide, oddly shaped girdle is draped over the right hip and smoothly fitted over the left. This girdle dips in a point at the left side, front and back.

The skirt is made of dull blue panne velvet, the material of the girdle, and it is shirred so that the hemline is extremely wide. This hemline is uneven, being much longer at the sides than in the center front and back. It falls in a series of small descending folds.

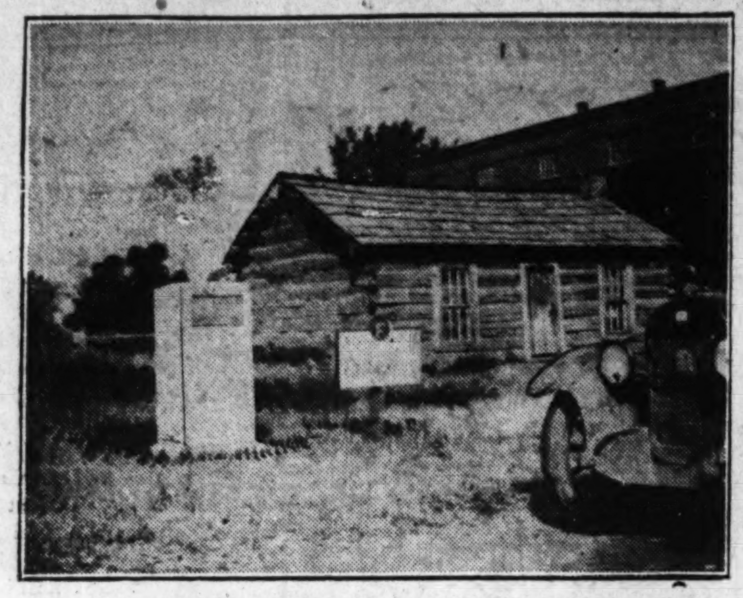
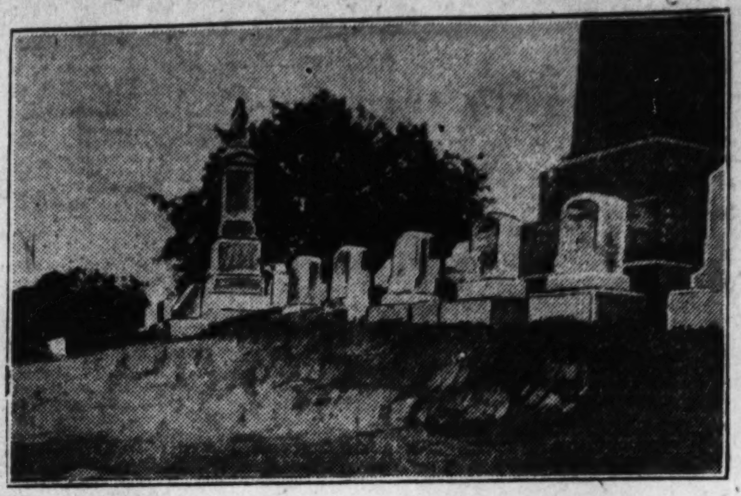
HISTORICAL AMERICA by CLIFFORD RAYMOND

George Rogers Clark



Fort Sackville, the site of which on the Wabash river in Vincennes is thus marked, was captured by Clark after he had marched a force of 130 men from Kaskaskia across the flooded lands of southern Illinois in February, 1779.

Portrait of George Rogers Clark.



The small headstone to the left in the row of five marks the grave of George Rogers Clark in Cave Hill cemetery, Louisville. The large red granite shaft to the right is to his brother, Gen. Jonathan Clark. The Daughters of the American Revolution have placed the headstones of George, Jonathan and another brother, Edmund. The great Clark's grave has no other memorial to honor the achievements of the man.

VIRGINIA invited Indiana, other states of the old northwest territory and Kentucky to join this month in a commemorative visit to the birthplace of George Rogers Clark, and such citizens as could accept the invitation were at the exercises near Charlottesville, Va., Nov. 19, the one hundred and seventy-fifth anniversary of Clark's birth.

The sesquicentennial of his work in the taking and keeping of the debatable territory west and north of the Ohio river, which he began in 1778 by the invasion of Illinois, will have celebration next year and the year following in Illinois, Kentucky, and Indiana.

A NOTABLE FAMILY

John and Ann Rogers Clark, well to do tidewater Virginians, removing back into the Piedmont, had a notable family. Of their ten children, six were sons. Five sons were officers in the revolution. One was George, who conquered the northwest territory. Another was Gen. Jonathan Clark. A third was William Clark, later general, who with Meriwether Lewis made the exploration to the Pacific after the Louisiana purchase under President Jefferson.

Jefferson's home at Monticello adjoined the Clark property in Albemarle county.

George Rogers Clark is buried in Cave Hill cemetery in Louisville. It is a beautifully kept cemetery with conspicuous monuments to solvent respectability put up in mortuary reverence and respect.

In this large cemetery it is not easy to find Clark's grave. All the guards and grave diggers know his resting place is there and they know where it is, but when a grave has only a small headstone, the simplest of little markers, it is difficult to follow directions. The really great man of the northwest has no memorial over his grave except such a headstone and the D. A. R. marker.

To find his resting place one should be told to look for the red granite shaft of his brother Jonathan. Gen. Jonathan Clark, by some oddity of memorial regard, has a monument. George Rogers Clark has none. He has the obscurity of any estimable citizen whose good works were known only to the family which lost him. All about him sentiment has put up great and durable works to the memory of men and women whose import to their time and nation was that of other men and women.

GREATEST OF PIONEERS

Two of his brothers are buried alongside him, Jonathan and Edmund. Jonathan has the red granite shaft but all three have the simple headstones. That of George Rogers Clark is marked:

Gen'l George Rogers Clark
Born O. S., Nov. 9, 1752
Died February 13, 1818.

"O. S." means Old Style. The date by the present calendar was ten days later, Nov. 19. The illustration shows the extent to which the generations north and south of the Ohio have indicated their appreciation of the man whose vision, courage, tact, diplomacy, loyalty and fortitude combined to make the first effective unscrambling of the elements of confusion and disorder governing what is now the mid-west of the United States.

It is difficult in this Louisville cemetery to find his grave, but when it has been found, there is the burial place of the great trans-Appalachian father of the American republic. Clark is the greatest of American pioneers. The Louisiana purchase in a way hangs upon his activities. The Pacific reaches of the country may be seen as American because of his foresightedness and resolution. What was the United States of America, and to what natural boundaries did these states, even if free, extend?

The geographical content of the United States seems a simple work of ordination now, except as one sees that it has even now a peculiar formation in that it ceases to use the St. Lawrence river as a natural boundary throughout its course. Something that was not a simple work of ordination made that curious splitting up of territory to the north of New England.

It was such a thing as this that all of Clark's life work was thrown against. If he had not done it some one else might have, but of that no one can safely judge. There was no one to carry the New England line up to the St. Lawrence river. If no one had carried the Virginia line west and north of the Ohio river it might have been that there now would be on this North American continent a diversity of nations comparable to that of Europe.

It was not inevitable that the thirteen English colonies, for the most part confined east of the mountains, should have had, even when free, any more than the territory over which they at that time claimed jurisdiction and authority. There was no inevitable reason for assuming that Great Britain, even if relinquishing control over these original colonies, would relinquish control over the territory west of them which already by act of parliament had been joined to the province of Quebec.

FORMERLY QUEBEC

There was nothing in the demonstrable prospects of the colonials which gave them a guaranty beyond their administrative rights when they rebelled. Great Britain had no inevitable reason to throw into their territorial possession a region she had denied belonged to them before they took to rebellion. The northwest territory which is now Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan and Wisconsin was Quebec. It was not Pennsylvania, Virginia, Maryland or New England. It was French Canada recognized as such by the British government, settled by Frenchmen and governed under French laws even under British control.

Illinois had French towns under British government at Kaskaskia and Cahokia. Indiana has another such French town at Vincennes. It was British governed Quebec and the revolution as a revolt of eastern colonies did not have a thing to do with it in the essence of its principles and declarations. The Spanish had Louisiana and the Mississippi. The British had this extension of Quebec down to the Ohio from the lakes and the revolution was to prove whether the colonies in their own territory could or could not win their fight to conduct their own affairs. But it was not in the avowed principles of the revolution to gain more territory and run other peoples' affairs.

WINS NEW TERRITORY

That is exactly what George Rogers Clark proposed to do and did do. He carried a successful campaign of territorial acquisition into enemy territory. He won the territory and in spite of subsequent adversities it was held.

Gens. Arnold and Montgomery, Thomas and Sullivan, statesmen such as Franklin and Chase and Carroll of Carrollton went to Canada with muskets and rifles and with printing presses and persuasions to try to win one-tenth of the resources to the American republic which Clark conquered and forever sealed to the United States with less than two hundred men.

What Arnold's men did in going up the Kennebec and crossing the Lake Megantic carry into the valley of the Chaudiere to assault Quebec, Clark and his smaller force equaled not only in crossing the unknown lands of Illinois from Fort Massac to take Cahokia and Kaskaskia but in the greater act of fortitude in crossing again the marsh lands and swollen rivers to take Vincennes and thus take from the British any title to claim to the northwest territory.

ACTING FOR VIRGINIA

Clark was acting for Virginia. He was the commander of a Virginian army commissioned by Gov. Patrick Henry of Virginia during the revolutionary war to protect Kentucky, which was Virginian territory, t Indian attack stimulated by the Bri posts, principally on Detroit.

If it had not been done succes even Kentucky might not have s vived such attacks and the Ame frontier when the treaty of Paris w considered, might not have gone b yond the proclamation line of 1 when it was decreed by the ministry George III, that the English colo should not go west of the orig streams flowing into the Atlantic. the great watershed of the Ame mid region south of the lakes f into the Gulf of Mexico.

George Rogers Clark by his own p sonal perceptions, activities, and s rifices is the direct architect of destiny which kept the United S free to extend to the Pacific. It m have been in inevitabilities above p sonalities. It might have been in t order of things impossible to avoid present sweep of the United S Of that it is difficult to judge. It i be seen where checks were main and where inevitability has accom dated itself to human direction.

UNPLEASANT STORY

Without Clark there might h been another Europe here, with Gr Britain, France, and Spain much be established as to navigation, re and territory than they are in Afr

There is no question in all the in volved and controversial history of th event that Clark was the outstan figure. He was the man who by th personality, some such as Washing ton's, controlled men and events. suffered from criticism and cont from slander and scandal, much f lack of support and neglect. He h been condemned as a drunkard. obligations were dishonored. Men w trusted government to be honora as he did, such men as Pollock a Vigo, were ruined. It is an unplea story and the whole tale is none more pleasant for Clark's unmemo ized grave in the Great Cave Hill c tery of Louisville.

SCIENCE STUDIES THE WEIGHT PROBLEM

And Makes Interesting Discoveries About Obesity and Excessive Thinness.

by Antoinette Donnelly

NEW YORK.—[Special Correspondence.]—Yes, there is a difference between obesity and overweight. You cannot say that all persons of superfluous weight are so because of overfeeding and sedentary habits, or a combination of both.

At the Michael Reese hospital, Chicago, an interesting study among patients, among the student nurses and other members of the staff, on obesity and overweight has been going on for the last seven years, a report on which is offered in a recent issue of Hospital Topics and Buyer.

"We have to admit that certain obese persons are right when they declare they cannot lose weight even on greatly limited diets," states Dr. Strouse. "Our studies have proved that there is a condition of constitutional obesity in which the weight gain upsets all our accepted relationships between food intake, energy expenditure, and weight."

Also, Dr. Strouse claims that a difference has to be admitted, at least in degree, between obesity and overweight. Overweight usually results from overfeeding, sedentary habits, or a combination of both. Some cases of obesity unquestionably follow the same causes.

"This group of overweight persons is benefited by a disciplinary regimen of limited, regulated food intake and increased activity," the doctor states.

"It is the smaller contingent of obstinate overweight that consistently resists all ordinary methods of correction—the cases of 'unexplained' obesity that figure so prominently in medical literature, in which the tendency to accumulate and deposit fat seems to be quite independent of any of the usual causes of increased weight that prompted the series of experiments begun in 1920.

The attempt was made to discover the particular manner in which the fat man utilizes his food which enables him to save and store food components that the excessively thin man either converts into free energy available for work or eliminates as excess material.

Among the interesting facts in obesity revealed by the experiment is that both over eating and under exercise are common faults, yet excessive obesity is comparatively rare. Conversely, another extreme is observed in a fairly large percentage of healthy but thin persons whose food intake is constantly in excess of their calculated needs, yet who cannot gain weight under any circumstances.

Two Clinical Cases.

A clinical test was made on a thin, healthy man of 39, an active worker who ate normal food and slept six or seven hours out of the twenty-four. On a four week's vacation he increased his food intake by half, mostly in carbohydrates, slept from ten to fourteen hours a day, and reclined quietly in the open air most of his waking hours. At the end of this period he was considerably refreshed, but he had made no weight gain whatever.

Another experiment concerned a girl of 15, excessively heavy, whose basal metabolism was below normal. On a carefully planned diet considerably below her calculated basal requirements and with no restriction of bodily activity, she gained 3.3 pounds in sixteen days.

This study expanded into a major research project in metabolism and Dr. Strouse and Dr. Chi Che Wang have in readiness for publication now a statement of far reaching importance on the relationship of metabolism to human types and body build.

Of this they are positive: There is a constitutional type of obesity, requiring something more than weighed and measured rations or the specific regulation of diet by other means.

During the experiment, the importance of serving tasteful meals to those on diets was emphasized.

"When diets are not ample, particular measures are required to keep the patients pleased," was the theory on which the experiments were worked.

The patient undergoing dietary management, it was realized, should not be discouraged by unbalanced [illegible] unattractive or unduly reduced portions. The following menus, chosen at random, the report points out, show skill [illegible] the construction of low calory [illegible].

Extremes in Metabolism.

During the period covered by these experiments, the studies on obesity have included many patients and more volunteer subjects. They ranged from 30 per cent under weight to 140 per cent over weight. From these studies the relationship between food intake and body weight appears to present two extremes of the same metabolic problems: In the very thin healthy person who habitually eats more than his basic requirements, yet who fails under any circumstances to put on weight, and the obese person who manages somehow to store fat on a minimum diet.

Work is still in progress on the hospital test to find whether glandular extracts other than thyroid have an effect upon weight reduction. This glandular work is recognized as of much clinical importance at the present time, since there are afloat many unsubstantial claims and much untrustworthy advertising regarding it in relation to obesity.

The report hints that individual treatment will eventually replace former generalization and that "eating for efficiency" will be a specific procedure instead of a catch phrase of food faddists.

Bright Sayings of Husbands and Wives

The snappy comeback of the other half when cornered has often been a source of wonder to husbands and wifes! The husband or the wife has come across with a bright saying that will never be forgotten by the other half of the matrimonial sketch. What was that bright saying, Mr.? Mrs.? Send it to us, and we'll pay you $1 for it if we print it. Address Bright Sayings of Husbands and Wives, The Chicago Tribune, Chicago.

Turn About.

Young Johnson got married. On his first pay day he gave his wife thirty dollars of his thirty-five dollar salary. The next week he reversed the process.

"But, George," protested his wife, "how do you expect me to get along on five dollars?"

"Hanged if I know," he replied. "I had a rotten time myself last week. Now it's your turn." G. W. A.

A FRIEND IN NEED

by Sally Joy Brown

APPEALS FOR BABY THINGS ARE POURING IN

WE are always happy and willing to help the babies—and right now they need help badly. When we think of the infant clothing, cribs, carriages, and baby beds which are being outgrown every day in Chicago before they have lost all their usefulness, is there any reason why we should let this condition exist another day?

At present, for example, we have one woman whose husband is dead and who has a three months old baby. Buying a baby buggy is out of the question.

Again, we have a number of expectant mothers who would look forward to the advent of the new life with great joy and happiness if only they could see how the necessities for the newcomer would be provided. Can we let such mothers be worried when among us there are many whose children have outgrown their first outfits and we can give the clothing and bedding to help another little one just as easily as we could put it away where it would accomplish nothing?

We have appeals and needs for anything and everything useful in baby care. Bedding, beds, cribs, bassinets, and clothing can be put into service immediately to relieve the desperate need.

How easily we can turn distress into happiness—those of us with little children in the family. An infant in any family in comfortable circumstances seldom wears out its clothes. It outgrows them, and there they are—ready for a lot more service, if only we give them.

Think of the need there is right now, please, and let me know you will contribute.

REM scores a "ringer"

for Champion Horseshoe Pitcher

"I was recently laid up for a week with a bad cold and a cough that I got travelling around pitching horseshoes," says Mr. Merchant. "I do that a lot for I was Kentucky's Ringer Champion in 1924. One Sunday morning I noticed a REM ad in the paper and decided I'd try it, for what I had been using hadn't helped me any. It proved to be the best cough medicine I'd ever used. By the time I'd taken two doses, my cough was considerably better. Before long it was entirely gone."

Grateful users recommend REM. It's different. It clings to your throat, soothes the irritation and quiets the cough. Pleasant to take and perfectly harmless. "Money back," if it doesn't help you.

Insist on REM! Remember, its effectiveness is largely due to a special ingredient, not in ordinary cough syrups.

Life is but an empty dream!"

Oft one rouses with a scream.
And "the saddest words," I'm thinking,
Ever pen or type can write
I've just lamped upon the call board
Scrawled "This show will close tonight."

Fate, can't I coax you to make me an actress?
Make me one quickly, I earnestly pray,
Else, as a proper maid, how I can I ever
Do fullest justice to this negligee?

Drooping, secluded, where traffic is rare.
Only a third act could get this gown over—
Fate, must I waste it on dumb desert air?

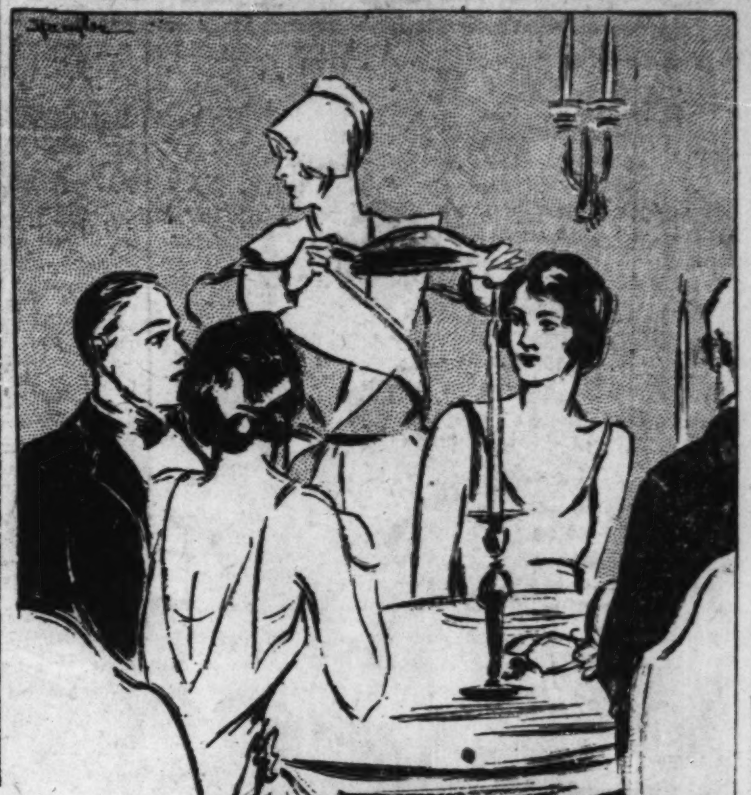
AN EARLY AMERICAN DINNER



Mrs. Harry Plans and Gives One for the Epicurean Delight of a Visiting Frenchman

By Persis Standish.

A DISTINGUISHED French scientist who came to America on business was more or less pushed by Mr. Boss into Harry's care. Of course, Mrs. Harry was delighted, because she is more or less inclined to be a Franco-maniac in a mild way and because the scientist himself proved to be a charming person, rather youngish and having a delightful sense of humor.

Mr. Boss already had introduced him to a number of persons besides the Harrys, and so, of course, he was having a fairly busy time. He dined with the Harrys several times en famille and went with them to the few restaurants where the cooking would not make a Frenchman cringe—none of them fashionable, of course.

His Kind of Girls.

After she had got to know him pretty well, Mrs. Harry proposed giving a dinner party for him. She said: "I wanted to wait until I knew whether you expect women to be well informed or pretty before asking them to dinner to entertain you. I want you to have a good time, you know."

"Do you know now what kind of girls I like?" asked the scientist.

"Yes," said Mrs. Harry, "I think I can guess that you like a reasonable combination of intelligence and looks."

"I will tell you," said the scientist, "just what kind of girls I like."

"Well?" said Mrs. Harry.

"American girls," said the Frenchman, gallantly.

"I like everything about your country except one thing," he continued, "the elaboration, the exaggerated way in which most people shower a stranger with lavishness. You alone of all the persons I have met have not striven to impress me with your wealth and influence."

"O, well," said Mrs. Harry, "I have neither, you see."

An American Dinner.

"You wouldn't if you had," said the scientist rather cryptically, "but I will allow you to give the dinner party if you will promise me that it shall be simple—not more than six persons and not more than four courses. As simple as possible and your everyday linen—no lace, madam—and no gold table service."

Mrs. Harry laughed: "You make things easy for me, indeed. I think I shall give you a truly American dinner."

"O, that would be delightful," he said. "I shall be no end grateful for that and I shall be able to tell about it, when I go home, as the happiest time of my visit."

"Had you not better wait until afterwards," said Mrs. Harry, "to say nice things about it—or do you consider that it will be easier to say them now?"

"To show you how really anxious I am to enjoy the party, I hope you mean to give it this week."

So Wednesday night was settled and Mrs. Harry began on Monday to plan her Pilgrim Father dinner. She drove out into the country and got a turkey for the main course. She had no appetizer, because that would count as a course and she did not intend either to repeat French recipes or compete with them.

So the first course was black bean soup with cornsticks; the second was roast turkey, cranberry jelly, and mashed potatoes. She remembered that the French do not like to eat their vegetables and meat together and that there probably was no Pilgrim Father salad, and so she had a clever vegetable course for the third. It consisted of succotash made of tomatoes, corn, and lima beans, and with this she served hot baking powder biscuits, although she was in doubt as to whether they did not originate at a much later date and from a southerly direction. However, she didn't have time to ask Miss Eddington about them and she needed them to make the course good. For dessert she had pumpkin pie and cheese.

The dinner was a great success and the scientist said he believed the pilgrims Mrs. Harry represented at the feast must have had French blood somewhere, because nothing so good as that menu could have come from England or, in fact, from anywhere else by ancestry except la belle France.

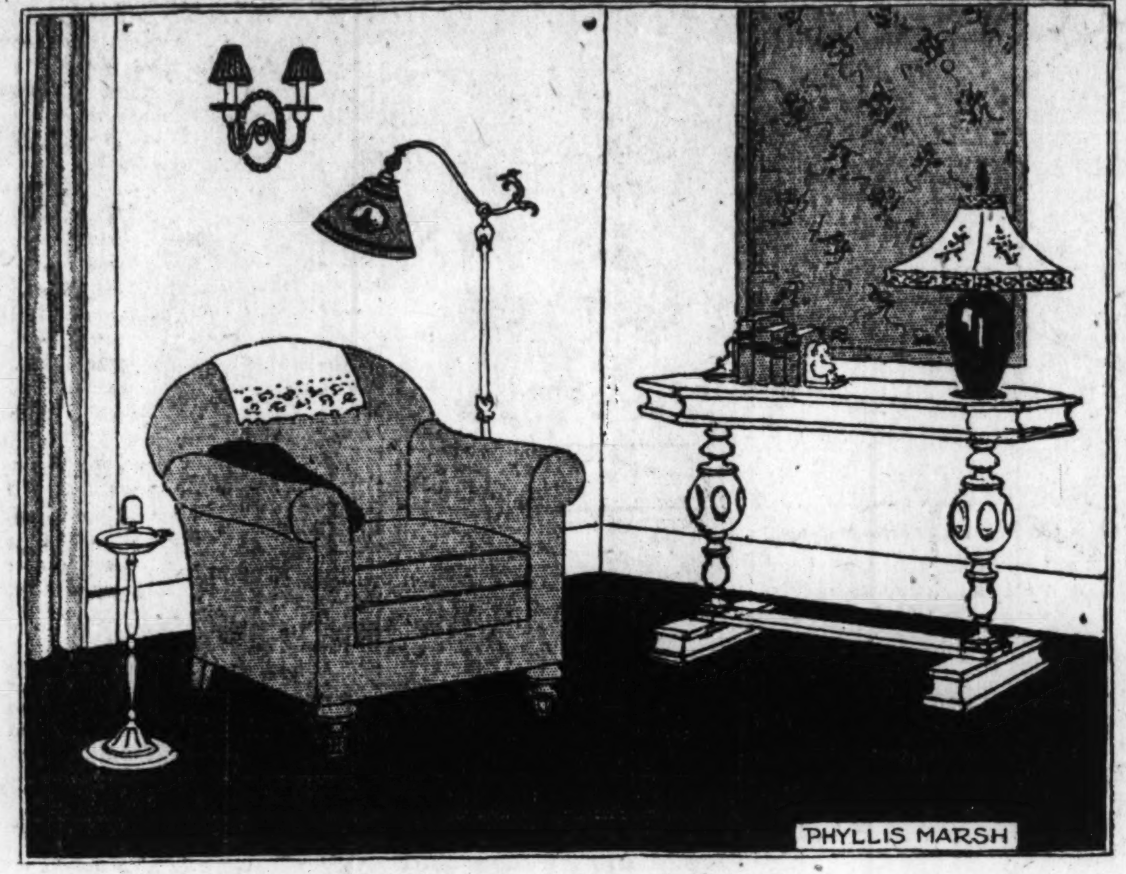
The HOME HARMONIOUS

Lamps and Lighting Fixtures, If Carefully Chosen, May Make the Simplest Room Charming

Phyllis Marsh will be glad to assist the homemaker in any problems pertaining to home building and home furnishing. Address your letter to Phyllis Marsh, The Tribune, Chicago. Inclose stamped addressed envelope for personal reply.



A well lighted corner of an attractive living room.

By Phyllis Marsh.

THERE is nothing quite so charming or decoratively effective in any room as attractively shaded lamps or lighting fixtures. Whether they be in the form of wall sconces or side lights, central chandeliers, simple drop lights, table or floor lamps, they may be capable of either making or marring the decorative quality of any room.

For the average home the suspended central ceiling fixture in the living room is never as satisfactory or decorative as side lights, floor and table lamps. However, in the dining room it is quite appropriate to use the chandelier type of central lighting fixture which boasts of several upright electric candles. These should be arrayed with small shades to shield the eyes from all unnecessary glare. There are various other types of suspended lighting fixtures designed for use in halls, bedrooms, kitchens, and bathrooms.

Artificial light must be so distributed that it will be convenient to those using it and at the same time give a room a balanced appearance. For instance, do not have one end of a room well lighted while the other is in shadow. The room will lack balance and that quality of repose necessary to the comfort of the occupants.

In selecting any type of floor or table lamp it is well to remember that it is going to serve a two-fold purpose. First, it is primarily to be used to read, sew, or write by, and, secondly, it must be artistic and of such type that it will fit into the style of room in which it is to be used. Direct or unshaded light should always be avoided, as it is most trying to the eyes and too glaring ever to be artistic.

No living or dining room is ever complete without its sconces or sidelights. There are various styles and designs for the house of colonial spirit, for the house of Spanish or Italian character, and for the house of early English or French peasant or cottage style, as well as for the home of nondescript character. The number of sidelights used and their size will be determined by the size of the room. It is always advisable to shade them with appropriate looking shields or shades in either parchment, silk, or chintz, as their style demands. If this cannot be done, then select frosted bulbs and those of amber tint, rather than white.

With the sidelights chosen, the next thought of the home decorator will be toward the selecting of the necessary table and floor lamps for the living room. Every living room has or should have its various individual groupings which, when carefully arranged, make an interesting ensemble and complete unit of the room. These groupings require for use as well as decoration the support of lamps, either in the form of table or floor lamps. After the choice of style has been made, it is well to see that the floor lamp is of proper height for the chair at which it is to be placed. Both from the standpoint of proportion in relation to the chair and the comfort of the person reading it is essential that the height be correct.

A shade of extreme color is never satisfactory to read, sew or write by and should never be used. This does not mean, however, that it cannot be of some soft warm tint of yellow, orange or light rose, but it does mean that the extreme inside lining should be either white or cream. A shade which is narrow at the top and flares considerably at the bottom will radiate light farther than one of more upright lines or of bell shape style. One of the most simple, inexpensive and satisfactory types of floor lamps for reading purposes is of wrought iron and is usually topped by a parchment paper shade. Then there are numerous other styles of floor lamps such as the junior, bridge, and piano lamp.

Table lamps and their shades are many and varied and in styles and designs appropriate for all types of rooms. There are simple styles and elaborate and formal ones and each has its proper place in the scheme of decoration. If the base of the lamp is pronounced in its decoration, it is advisable to select a shade of less ornate character, but if it is of simple style, then the shade may be more decorative. The shade of any lamp should look like an integral part of the lamp rather than an appendage simply added on to it for use without thought as to proportion, balance, harmony and unity. Many an artistic lamp is spoiled by being adorned with a shade which is too large and too ornate for the base. The contour of the shade should be in keeping with the contour of the base if the two are to become a harmonious unit.

It is also necessary that a table lamp be in correct proportion to the table upon which it is being used, and that it is neither too high nor too low for the comfort of those using its light. The shade should come down far enough on the lamp base to just cover the socket. It is especially essential when selecting silk and georgette for the making of shades, that the material be as attractive looking in daylight as by artificial light.

When selecting several lamps for a room, introduce various styles for variety and do not choose all the floor lamps of the same height. More than two table lamps of the same design are not advisable and these two should be arranged in bisymmetrical balance on a long davenport table. Small lamps at each end of a mantel over a fireplace may be arranged in the same manner, which is also an attractive way to adorn a dressing table with Dresden style figurine lamps.

When selecting a shade frame and the necessary materials with which to cover it, there are several questions the home decorator must ask herself. It is assumed that the lamp base is already selected and that it is in absolute harmony both in color and character with the room in which it is to be used.

1. Is the size and shape of shade frame in proportion and appropriate to the style of the lamp base?

2. Are you selecting the correct type of materials for the character of the base?

3. Is the color suitable and does it look as attractive when lighted as when not?

4. And last but not least, is the trimming appropriate with the entire ensemble?

Today's illustration displays a comfortable spot in a homelike, nondescript type of living room, which owes a great deal of its charm and attractiveness to the fact that it has been illuminated most carefully, carrying out every detail as to utility and decoration.

The TRIBUNE COOK BOOK

Fandango Styles in Foods with Garlic Perfumes and Other Spanish Exuberances Are Coming Vogues.

All recipes have been scientifically tested by Miss Eddington with current market materials and are indorsed by her.

SPANISH influences in art, architecture, music, grill work for screens and balconies, smoothed back glossy hair, garlic odors, etc., have been accumulating for some time until now they tell us we are to have a Spanish winter.

Spanish we may be, then, but there are good reasons why it is easier said than done, especially if we would have anywhere nearly the classic dishes of Spain and those consistent with the exuberance of that romantic figure of the Spanish cavalier with his guitar singing to the dark lady with a rose in her teeth. Spain has, too, some of the most romantic geographical names in all the world—Salamanca, Cadiz, Andalusia with its practical Malaga and many others, and perhaps their foods were up to these names. Yet foods were certainly as diverse over the whole of the ancient Iberian peninsula as Spanish foods are in this modern world—greatly diversified, because Spain has embraced the islands of the sea, Mexico, South America, etc.

The Roman eminences, Seneca, Martial, Lucan, were born in a highly cultivated Spain, and in no Latin works can we find more about foods than in Martial's. I once went through 600 pages of his translated poems to learn about the foods and eating of Martial's day, and it was entertaining no end. In those days men would almost sell their souls to get dinner invitations in great establishments. But we might even go back of Rome for influences discoverable in the common life of Spain. The peninsula was popular and worked by the Phoenicians, and since we can find in Marseilles, France, ways of cooking fish traced back to the inventors of the alphabet, we may easily believe that the Phoenicians influenced cooking in Spain greatly in their day, and a bit to this day.

And when the Moors came into Spain with their arts and sciences and great agricultural industry they set up many things, very likely a esthetics, for they knew how to live. They were theologians and philosophers as well as scientists. Not all the influences by any means went out from Aragon and Castille, although princely peoples have always found a way of living in a princely fashion. Malaga was Moorish and we have Malaga grapes and Malaga raisins to this day, and there have been marvelous Malaga wines. The Moors were perfectionists, and probably it was they that dried fruit and packed it more perfectly than ony one else ever has and passed the knowledge on. And besides the raisins, there have been delicious dried dates and figs sent out from the port of Malaga.

We have reason to believe that Pheonician influences lasted in Barcelona, which is in one of the great eating provinces in Spain today, our foreign correspondents tell us, with restaurants in unbelievable numbers. Granada has been great for its pleasant foods as well as for its remarkably romantic name and fame. The emblem of the city is the pomegranate, a fruit of eminence in Spain and more popular with us each year.

We have reason to believe that the surest way—but it is certainly a laborious one—to learn about what foods to set up in Spanish ways is to read books of travel on Spain—some are lovely to read—Spanish histories, and to study a Spanish dictionary, and also to go to museums where there are Spanish things to see, including pots and "braseros" or braising pans.

Spanish Cook Books.

As to Spanish cook books we would say that they are difficult to peruse, for we have a shelf full, gathered variously from Cuba to California, many of them printed in Spain. [There are many words in them not to be found in dictionaries, yet the dictionaries give many definitions which are equivalent to recipes.]

Judging by the first recipes given in the majority of these books, sauces are the leading items in Spanish cookery, although we know that it really is Spanish stews that rank as most national. But sauces and stews may be quite closely related, and Spain has given to universal cookery the brown sauce, which contains as many ingredients as the national olla or olla prodida.

Spanish Fruits.

The Seville orange and others of Spanish growing were familiar to the world and eating literature long before the Spaniards planted an orange tree on what is now United States soil, and, judging by what we see in Cuba and California, and what we have read about Mexico, anywhere where Spanish influences have prevailed, the orange and lemon have received loving attention and widest use, and appreciation.

In a hundred year book on Spain is to be found reference to the Spanish proverb concerning the fit time to eat oranges, which characterizes them as gold in the morning, silver at noon, and lead at night. You may call your morning orange juice, then, a Spanish "refresco."

Cuba seems to have fruits in endless variety, and it is perhaps the Spanish influence there, as well as climatic judgment, that has led to their serving their fruit wealth in ways unusual to us, and to serve many fruit juices and purées profusely in places corresponding to our ice cream parlors or "fountains." Cocoanut, pineapple, and banana are eaten in mountain sized heaps, and the mango with most interesting ceremony.

And fruits are preserved in these Spanish colonies, as in Spain. The Spanish West Indies has not only given sugar to the wide world but it has contributed guava jellies to international menus, and many an item less well known than this popular concomitant of cream cheese.

Spanish Raw Materials.

Of really Spanish raw materials we may have in our larder there are not a few, and we might easily have more if it was commercially important to import them even from Cuba. Of course, the Malaga raisin is one of the superlatively good things and used to be served with nuts and oranges on old time holiday tables in New England, where seaborne foods used to be so common.

Spanish olives are in our markets and there is no salad oil superior to the best of Spanish olive oils. Almost any salad with tomatoes and a Spanish oil may justifiably be called a Spanish salad. And when eggs are cooked in olive oil—a good deal of it—as is customary in Spain, humble eaters sop up all the oil with bread. A simple luncheon for the poor in the Spain of late date is "a hunch of bread and a bowlful of olives for each," or a salad.

But a luncheon in Spain, as a friend of mine describes it in one of her books on Spain, that was good enough for the Cid, consisted of "Cold soup like a melted salad, a perfumed stew in which were strangely mingled Malaga potatoes, white wine, honey, cinnamon and cloves, and, for a crowning bliss, a dish of sugared chestnuts overflowed by a sirup whose every spoonful yielded a new flavor—lemon peel, orange peel, tamarind and a medley of spices."

Of course, these chestnuts were like the French marrons, before they are taken out of the sirup and dried. In trying to make even these latter it is best to leave them in a sirup, or preserved until shortly before they are to be dried and served as a confection.

People who live down in southern Florida and Cuban waters, where the flying fishes play—to use a Kipling phrase—know not only the Spanish mackerel but some fish of as brilliant color as the most flamboyant trees and flowers of the land, and deserving of such names as parrot fish.

Spanish Eatables.

A thick and cinnamon flavored hot chocolate is called Spanish chocolate, whether you get it in Italy or Coronado Beach, Cal., where cinnamon toast has also a popularity, and very likely deserves the cognomen Spanish. In California, as in Mexico, one can buy wonderfully carved "swizzle sticks," a utensil for milling chocolate, also a utensil which has many different names in the wide, wide world, where eggs are whipped with it, or that Italian egg specialty, zabaione, and other such things in Germany, but none has been gotten up with carving and inlaying more elaborate than the Mexican utensil, which also has a Cuban name, and probably was first designed in Spain.

Spanish Mexican.

In Mexico and in New Mexico and perhaps all along the Mexican border the peppery things seem the most characteristic—tamales, tortillas, chile con carne, and frijoles. The latter beans are far more like our own kidney beans [beloved of the Creoles, who are part Spanish] than is the garbanzo or Spanish pea — curious thing and hard to cook—which is so universally used in Spain in stews and everywhere, probably, where Spanish influences are strong. Its character affords the best proof, other than a knowledge of their meager fuels, why the Spanish have understood slow cooking, for with any other sort these cannot be made edible. The last vestige of heat in a coal is utilized in cooking in all poor countries, and Spain has been poor.

The Spanish Stew.

The olla podrida of Spain, containing often fish, flesh, fowl and any vegetable, egg and oil, is a great national dish, and it is hard to tell whether this name or puchero is the more universal term for it and there seems to be a score of names for Spanish stews, if no more, as a perusal of the dictionary more than a perusal of cook books shows. Good stews are inevitably the product of slow cookery, and slow cookery has other reasons for prevailing in Spain besides the scantiness of fuel to make hot fires.

The olla was an earthen pot, perhaps not as fragile as the almost universal and fragile cazuela of Mexico and Cuba, where a nest of four or five play cazuelas are sold as souvenirs—replicas of the real thing. In Cuba the most characteristic thing served in this dish seems to be rice with chicken [arroz con pollo] which is fricassee of of chicken over boiled rice.

Prompted by Envy.

I had many friends at school and was frequently invited to their homes. The beautiful furnishings of these homes made me hesitate to invite these friends to my own, which lacked everything lovely save a fine old painting. This was a picture of one of my ancestors and had been in the family several hundred years.

One of the young men in the party was an art student and was quite the rage with all the girls. He admired my picture and asked to call again to study it.

My chum, who had admitted her fondness for this young man, left saying she was going home for a headache powder. One of the boys offered to take her in his car, but she declined.

When the young man called again and we were looking at the picture we discovered a large hole in the canvas. This was made by acid and ruined the picture. We later confirmed our suspicions that this girl purchased the acid when she pretended to go home for the powder. M. C. H.

Naughty Girl.

After I had, for three years, been petted and spoiled as the only child, and consequently the only grandchild, my parents became the proud possessors of a baby boy. I had been an adored daughter but now there was a boy and, besides being adored, he was adorable, with a head full of golden curls in contrast to my straight brown locks.

Even at that early age I noticed the remarks made about what a nice baby he was and always, always those curls. When he was a little over a year old, I, then past four, took my brother and a pair of scissors under the bed and cut every curl.

As I know you're curious I will add that I did not get the deserved spanking. I had just miraculously recovered from a severe illness and my parents feared the result of punishment. Perhaps, too, they were thankful my brother escaped more serious damage. MRS. P. H. S.

SCOTT'S EMULSION

MOTHER!

Look at Child's Tongue if Sick, Cross, Feverish

Look at the tongue, mother! If coated, it is a sure sign that your little one's stomach, liver and bowels need a gentle, thorough cleansing at once.

When peevish, cross, listless, pale, doesn't sleep, doesn't eat or act naturally, or is feverish, stomach sour, breath bad; has stomach-ache, sore throat, diarrhœa, full of cold, give a teaspoonful of "California Fig Syrup," and in a few hours all the foul, constipated waste, undigested food and sour bile gently moves out of the little bowels without griping, and you have a well, playful child again.

You needn't coax sick children to take this harmless, "fruity laxative;" they love its delicious taste, and it always makes them feel splendid.

Ask your druggist for a bottle of "California Fig Syrup," which has directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly on the bottle. Beware of counterfeits sold here. To be sure you get the genuine, ask to see that it is made by the "California Fig Syrup Company." Refuse any other kind with contempt.

When to Suspect Acid Scalp

It isn't age that dulls the hair. Nor frequent washing or curling. If your hair lacks all life and lustre, it may be due to a condition you can correct in twenty-four hours. Acid scalp.

Neutralize the acid secretions of the scalp, and your hair will have the lovely sheen that makes any hair so attractive. A few drops of Danderine will do this; and as its name implies, Danderine is a scientific dandruff dissolvent. Five minutes after Danderine is applied, every particle of dandruff has been dissolved!

Acid scalp should be suspected if your hair is at all stiff or stringy, or won't hold a wave. Another sign—not so easily detected in one's self—is an acrid odor to the hair when it is warm, or after exercise. And for thirty-five cents at any drugstore, you can get a bottle of Danderine that will keep your hair soft and sweet and "on its good behavior" for weeks!

A FEW WORDS TO FATHERS

What Kind of Mates Are You, Men? Are You the Sort That Are Easy to Love—or Not?

By Doris Blake.

WHY all the magazine articles, why all the newspaper articles, the sermons from pulpits and judicial benches about woman and her job of keeping the home fires burning? How about the other party? How about his duties? Are we to believe that his are executed in the sight of man, God and his wife when he brings home a pay envelope, which half the time his wife doesn't get an even break on?

"In this appalling increase in divorce, of which we are reminded almost daily, is it possible to believe that woman is the sole cause and with her alone lies the remedy? Does not the old bromide about it taking two to make a quarrel serve in the instance of divorce? And being so, why not ask oftener 'Are Men Husbands?' instead of 'Are Women Wives?' 'Are You on Your Job, Old Frozen Face, Grouch or What Have You?' 'Are You the Sweetheart She Married?' 'Are You a Sympathetic, Loving Husband?' et cetera, et cetera."
—Weary.

Fair enough, Weary! Let's ask it. What kind of mate are you, anyway, Old Man?

Just stand still a minute until we get the tape out and see if we have been measuring the wrong person for shortcomings that lead to domestic friction!

Of course, when you married, one of the dreams you had was to be met on your return from work by a charmingly frocked, adorably coiffured, sweetly smiling dear who would offer her arms and lips affectionately while you secretly marveled how such sweet desserts could be meted out to one so undeserving.

Now that you may not be met with the coveted warmth of affection do you ever ask yourself if you might not be responsible for the change? Do you take a real interest in your home? Or, as a homemaker, do you think your job is done with the financing of it?

Of course, you have to go to shop or office every morning, put in a full day of struggle and toil. You have to buck competitors. You have hours, days, perhaps, of anxiety that are grilling. You're doing it all for the little woman and the children. You're honestly intent on getting ahead that they may have more comforts or luxuries, as the case may be; and you, yourself, may be able to enjoy some of them, too. But do you become possessed of the feeling that because of this effort of yours you alone are entitled to all the consideration at the end of the day; that you should be absolved from blame should a worried mood pursue you to the doorstep and the absent minded peck that you bestow be accepted, not at its face value but as meaning your heart is always in the right place, though your moods may vary?

Meet Her Half Way.

If you expect the little woman to greet you warmly, isn't it only fair that you give her the chance with a display of affection yourself? Unhappily, where the emotions are concerned, women are peculiarly sensitive. A warm response is easy enough, however, if there is a smile and a happy greeting to respond to.

Few of us are so phlegmatically built as to escape moods entirely. The wife is expected to respect those of her husband. She accepts the old alibi of business worries for his moments of silence, indifference or curtness because it is her job to try to "understand" her husband. How about husbands striving a bit, too, to understand that the life of a woman with a couple of children to look after during the day is likewise apt to be harassed beyond measure by mischief or accidents they fall into? In between watching them, there are sewing jobs, mending, planning of meals, cooking, doing those hundred and one things around a house to improve its appearance so "John" will have a charming home to bring his friends to.

Suppose, at the end of one of these days, her greeting is a bit preoccupied, a little understanding might save that sulky hour before and during mealtime. A cheery word, an honest interest in what has engaged her day would clear the atmosphere.

Some men seem to expect to walk into a home and find things just as they would be in a hotel. And take just about as much interest in how the management conducts things as there. And their attitude toward the whole place is one of "I pay for it. Why shouldn't it be so?" Praise is the last thing that ever occurs to them to offer. No home was ever broken where praise was given freely.

We hear a good deal of counsel administered to wives about being polite and nice to husbands' friends. Courtesy to a wife's friends is quite as much in order. It is the same gross affront to snub Emma X in your own home as for your wife to "freeze up" when Bill B drops in. If she is willing to accept invitations with you to the homes of friends of yours, what right have you to refuse to play bridge or dine with a woman friend of hers?

Affection Is Appreciated.

How often do you bestow on your mate those little marks of affection so dear to her—an unsolicited caress, a hug, a word of flattery? These are the things that mean more to woman's happiness than motors, pearls or diamond bracelets. The latter are presented on rare occasions but the other little things that make life sweet may be offered frequently and often, and more than anything else to keep alive the love in a woman's heart.

Are you the kind of man who thinks women are incompetent to handle money? If so, have you ever given your wife an honest chance to prove what she could do with it? You aren't the ideal husband just because you give her enough to buy food and clothing for herself and for the family. More bitterness in homes is caused over the money question than any other. Men are woefully short sighted who do not take their wives into their financial confidence.

Half of the extravagances of women are due to ignorance of their mates' earning power or are committed in a spirit of indifference as to whether things can be afforded or not. When the wife is let in on the partnership she knows how the balance sheet stands and there are very, very few wives who will break the confidence placed in them on money matters. When lean days are fallen upon, lean days are lived in the knowledge that when fuller days arrive they, too, will be shared equally.

Hard to Adore.

The matters of looks, charm and attractiveness, in spite of the repeated warnings to curl-papered, kimonoed, flat heeled and sallow complexioned women, isn't alone the woman's job where domestic harmony is concerned. An unshaven man, bay-windowed, purple-faced, careless about his linen, his shoes, is just as likely a target for a woman's scorn as the woman who lets her youth and looks get away.

We're not recommending that the wife of such a one transfer her affections to some slenderer, younger male, but there isn't any reason why the world shouldn't say if she did: "It's the husband's own fault. How can you expect a woman to love a man like that?"

If the wife doesn't keep herself charming and attractive enough to hold her husband, she receives very little consolation if he makes off with a younger, prettier woman.

Are you one of these fathers who believes himself to be a good parent because he brings home gifts of toys and on occasional evenings spends a crowded hour of fun and frolic with them, paying the bills but leaving their upbringing entirely to mother? An absentee father, says Harvey O'Higgins,—one who leaves the upbringing of a son to his mother—does the boy a great wrong. If he becomes so absorbed in his profession or in his business as to neglect his children and forget his wife, she is dissatisfied with him and her revolt is unconsciously imitated by her children.

Care of Babies

This baby has never had a day's sickness and never a cross or fretful spell that lasted an hour. And what do you suppose is responsible for this healthy, happy condition? Not diet, for he has eaten just about anything and everything a child could eat. Not drugs, for he has not been dosed with opiates; he has never had a drop of paregoric. Nor has his sensible mother ever made him taste castor oil. Yet his nerves are sound and his little bowels are strong, and when he does seem the least restless or wakeful, or out of sorts—or likely to be—his mother has him all serene again in ten or fifteen minutes!

The secret of this complete freedom from the [illegible] ills and upset [illegible] mon to [illegible] Plain o[illegible] Castoria. [illegible] illion and [illegible] ers swear b[illegible] astoria a[illegible] nder! A few drops and an a[illegible] fever, colic, diarrhea or con[illegible] seems to vanish in thin air. Castoria is purely vegetable; that is why physicians tell parents they may use it freely with children of any age—the youngest infant. And how they love the taste!

One word of warning; get the pure, real Castoria. Fletcher's Castoria is the original. It is the kind doctors specify. And with every bottle comes a book on "Care and Feeding of Babies" that is worth its weight in gold to any mother or prospective mother. So, remember; tell your druggist you wish Fletcher's Castoria.

Here Is an Interesting Little Felt Hat That May Be Made by the Home Milliner.

ANOTHER one of those interesting close fitting felt hats is shown here, and it can be made in any shade of felt that you like. There are only three pieces in this hat, and it is easy to make and will be up to date and chic when finished.

The hat can be cut from a piece of felt 9x36 inches if a 22 inch head size is right for you. It can be adjusted for other sizes by changing the length of sections 1 and 3 and by the number of tucks put in.

Make small tucks in section 1, as indicated. Then join the ends of this section with the raw edges out. The crown, section 2, is joined to section 1 in the same fashion—that is, with the raw edges out. Adjust and trim the edge of section 2 to get a smooth crown.

The head size band, section 3, is folded lengthwise and sewed on the inside of section 1 at the brim edge is made of a contrasting color the folded edge should extend about one quarter inch below the brim edge of section 1. Be careful in making these hats that you don't get the head size too small, for they can look decidedly close fitting and yet be perfectly comfortable.

Two attractive ornaments are shown, an aeroplane and a Scotch terrier, either one of which you can easily make from a contrasting color. For the older woman, or for formal wear, other ornaments, such as a rhinestone buckle, a flat feather ornament, or bow of ribbon, are more appropriate.

Strange Weddings

Have you ever seen a wedding so outlandish that it upset all your ideas of the traditional ceremony? Some marriages are foreign and quaint in their adherence to ancient customs; others are ultra modern in their haphazard speed and unconventionality. The Tribune would like to know the story of the strangest wedding you've ever seen. We will pay $1 for every letter published. Address Strange Weddings, Chicago Tribune.

An Audience of Two.

The bride was the only child of wealthy parents, and her mother maintained she should have an elegant wedding.

The groom was far from rich, and being employed in a large city several hundred miles from the girl's home town she insisted on marrying him there to save him traveling expenses.

Though her mother knew no one in the city to invite to the wedding, she reserved a church, minister, organist, and high priced choir for the occasion, and had the church elaborately decorated with ribbons, flowers, and white carpets in the aisles, and ordered a most beautiful outfit for her daughter.

The ceremony was performed and the singing and decorations were enjoyed by an audience of two—the bride's father and mother. Afterwards the party had dinner at a large hotel.

No wedding trip followed, for the bride and groom went to housekeeping immediately. M. M. S.

THE CHEEKIEST PERSON I EVER MET

Send us a short, to the point reminiscence of cheekiest person you ever met, and we'll pay you $1 for it if we print it. All letters must be addressed to the Cheekiest Person Editor, The Tribune, Chicago.

Borrowed a Hat to Keep.

When I was 16 my mother allowed me to go into a millinery store to learn to make my own hats. The first one I made was beautiful, and on Thursday, before I had worn it, a friend dropped in, admired it, tried it on, and asked if she might wear it that evening, as she was to visit people who were strangers to me.

I reluctantly consented, thinking she would return it in the morning. She never did return it. Friday night she wore it to a church social, Saturday to choir practice, and Sunday morning and evening in the choir loft.

Monday my indignant mother made me go after the hat. My friend, Lelia, seemed surprised and asked me why I was not wearing her old hat which she had left for me.

There were a dozen unsightly hatpin holes through the delicate pink and white maline and straw. As we attended the same church, as long as I wore that hat some one was sure to ask what I was doing with Lelia's hat. M. S.

A Human Sponge.

A few winters ago we had some deep snow, so that the drifts to the outer buildings were ten feet high and the walks to town where we got supplies were not shoveled for about four days.

The day before the storm a cousin came to visit and of course was snowed in and was compelled to remain more than the afternoon when he came.

After the storm had subsided and the drifting ceased my husband took his shovel and worked for hours alone till he had made a path to the street.

My cousin then thought he would go uptown and I said to him, "I wonder if you will get me some sausage for breakfast and a loaf of bread?" as I was tired baking bread and eating eggs. After awhile he came home with the articles and when I asked him how much I owed him for them, he calmly said, "Thirty-five cents," and I paid him. He had been marooned with us four days and helped to eat what we had in store. B. K. A.

Making the Guest Pay.

One day I was invited to a friend's house for lunch. Instead of preparing lunch at home, she asked me if it would be all right with me if we went to a nearby restaurant.

The checks came to $1.80 and she asked me if I would lend her that amount until we got home, as she only had a few dollars with her and wanted to do some shopping on the way. I gave her $2. She paid the cashier, kept the 20 cents change and that was the last I ever saw of my $2. R. J. M.

Plenty of Nerve.

Last year a neighbor bought a car but had no place to keep it, so we offered him space in our garage to use until he had one built. He used the garage several months, for which we charged him nothing.

He often drove a few miles into the country to gather wild blackberries, so one day when he was ready to go I asked him if he would take me and two guests with him. When we returned I thanked him, and laughingly asked, "How much do we owe you?"

He replied in all seriousness, "Fifty cents each," which I paid, and he accepted. E. H. D.

Keep Your Skin Young

DO you know that just beneath that soiled, discolored, faded or aged complexion is one fair to look upon? Nature causes the normal skin to peel off in tiny, unseen, flour-like particles, a little each day, renewing the complexion of youth naturally, but there comes a time when this skin shedding slows up. Worry, overwork, sickness, inactivity are reasons that cause the face to be blotchy, discolored, pimply and old looking. The thing to do, if you wish to look your prettiest at all times, is to assist nature in the process of absorption by using pure Mercolized Wax. Get an ounce at any drug store or beauty counter and use as directed. It gently but surely peels away the outer scarf skin, removing freckles, pimples, blackheads or a muddy complexion. The underneath skin, now in evidence, is clear, pink, fresh and velvety, and the entire face looks years younger. Mercolized Wax brings out the hidden beauty.

To quickly remove wrinkles and other age lines we recommend a face lotion of unusual merit: one ounce powdered saxolite and one-half pint witch hazel

The Three Wieboldt Stores.

The Strange Adventures of Young Robinson Grewso

By KEMBLE

His ma called him Robin; his dad called him son;
He grew like a weed and thought it great fun,
So he called himself Robinson Grewso.

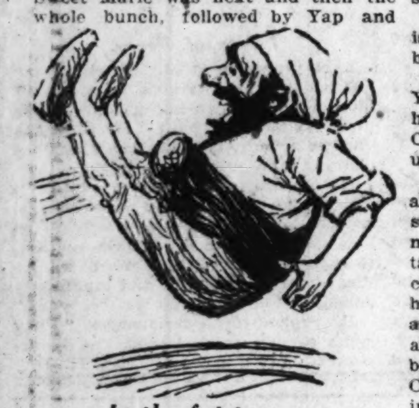
YAP, the dog, ran a few hundred yards up the beach, his nose to the ground, and the puffing band stringing out behind him. Suddenly he stopped short and pointed, not with his nose, but with his right paw.

"In yonder cove," he growled.

And sure enough, under a covering of broken boughs floated the pirate craft. The boys lost no time in pulling her out from her hiding place, for they must start at once if they were to overtake the pirates and prevent them from stealing everything at Robin's camp.

"Everybody pile in," shouted the leader. "Up with the sail and get after them."

Roy, with his two airplane chicks squawking and flapping their huge wings, was the first to jump aboard. Sweet Marie was next and then the whole bunch, followed by Yap and Chin Chin. The catapult gun was run up into the bow and Sundae placed the gum sticking shot in place. Then the race began. A good mile ahead they could see the pirate crew, every inch of sail crowded on their craft, looking anxiously back at their followers.

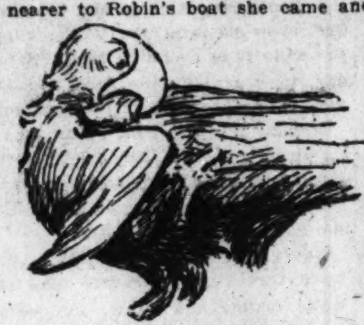


In the fat tummy

Robin quickly discovered that they were not gaining on the enemy and Roy was having a frightful time trying to restrain the airplane chicks. They saw the pirates and wanted to fly to them. Then Dode, the genius, hit upon a bright idea.

"Let's give them a little rope and make them pull us. They can fly all right. What say, mates?"

A mighty cheer went up, and soon the airplane birds were winging it straight for their former owners and pulling the boat through the waters at a great rate. At first the pirates were panic stricken, but soon their terror turned to joy. They pointed upward and cheered; for, sailing high overhead was the old mother airplane bird, making wide circles as she whirled her propeller bill and uttering loud squawks of anger. Nearer and nearer to Robin's boat she came and then, with a mighty swoop, nearly carried the mast away.



A flying leap

"I'll fix her if she does that again!" shrilled Chin Chin.

Robin gazed in amazement. "This is no time to be funny, old bird! Get busy and do something."

"That's just what I'm going to do. You watch little Oswald when that old hen makes another dive for us," and Chin Chin rolled his eyes and ruffled up his feathers.

Again the big bird circled and came at the boat like a rocket and just as she was about to hit it, Chin Chin made a flying leap and grabbed her tail feathers with his beak and both claws. Away the old hen zigzagged; her rudder was out of gear and Robin and his mates sent up a wild whoop as she landed in the water. Overboard went Robin and swam to rescue Chin Chin. With the old parrot soaking wet, he climbed aboard and on shot the boat toward the enemy.

The big chicks took no notice of their mammy's plight, but flew straight for the pirates. Now the boats were side by side. Blip! went the catapult gun and the gum sticking shot landed plumb in the fat tummy of the chief. Overboard he went.

Blip! another shot, this time a miss. The boats drew closer together and Robin gave the order to "board her." With the jab poles jabbing the pirate crew went overboard like so many frogs.

Swimming their fastest they struck out for the old airplane bird, who was still afloat.

And then, as Robin and his victorious pals sailed away with their own boat in tow, they beheld the pirate chief sitting astride the airplane bird trying to straighten out her tail feathers.

ISN'T IT ODD?

By William Atherton DuPuy

ISN'T it odd that government scientists should find it possible to convert a race of five toed guinea pigs into a race of five toed pigs! Here is the way it came about.

Guinea pigs were raised for scientific purposes at one of the government's experiment farms. It was found that once in a while a pig appeared which had a fifth toe. The family that produced it, they figured, had within it a tendency toward fifth toes. By crossing this pig with members of the group from which it came they got several pigs with the fifth toe. They bred these together and presently had a generation all of which had the fifth toe.

This showed the power of selective breeding, which has great value. They carried the idea further. There sometimes occurred, also, a guinea pig that was albino, all white with pink eyes. One of these appeared among the five toed pigs. They followed the same principle of selective breeding for albinos with pink eyes and finally produced a race of guinea pigs with five toes that were albino.

Then selections were made for curly haired pigs. This quality was eventually developed. So had a generation been created that had three strange characteristics that had but rarely existed in their ancestors of a few generations before—pigs that were five toed, were albinos and were curly coated.

The principle back of this selective breeding is, of course, the basis for the development of different strains in plants and anmials. It was by this sort of selection that a strain of white faced catttle was developed. It was by this sort of selection that it came to pass that there are police dogs, bull dogs, poodle dogs. It was by this sort of selection that chrysanthemums were developed from daisies. It is through selection of this sort that there came to be chrysanthemums of many colors. It was through this sort of selection that the giant tomatoes of the dinner table were developed from the small, watery "love apple" of two generations ago. This selective breeding, in fact, is one of the biggest ideas in all livestock and animal breeding and has been worth uncounted millions to the human race.

$5 Apiece for Bright Sayings of Children

The Tribune will pay $5 for each childish saying printed. The story told must never have been printed in any magazine or paper. It is not possible to acknowledge or return unavailable contributions. Write on one side of the paper. Address bright sayings to Aunty Bee, The Tribune, Chicago.

Virginia's father traveled and was home only two of three times a year. She asked her mother for new roller skates and her mother said, "Why don't you ask your father for them when he comes home?"

Virginia replied, "But I don't know him well enough, mother." B. F. R.

Charles and Freddie had stayed with their grandmother while their mother was sick in the hospital, and grandmother and daddy had kept, as a great surprise, the news that they had two new baby sisters.

Today the boys returned home and were eagerly waiting the arrival of their mother. Freddie was the first to spy her. "Charles," he called joyously, "here's mother."

Then as he perceived that she had a baby in each arm he gasped and stuttered, "and ah-a-a-, gosh, if she ain't brought home a whole taxicab full of babies." D. A. S.

Dr. Caldwell's 3 Rules Keep You Healthy

Dr. Caldwell watched the results of constipation for 47 years, and believed that no matter how careful people are of their health, diet and exercise, constipation will occur from time to time regardless of how much one tries to avoid it. Of next importance, then, is how to treat it when it comes. Dr. Caldwell always was in favor of getting as close to nature as possible, hence his remedy for constipation, known as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, is a mild vegetable compound. It can not harm the most delicate system and is not a habit forming preparation. Syrup Pepsin is pleasant-tasting, and youngsters love it. It does not gripe. Thousands of mothers have written us to that effect.

Dr. Caldwell did not approve of drastic physics and purges. He did not believe they were good for human beings to put into their system. In a practice of 47 years he never saw any reason for their use when a medicine like Syrup Pepsin will empty the bowels just as promptly, more cleanly and gently, without griping and harm to the system.

Keep free from constipation! It robs your strength, hardens your arteries and brings on premature old age. Do not let a day go by without a bowel movement. Do not sit and hope, but go to a druggist and get one of the generous bottles of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. Take the proper dose that night and by morning you will feel like a different person. Use Syrup Pepsin for yourself and members of the family in constipation, biliousness, sour and crampy stomach, bad breath, no appetite, headaches, and to break up fevers and colds. Always have a bottle in the house, and observe these three rules of health: Keep the head cool, the feet warm, the bowels open.

We would be glad to have you prove at our expense how much Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin can mean to you and yours. Just write "Syrup Pepsin," Monticello, Illinois, and we will send you prepaid a FREE SAMPLE BOTTLE.

YOU AND YOUR CHILDREN

by Mrs. Gladys Huntington Bevans

Forearmed with Truth

FOREWARNED is forearmed.

You—father and mother—are the ones to tell your children the truth about the facts of life and reproduction.

You are the ones to tell them the truth about the tremendous manifestation of nature that we call sex—and I wish we had a different name for it, one more dignified, more euphonistic.

You get to your children first with the truth before somebody else does with untruth. You get there before the boy in the street, before the girl who has picked up her knowledge here and there, distorted and unlovely, gets there first.

You get there first yourself so that your girl and your boy will all their lives have a natural feeling and understanding of their bodies and the laws of life.

If saying this over every day for a year would make it seem more important, more necessary, I should like to repeat it that many times. If you love your child, if you reverence life, get there first with all the knowledge that your son and daughter should have, so that they may be forearmed against the misinformation that they are sure to believe if they know nothing else, or nothing better to believe. Tell them the truth so that instead of being pitifully ignorant they are beautifully innocent.

First Impressions.

The first things children hear are the ones that are most apt to stay with them. Whether they are true or untrue, they will color for your children the facts they learn later. If untrue, they sometimes set up inhibitions or repulsions that hamper girls and boys all their lives. If true, such knowledge will help them to walk through the world free and understanding and make it possible for them to shed the often unpleasant misinformation that may come their way. If they hear the truth from you in the way they should, then your children will be able to understand the simple actual facts and to realize the alchemy of nature—to see it as the combination of a master mechanic and a master magician that it is.

Answer Their Questions.

Unless your boy and girl are different from most children they will begin asking you questions of all sorts very, very young. Answer those questions truthfully. If you do, they will ask you another and another from time to time and, if you answer, gradually they will build up a conception of life, an understanding of their bodies and of the reproduction of life that will be a great spiritual possession to them. It will be a bulwark of truth. It will fit sex into the pattern of life as naturally as sleep and sun and food and play and all the bodily functions fit into it.

But if you do not answer these questions, if you evade them, if you put them off, if you tell them they're too young to know this or too young to know that, they'll stop coming to you for information. Then they'll do one of several other things. Either they'll ask some one not equipped to tell them, or if they're not inquiring they'll ask no one, but will glean casually from time to time misinformation from other children. Or they will not gain much knowledge until they grow up and then the fact of these natural things will come to them as a shock. It is not an uncommon experience. I suppose, for instance, we have all heard older women say that many girls of their generation were married without the faintest conception of what the marriage relation meant. Ignorance of vital matters wasn't limited to those times.

In our day there are many families in which not a word passes between mothers and daughters and fathers and sons, or mothers and sons and fathers and daughters, of the important fundamental things of life.

Your Own Children.

If, at the present moment, your children are babies or nearly so, you are lucky because you can begin at the beginning and they will take all you have to tell them as they take everything else you give them—as a matter of course. If your children are older and you have never talked with them on these subjects—begin now. If you've brought children into the world there should be nothing under heaven that you cannot discuss with them—nothing should be a barrier between you. More than that, it is your duty to come close to them—as close to them spiritually as you were close to them in body when they were born.

None of this is mere theory that I am talking. It is proven, workable practice. I have not only seen it successfully carried out among the fathers and mothers and children of some of my friends, but I know from my own experience. It has been revealing, absorbing, to watch my boy through the years as he has heard the answers to his questions—the intense but everyday interest occasionally touched with wonder with which he has accepted the natural facts of life.

So I say again and again—get there first—forearm your children with truth.

(Another Sunday article will follow this one on the same subject.)

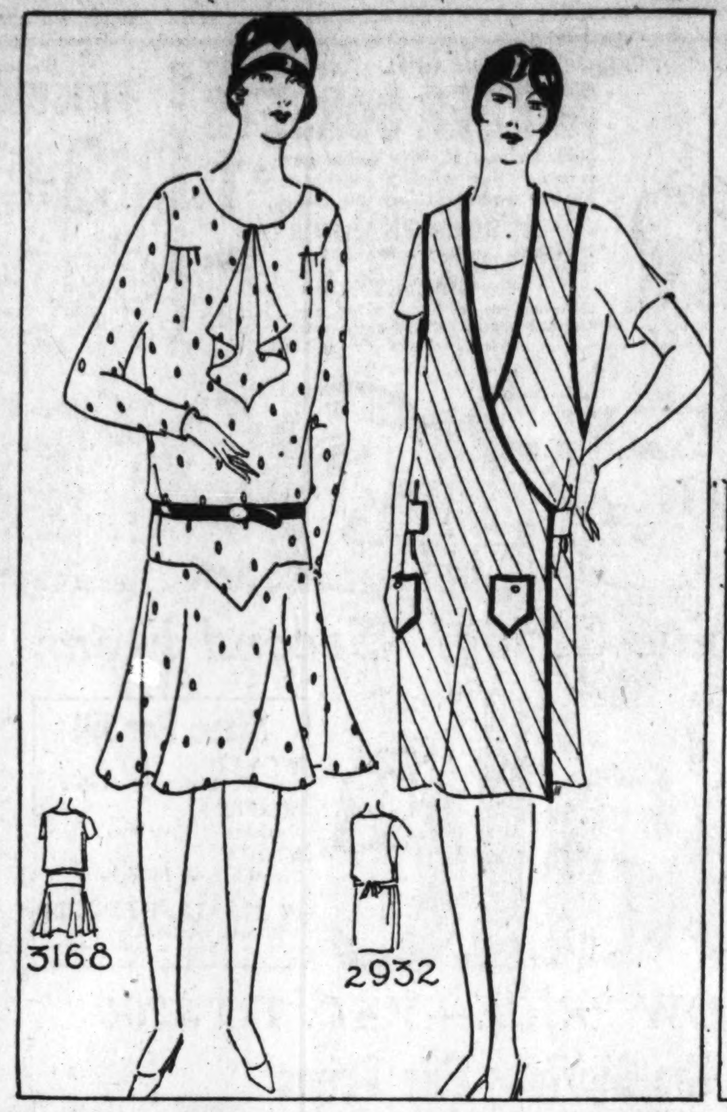
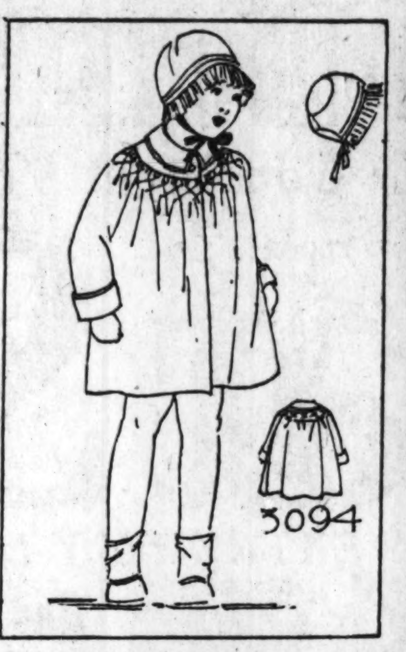
Patterns by Clotilde

Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.: Copyright, 1927, by The Chicago Tribune.





3168—Woman's and miss' dresses. Sizes 16 and 18 years and 36, 38, 40 and 42 inches bust measure. Size 36 requires 3⅜ yards of 40 inch material.

2932—Woman's and miss' aprons. Sizes 16 and 18 years and 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44 inches bust measure. Size 36 requires 3¾ yards of 36 inch material with 7 yards of binding.

3094—Child's coat and hat. Sizes ½, 1 and 2 years. The 1 year size requires 1⅝ yards of 40 inch material with 1⅛ yards of 40 inch lining.

HOW TO USE THE PATTERNS

A BECOMING, youthful slenderizing type of apron is shown in patern No. 2932. It entirely covers the dress, assuring perfect protection. The armholes are deep and comfortable, and there are two roomy patch pockets. This apron is made with reversible fronts, closing in surplice fashion, and having a narrow belt attached at either side of the front, and tying snugly in a bow in the back, holding the apron close to the dress at the waistline.

Blocked gingham, figured percale, plain or printed sateen and cotton pongee are attractive and practical materials for aprons. If this is made of a solid color, choose a contrasting shade for the binding. Or if a printed material is used choose some color used in the printed design for the binding.

There are many times when getting dinner that it is a convenience to dress before the meal, and with an apron like this to slip on over a nice frock no one need be worried about hurting it.

I imagine many mothers will be delighted to have a pattern of a baby's coat and bonnet like No. 3094. Kasha, cashmere or satin are any of the suitable materials and the directions that come with the pattern are so clear that there shouldn't be any difficulty in making them.

The coat is cut with a little round yoke that is seamed on the shoulders. And to this the coat is shirred or smocked. The full length, one piece sleeves are finished with rather deep, turned back cuffs, and the neck has a small, flat round collar. Crêpe is a favorite lining material, and choose a good quality of crêpe de chine, having it the same color as the coat, or a lighter shade of the same color.

The small bonnet or hat can be made of the coat material, and the strings will be pretty if you hemstitch the hems.

Pattern No. 3168 is for a delightful model featuring a collarless, round neckline completed with a cascading jabot, and an intriguing rippling skirt with circular fullness in the back as well as the front. The bodice part of this pretty dress is decidedly long waisted, and has an unusual line across the bottom in the front. Fullness is let in at either side of the armholes on the front, simulating a yoke.

The pattern provides for long or short sleeves, and the entire dress can be made without any trimming other than the finish at the neck, sleeve edges, the bottom of the skirt, and where skirt and waist are joined. The jabot may be made of the dress material and have picoted edges, and you no doubt will be able to find exactly the sort of narrow belt to wear with the dress. There never was a greater variety than the shops show today.

Crêpe de chine, faille crêpe, printed velveteen, wool crêpe and supple woolens are chosen by the smartly dressed woman for this style of dress.

IF BACK HURTS FLUSH KIDNEYS

When your kidneys hurt and your back feels sore, don't get scared and proceed to load your stomach with a lot of drugs that excite the kidneys and irritate the entire urinary tract. Keep your kidneys clean like you keep your bowels clean, by flushing them with a mild, harmless salts which helps remove the body's waste and stimulate them to their normal activity.

The function of the kidneys is to filter the blood. In 24 hours they strain from it 500 grains of acid and waste, so we can readily understand the vital importance of keeping the kidneys active.

Drink lots of good water—you can't drink too much; also get from any pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts. Take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning for a few days and your kidneys may then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help clean and stimulate clogged kidneys; also to neutralize the acids in the system so they are no longer a source of irritation, thus often relieving bladder weakness.

Jads Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to help keep their kidneys clean and active. Try this; also keep up the water drinking, and no doubt you will wonder what became of your kidney trouble and backache.

Answers to Love Queries

By Doris Blake

Too Young to Be Steady.

"Dear Miss Blake: I am 20 years of age and go around steadily with a fellow 19. I care for this fellow but feel he is too young for me. MARIE."

He's too young for a "steady," Marie. His mind isn't settled, and his tastes are likely to change any minute, so you don't want to depend upon him entirely for your good times.

Date Breaker.

"Dear Miss Blake: I go with a young man who has broken several dates with me. Should I keep on going with him? BLUE EYES."

Having allowed him to break dates before, you can't expect he will be particular about keeping them in the future. 'Twould be better to find another beau.

Eats Pork and Beans, Cucumbers—Sleeps Just Fine—No Gas

THREE PEOPLE out of every four are afraid to eat many of the foods they like. They know that if they do they are sure to suffer from gas, sourness or indigestion. Yet, as in the case of Mr. Brooks, this condition can often be overcome.

"Gas on the stomach and nervousness made it impossible for me to do anything but worry. I always felt bloated—nights I couldn't sleep. All this has been changed since taking Adlerika. I eat anything I want now—things like pork and beans, cucumbers and fried onions. My nervousness is gone and I sleep better. I sure can recommend Adlerika."—Geo. C. Brooks, Knoxville, Tenn.

Quick Action Surprises

AS GENTLY and naturally as taking a drink of water, Adlerika acts upon BOTH upper and lower bowels, bringing immediate relief from gas bloating, intestinal stasis and chronic constipation.

The very FIRST dose of Adlerika often brings out astonishing amounts of old waste matter from the intestinal canal. This poisonous matter may have been in the intestines a long time, causing gas, headache, sleeplessness and many other symptoms. A treatment of a few weeks with Adlerika often corrects chronic constipation and intestinal stasis, so that just a small dose, now and then, keeps the intestines and stomach in a most satisfactory condition.

What Doctors Say

DR. H. LOUIS SHOUB, B. Sc., well-known New York pathologist, after laboratory tests on living subjects, states: "Adlerika very markedly reduces the number of bacteria and colon bacilli. This feature increases the therapeutic value of Adlerika, because, in addition to its intestinal cleansing action, it inhibits the growth of these intestinal bacteria."

Dr. A. J. Lancaster, a physician of over a quarter century's active experience, makes this statement: "In the treatment of gastro-intestinal disorders, (where thorough evacuation is indicated), Adlerika has no equal."

Dr. Carl Weschcke, a graduate of the world-famous medical University of Heidelberg, Germany, in his private practice, first perfected the intestinal cleanser and carminative now known as Adlerika. It is a compound of a specially processed saline intestinal evacuant with buckthorn and cascara, together with glycerine and other ingredients which expel gas and have detergent action.

Adlerika, unlike most other medicines, acts upon BOTH upper and lower bowels. It is recognized by many physicians as the one dependable remedy for gas, intestinal stasis and chronic constipation, or whenever real intestinal cleansing is needed.

Even if your bowels move every day, Adlerika may surprise you by bringing out poisonous, gas-forming matter which you would never believe was in your system.

In just a single month, over one thousand men and women wrote that they obtained wonderful relief from even a short treatment with Adlerika. Many of them said that now, after all other treatments and medicines had failed, they are at last rid of gas, indigestion, sour stomach, sleeplessness, nervousness or other trouble due in their cases to intestinal stasis. And now, these folks say, they are again able to eat and enjoy the foods they like.

No matter what you have tried for the bowels and stomach, Adlerika will surprise you.

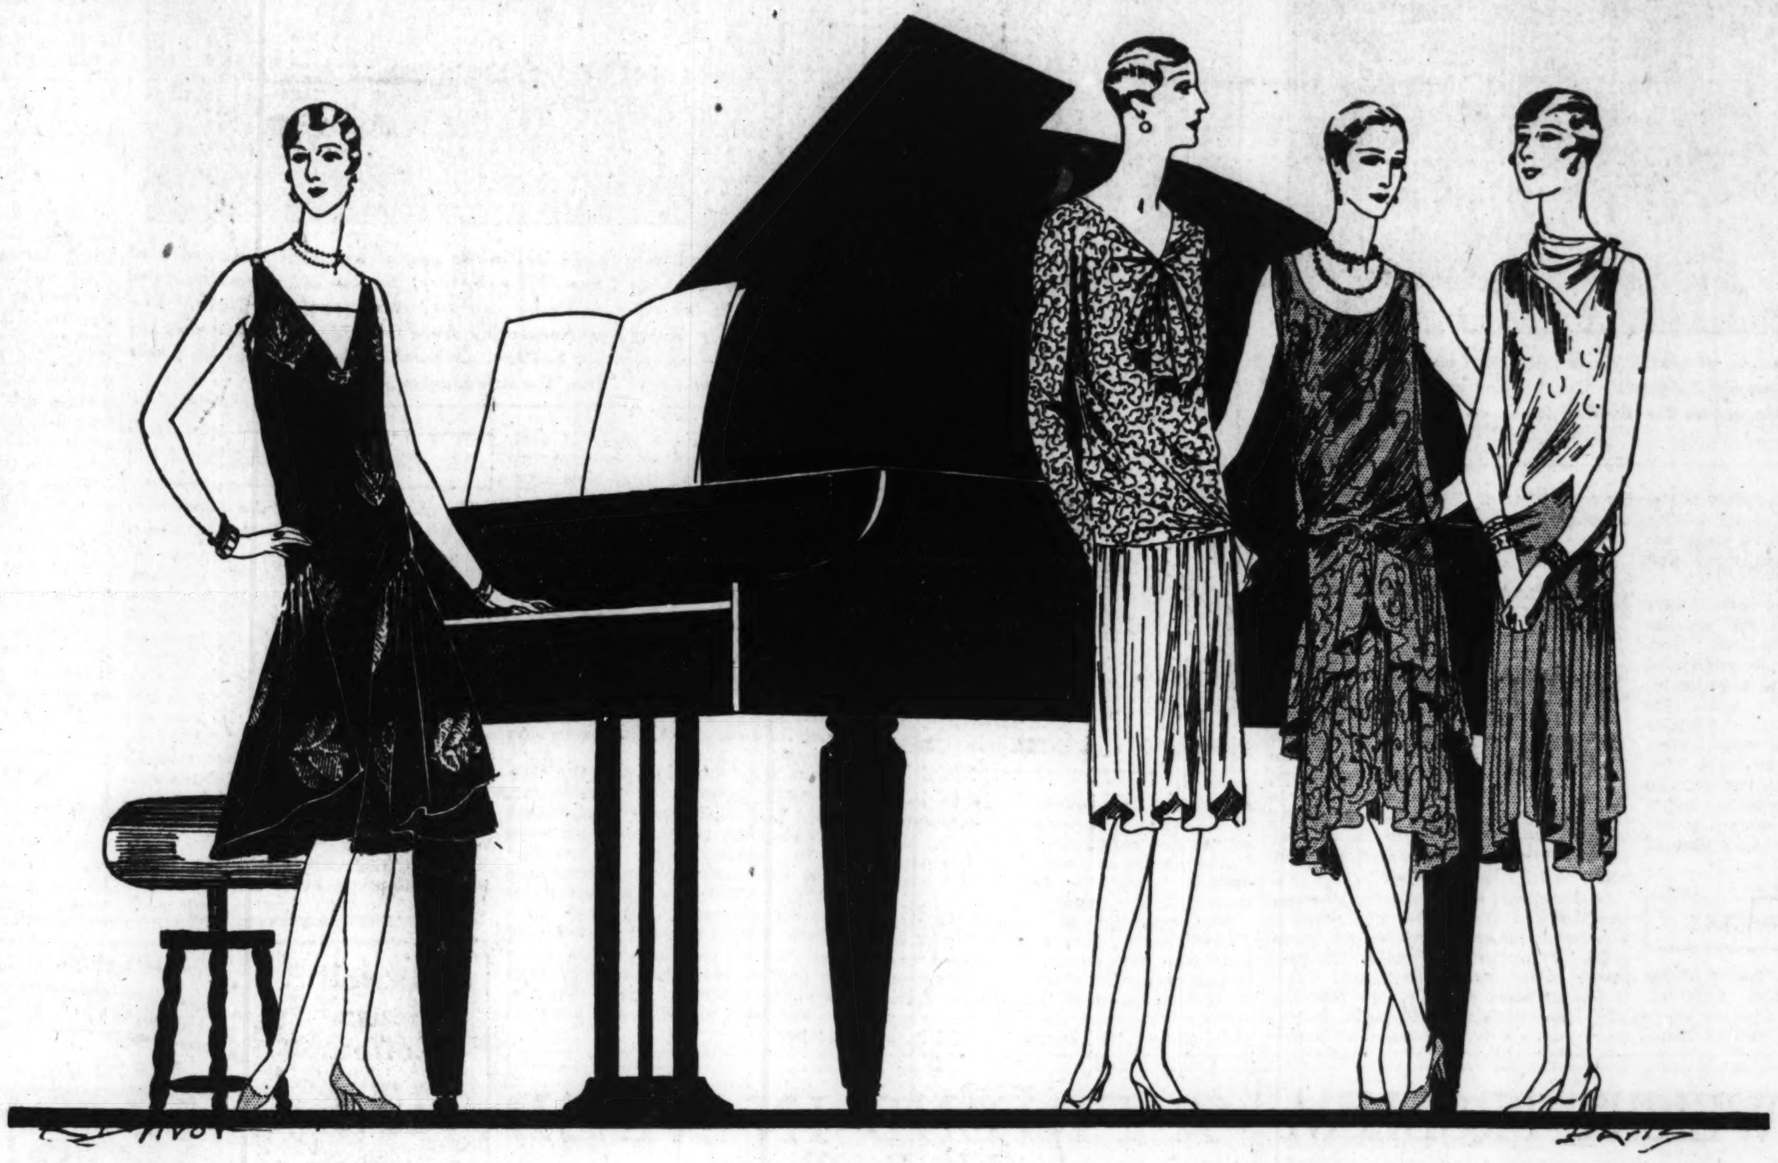
The Last Word in Paris Fashions

The Holiday Season Is Crowded with Dances. Here Are Frocks for the Afternoon Tea Dansant, and for the Formal Evening Ball.

BY BETTINA BEDWELL.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]



The bouffant dance dress, shown at the extreme left, has a new interpretation in this Cheruit model, made of black and silver taffeta.

Next, for the tea dansant, Suzanne Talbot has designed this long sleeved model with a lace blouse, draped and tied at the neck and on the left hip, and a skirt of cream georgette with a novel, uneven hemline.

Third, the dance frock of black lace is smart for many occasions and in many places. This Redfern model has a two-tiered skirt with a hemline longer in back than in front.

The dance dress, shown last, in two colors and two fabrics, is a Paris novelty. Louiseboulanger makes the blouse of pale pink same gauze and the skirt of dull blue velvet. A small gauze handkerchief is tied around the throat.

PARIS.—(Special Correspondence.)—In this epoch of specialists and specialties, fashions come in many divisions, each one a highly specialized part of the mode.

A good many women think that Fashion is one thing to all women, ladling out the healing tonic of style to pep up anemic chic. This is the cause of a great deal of the bad dressing that persists in spite of the constant and free education in the art of dress which is available to all women. We read, or hear, that something or other is the latest thing from Paris, and those who look on any style as a general practitioner, treating all cases in need of smart apparel, foolishly imagine all they have to do is to get this "latest thing" whatever it is, and they are all set for the season. This procedure is exactly like taking aspirin for a broken arm because it was so beneficial to your headache the other day. The treatment does; at best, no good, and, at worst, a great deal of harm.

Fashion, every season, consists of many specialties produced by numerous specialists for particular women and their peculiar needs. There is no such thing as one fashion for all women. And if there were, how ridiculous most of us would look. It is only because of the extreme elasticity of styles, and the special adaptation to each one, that women can be as generally well dressed as they are today.

Just as there are special modes of living, so there are particular styles suitable to them. And, going further, there are clothes for all of the pursuits of these many modes of life. The way to be "in style" is to be dressed according to the interpretation that fashion gives which is most suitable to your own environment and to the activities thereof. You yourself must be the analyst and determine to what section of the many sectioned styles of Paris you belong. That is so simple that any woman can do it without brain fag.

The next thing to do is to divide your day and evening into the number of varying parts any day is subject to, and choose your clothes for each of these parts. Your day may be one-third homework, one-third outside activities (such as shopping, teas, matinées, etc.), and one-third movies, dinners, dances, and so on. You will then need three types of costumes. And if you have more or less divisions, then you will want more or less varying costumes, to be smartly and appropriately frocked for each. Every woman should get busy and analyze her environment, following it up with this simple arithmetic of dividing her activities according to their clothes requirements. Then she is ready to choose her styles.

I have arranged four sketches today that are intended to give clothes ideas for one division which nowadays has a place in almost every woman's life. This is the subdivision given over to the dance. Since almost everybody dances, and since the times and places at and in which we step out to musical meter are many and varied, I have tried to make my selection of appropriate costumes cover as many as possible. Most of the dances that many of us go to are informal affairs, and some of them are in the afternoon, so that the character of the smart dance frock is often different from that of the true evening gown.

Such a dress is shown on our second figure. It is a frock designed especially for the dance by a Paris specialist in clothes creation. It is intended for thés dansants, restaurants, and other public places where jazz rhythm invites you to step out in public. Suzanne Talbot has made this dress with a soft blouse of ecru lace, having long sleeves and a draped yoke which ties in a big bow. The lower part of the bodice is pulled into folds, which are attached beneath a bow on the left hip. The skirt is made of cream colored georgette crêpe, shirred at the top and scalloped at the bottom. The shirred fullness is pressed into a series of columns which somewhat resemble plaits.

More formal is the Cheruit dance dress shown on our first figure at the left. This is the kind of frock the wise woman would choose who has need of a stunning dress, and one which may be worn at a good many particular dances. The material of which this model is made is stiff black taffeta encrusted with sprays of silver leaves. So clever are the line and the drapery of this frock it appears strikingly different from the ordinary dress. It has both individuality and chic and is suitable for repeated appearances.

The bodice is extra long; in fact, part of a slim and narrow full length slip. The décolletage is V shaped, and the tiny shoulder straps are made of rhinestones.

The bouffant skirt consists of wide ruffles, cartridge plaited at the top, and folded over on the left side to make a series of hemlines that add much to the charm of the model.

Our third model is a black lace dance frock from Redfern, which combines such extreme simplicity with such exquisite refinement that it may be worn for both exacting and informal occasions. This type of dress is especially suitable for the woman who is not quite young. The blouse, which really blouses, is not in any way adorned other than by its beautiful fabric and lines.

The skirt consists of two ruffles that are very long in back and that rise to make the hemline and the tunic decidedly shorter in front. The girdle is made of a wide band of lace, draped closely around the hips in the Spanish manner, and attached under a jeweled buckle at the center front.

Our fourth model is a dance frock from Louiseboulanger, one that is youthful and that is designed for the most exacting and exciting dances which come in the winter season for the young girl of not over 25 summers and winters. The blouse of this frock is made of pale pink lamé gause, and it has practically no décolletage.

A small handkerchief of the same gause is tied close about the throat. The wide, oddly shaped girdle is draped over the right hip and smoothly fitted over the left. This girdle dips in a point at the left side, front and back.

The skirt is made of dull blue panne velvet, the material of the girdle, and it is shirred so that the hemline is extremely wide. This hemline is uneven, being much longer at the sides than in the center front and back. It falls in a series of small descending folds.

HISTORICAL AMERICA by CLIFFORD RAYMOND

George Rogers Clark

VIRGINIA invited Indiana, other states of the old northwest territory and Kentucky to join this month in a commemorative visit to the birthplace of George Rogers Clark, and such citizens as could accept the invitation were at the exercises near Charlottesville, Va., Nov. 19, the one hundred and seventy-fifth anniversary of Clark's birth.

The sesquicentennial of his work in the taking and keeping of the debatable territory west and north of the Ohio river, which he began in 1778 by the invasion of Illinois, will have celebration next year and the year following in Illinois, Kentucky, and Indiana.

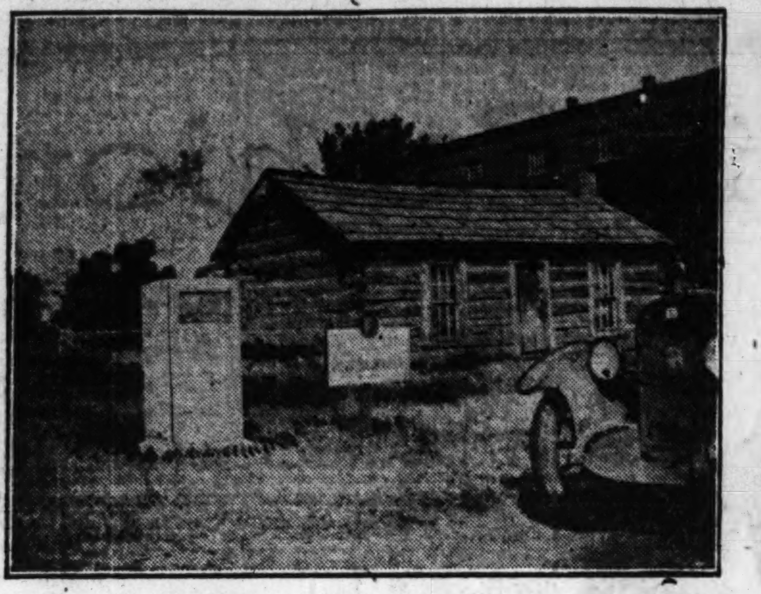
A NOTABLE FAMILY

John and Ann Rogers Clark, well to do tidewater Virginians, removing back into the Piedmont, had a notable family. Of their ten children, six were sons. Five sons were officers in the revolution. One was George, who conquered the northwest territory. Another was Gen. Jonathan Clark. A third was William Clark, later general, who with Meriwether Lewis made the exploration to the Pacific after the Louisiana purchase under President Jefferson.

Jefferson's home at Monticello adjoined the Clark property in Albemarle county.

George Rogers Clark is buried in Cave Hill cemetery in Louisville. It is a beautifully kept cemetery with conspicuous monuments to solvent respectability put up in mortuary reverence and respect.

In this large cemetery it is not easy to find Clark's grave. All the guards and grave diggers know his resting place is there and they know where it is, but when a grave has only a small headstone, the simplest of little markers, it is difficult to follow directions. The really great man of the northwest has no memorial over his grave except such a headstone and the D. A. R. marker.



Fort Sackville, the site of which on the Wabash river in Vincennes is thus marked, was captured by Clark after he had marched a force of 130 men from Kaskaskia across the flooded lands of southern Illinois in February, 1779.

To find his resting place one should be told to look for the red granite shaft of his brother Jonathan. Gen. Jonathan Clark, by some oddity of memorial regard, has a monument. George Rogers Clark has none. He has the obscurity of any estimable citizen whose good works were known only to the family which lost him. All about him sentiment has put up great and durable works to the memory of men and women whose import to their time and nation was that of other men and women.

GREATEST OF PIONEERS

Two of his brothers are buried alongside him, Jonathan and Edmund. Jonathan has the red granite shaft but all three have the simple headstones. That of George Rogers Clark is marked:

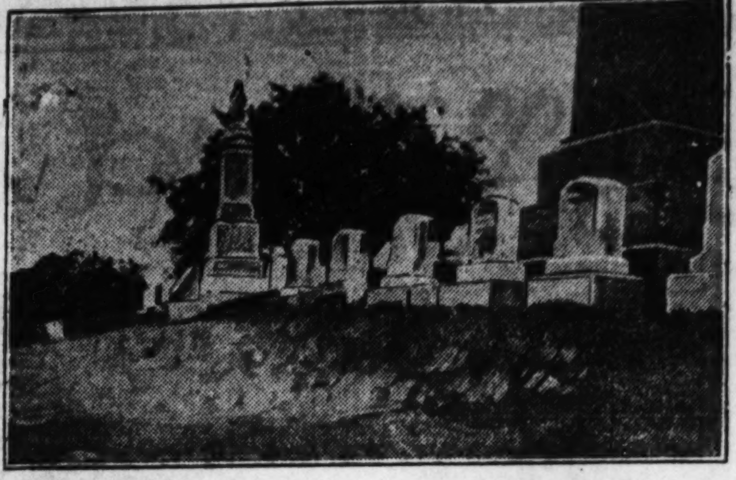
Gen'l George Rogers Clark
Born O. S., Nov. 9, 1752
Died February 13, 1818.

"O. S." means Old Style. The date by the present calendar was ten days later, Nov. 19. The illustration shows the extent to which the generations north and south of the Ohio have indicated their appreciation of the man whose vision, courage, tact, diplomacy, loyalty and fortitude combined to make the first effective unscrambling of the elements of confusion and disorder governing what is now the midwest of the United States.

It is difficult in this Louisville cemetery to find his grave, but when it has been found, there is the burial place of the great trans-Appalachian father of the American republic. Clark is the greatest of American pioneers. The Louisiana purchase in a way hangs upon his activities. The Pacific reaches of the country may be seen as American because of his foresightedness and resolution. What was the United States of America, and to what natural boundaries did these states, even if free, extend?

Portrait of George Rogers Clark.

The geographical content of the United States seems a simple work of ordination now, except as one sees that it has even now a peculiar formation in that it ceases to use the St. Lawrence river as a natural boundary throughout its course. Something that was not a simple work of ordination made that curious splitting up of territory to the north of New England.



The small headstone to the left in the row of five marks the grave of George Rogers Clark in Cave Hill cemetery, Louisville. The large red granite shaft to the right is to his brother, Gen. Jonathan Clark. The Daughters of the American Revolution have placed the headstones of George, Jonathan and another brother, Edmund. The great Clark's grave has no other memorial to honor the achievements of the man.

It was such a thing as this that all of Clark's life work was thrown against. If he had not done it some one else might have, but of that no one can safely judge. There was no one to carry the New England line up to the St. Lawrence river. If no one had carried the Virginia line west and north of the Ohio river it might have been that there now would be on this North American continent a diversity of nations comparable to that of Europe.

It was not inevitable that the thirteen English colonies, for the most part confined east of the mountains, should have had, even when free, any more than the territory over which they at that time claimed jurisdiction and authority. There was no inevitable reason for assuming that Great Britain, even if relinquishing control over these original colonies, would relinquish control over the territory west of them which already by act of parliament had been joined to the province of Quebec.

FORMERLY QUEBEC

There was nothing in the demonstrable prospects of the colonials which gave them a guaranty beyond their administrative rights when they rebelled. Great Britain had no inevitable reason to throw into their territorial possession a region she had denied belonged to them before they took to rebellion. The northwest territory which is now Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan and Wisconsin was Quebec. It was not Pennsylvania, Virginia, Maryland or New England. It was French Canada recognized as such by the British government, settled by Frenchmen and governed under French laws even under British control.

Illinois had French towns under British government at Kaskaskia and Cahokia. Indiana has another such French town at Vincennes. It was British governed Quebec and the revolution as a revolt of eastern colonies did not have a thing to do with it in the essence of its principles and declarations. The Spanish had Louisiana and the Mississippi. The British had this extension of Quebec down to the Ohio from the lakes and the revolution was to prove whether the colonies in their own territory could or could not win their fight to conduct their own affairs. But it was not in the avowed principles of the revolution to gain more territory and run other peoples' affairs.

WINS NEW TERRITORY

That is exactly what George Rogers Clark proposed to do and did do. He carried a successful campaign of territorial acquisition into enemy territory. He won the territory and in spite of subsequent adversities it was held.

Gens. Arnold and Montgomery, Thomas and Sullivan, statesmen such as Franklin and Chase and Carroll of Carrollton went to Canada with muskets and rifles and with printing presses and persuasions to try to win one-tenth of the resources to the American republic which Clark conquered and forever sealed to the United States with less than two hundred men.

What Arnold's men did in going up the Kennebec and crossing the Lake Megantic carry into the valley of the Chaudiere to assault Quebec, Clark and his smaller force equaled not only in crossing the unknown lands of Illinois from Fort Massae to take Cahokia and Kaskaskia but in the greater act of fortitude in crossing again the marsh lands and swollen rivers to take Vincennes and thus take from the British any title to claim to the northwest territory.

ACTING FOR VIRGINIA

Clark was acting for Virginia. He was the commander of a Virginian army commissioned by Gov. Patrick Henry of Virginia during the revolutionary war to protect Kentucky, which was Virginian territory, from Indian attack stimulated by the British posts, principally on Detroit.

If it had not been done successfully even Kentucky might not have survived such attacks and the American frontier when the treaty of Paris was considered, might not have gone beyond the proclamation line of 1763 when it was decreed by the ministry of George III. that the English colonies should not go west of the origin of streams flowing into the Atlantic. All the great watershed of the American mid region south of the lakes flows into the Gulf of Mexico.

George Rogers Clark by his own personal perceptions, activities, and sacrifices is the direct architect of the destiny which kept the United States free to extend to the Pacific. It may have been in inevitabilities above personalities. It might have been in the order of things impossible to avoid the present sweep of the United States. Of that it is difficult to judge. It is to be seen where checks were maintained and where inevitability has accommodated itself to human direction.

UNPLEASANT STORY

Without Clark there might have been another Europe here, with Great Britain, France, and Spain much better established as to navigation, resources and territory than they are in Africa.

There is no question in all the involved and controversial history of the event that Clark was the outstanding figure. He was the man who by sheer personality, some such as Washington's, controlled men and events. He suffered from criticism and contempt, from slander and scandal, much from lack of support and neglect. He has been condemned as a drunkard. His obligations were dishonored. Men who trusted government to be honest as he did, such men as Pollock and Vigo, were ruined. It is an unpleasant story and the whole tale is none the more pleasant for Clark's unmemorialized grave in the Great Cave Hill cemetery of Louisville.

SCIENCE STUDIES THE WEIGHT PROBLEM

And Makes Interesting Discoveries About Obesity and Excessive Thinness.

by Antoinette Donnelly

NEW YORK.—[Special Correspondence.]—Yes, there is a difference between obesity and overweight. You cannot say that all persons of superfluous weight are so because of overfeeding and sedentary habits, or a combination of both.

At the Michael Reese hospital, Chicago, an interesting study among patients, among the student nurses and other members of the staff, on obesity and overweight has been going on for the last seven years, a report on which is offered in a recent issue of Hospital Topics and Buyer.

"We have to admit that certain obese persons are right when they declare they cannot lose weight even on greatly limited diets," states Dr. Strouse. "Our studies have proved that there is a condition of constitutional obesity in which the weight gain upsets all our accepted relationships between food intake, energy expenditure, and weight."

Also, Dr. Strouse claims that a difference has to be admitted, at least in degree, between obesity and overweight. Overweight usually results from overfeeding, sedentary habits, or a combination of both. Some cases of obesity unquestionably follow the same causes.

"This group of overweight persons is benefited by a disciplinary regimen of limited, regulated food intake and increased activity," the doctor states.

"It is the smaller contingent of obstinate overweight that consistently resists all ordinary methods of correction—the cases of 'unexplained' obesity that figure so prominently in medical literature, in which the tendency to accumulate and deposit fat seems to be quite independent of any of the usual causes of increased weight that prompted the series of experiments begun in 1920.

The attempt was made to discover the particular manner in which the fat man utilizes his food which enables him to save and store food components that the excessively thin man either converts into free energy available for work or eliminates as excess material.

Among the interesting facts in obesity revealed by the experiment is that both over eating and under exercise are common faults, yet excessive obesity is comparatively rare. Conversely, another extreme is observed in a fairly large percentage of healthy but thin persons whose food intake is constantly in excess of their calculated needs, yet who cannot gain weight under any circumstances.

Two Clinical Cases.

A clinical test was made on a thin, healthy man of 39, an active worker who ate normal food and slept six or seven hours out of the twenty-four. On a four week's vacation he increased his food intake by half, mostly in carbohydrates, slept from ten to fourteen hours a day, and reclined quietly in the open air most of his waking hours. At the end of this period he was considerably refreshed, but he had made no weight gain whatever.

Another experiment concerned a girl of 15, excessively heavy, whose basal metabolism was below normal. On a carefully planned diet considerably below her calculated basal requirements and with no restriction of bodily activity, she gained 3.3 pounds in sixteen days.

This study expanded into a major research project in metabolism and Dr. Strouse and Dr. Chi Che Wang have in readiness for publication now a statement of far reaching importance on the relationship of metabolism to human types and body build.

Of this they are positive: There is a constitutional type of obesity, requiring something more than weighed and measured rations or the specific regulation of diet by other means.

During the experiment, the importance of serving tasteful meals to those on diets was emphasized.

"When diets are not ample, particular measures are required to keep the patients pleased," was the theory on which the experiments were worked. The patient undergoing dietary management, it was realized, should not be discouraged by unbalanced, unattractive or unduly reduced portions. The following menus, chosen at random, the report points out, show skill in the construction of low calory diets.

Extremes in Metabolism.

During the period covered by these experiments, the studies on obesity have included many patients and more volunteer subjects. They ranged from 30 per cent under weight to 140 per cent over weight. From these studies the relationship between food intake and body weight appears to present two extremes of the same metabolic problems: In the very thin healthy person who habitually eats more than his basic requirements, yet who fails under any circumstances to put on weight, and the obese person who manages somehow to store fat on a minimum diet.

Work is still in progress on the hospital test to find whether glandular extracts other than thyroid have an effect upon weight reduction. This glandular work is recognized as of much clinical importance at the present time, since there are afloat many unsubstantial claims and much untrustworthy advertising regarding it in relation to obesity.

The report hints that individual treatment will eventually replace former generalization and that "eating for efficiency" will be a specific procedure instead of a catch phrase of food faddists.

Bright Sayings of Husbands and Wives

The snappy comeback of the other half when cornered has often been a source of wonder to husbands and wifes! The husband or the wife has come across with a bright saying that will never be forgotten by the other half of the matrimonial sketch. What was that bright saying, Mr.? Mrs.? Send it to us, and we'll pay you $1 for it if we print it. Address Bright Sayings of Husbands and Wives, The Chicago Tribune, Chicago.

Turn About.

Young Johnson got married. On his first pay day he gave his wife thirty dollars of his thirty-five dollar salary. The next week he reversed the process.

"But, George," protested his wife, "how do you expect me to get along on five dollars?"

"Hanged if I know," he replied. "I had a rotten time myself last week. Now it's your turn." G. W. A.

That Accounts for It.

A FRIEND IN NEED

by Sally Joy Brown

APPEALS FOR BABY THINGS ARE POURING IN

WE are always happy and willing to help the babies—and right now they need help badly. When we think of the infant clothing, cribs, carriages, and baby beds which are being outgrown every day in Chicago before they have lost all their usefulness, is there any reason why we should let this condition exist another day?

At present, for example, we have one woman whose husband is dead and who has a three months old baby. Buying a baby buggy is out of the question.

Again, we have a number of expectant mothers who would look forward to the advent of the new life with great joy and happiness if only they could see how the necessities for the newcomer would be provided. Can we let such mothers be worried when among us there are many whose children have outgrown their first outfits and we can give the clothing and bedding to help another little one just as easily as we could put it away where it would accomplish nothing?

We have appeals and needs for anything and everything useful in baby care. Bedding, beds, cribs, bassinets, and clothing can be put into service immediately to relieve the desperate need.

How easily we can turn distress into happiness—those of us with little children in the family. An infant in any family in comfortable circumstances seldom wears out its clothes. It outgrows them, and there they are—ready for a lot more service, if only we give them.

Think of the need there is right now, please, and let me know you will contribute.

Offers Pair of Galoshes.

"I have a pair of black galoshes, size 8, which I will gladly give to some woman who needs them. MISS S."

With cold weather and snowy walks here for a long stay, we'll all need overshoes. If these are in your size and you can't afford a pair, let me know.

For an Invalid.

"I am wondering if you have any man who could use an abdominal truss. It is in good condition and some one suffering from hernia might be glad to have it. MRS. O. H."

Thank you so much, Mrs. O. H.! I know one of our invalid readers will be grateful to you for contributing to his comfort.

Mr. E. M. Merchant of 665 43rd St., Louisville, Ky. is one of the champion horseshoe pitchers of the country. Here he tells how REM made a perfect score against his cough.

REM scores a "ringer"

for Champion Horseshoe Pitcher

"I was recently laid up for a week with a bad cold and a cough that I got travelling around pitching horseshoes," says Mr. Merchant. "I do that a lot for I was Kentucky's Ringer Champion in 1924. One Sunday morning I noticed a REM ad in the paper and decided I'd try it, for what I had been using hadn't helped me any. It proved to be the best cough medicine I'd ever used. By the time I'd taken two doses, my cough was considerably better. Before long it was entirely gone."

Grateful users recommend REM. It's different. It clings to your throat, soothes the irritation and quiets the cough. Pleasant to take and perfectly harmless. "Money back," if it doesn't help you.

Insist on REM! Remember, its effectiveness is largely due to a special ingredient, not in ordinary cough syrups.

DISAPPOINTMENT.

[From Our New York Correspondence.]

One misses western men, my dear.
There are Beau Brummels, D'Artagnans and Cyranos,
With all the kick—
Boiled out of them.
I feel like a little girl
Who sees, dismayed,
Her doll's—unbreakable.

CURTAIN:

[Mamie Hickey's shorthand diary has been telling her experiences in the chorus of a Broadway show for almost four weeks.]

" Tell me not in mournful numbers
Life is but an empty dream!"
'Tis a nightmare full of horrors;
Oft one rouses with a scream.
And "the saddest words," I'm thinking,
Ever pen or type can write
I've just lamped upon the call board
Scrawled "This show will close tonight."

STYMIED.

Fate, can't I coax you to make me an actress?
Make me one quickly, I earnestly pray,
Else, as a proper maid, how I can I ever
Do fullest justice to this negligee?
Rainbow hued gauzes must languish, defeated,
Drooping, secluded, where traffic is rare.
Only a third act could get this gown over—
Fate, must I waste it on dumb desert air?

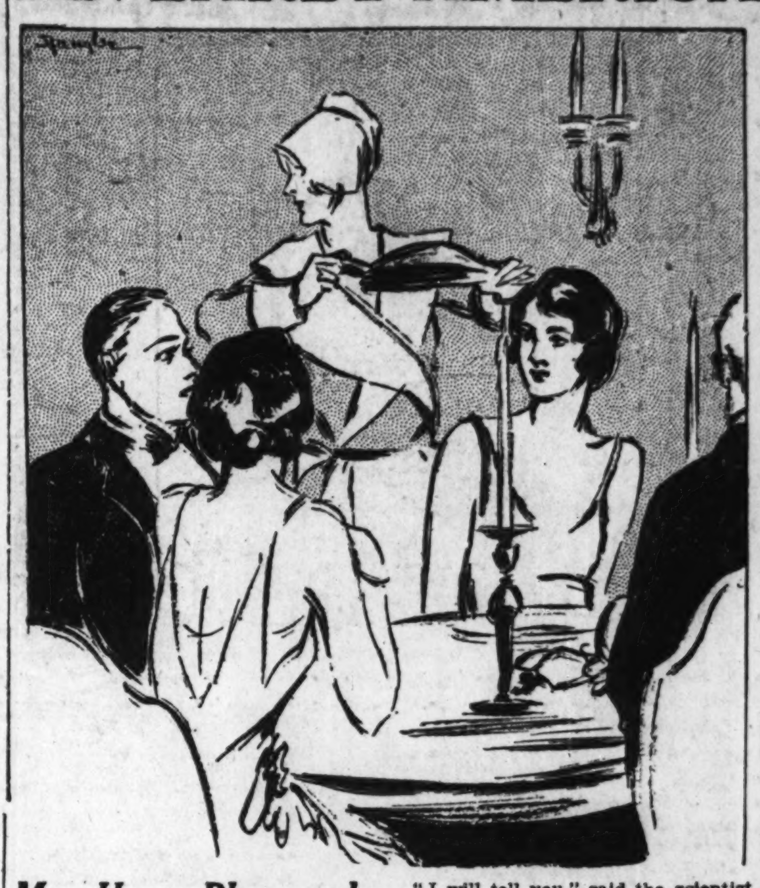
AN EARLY AMERICAN DINNER



Mrs. Harry Plans and Gives One for the Epicurean Delight of a Visiting Frenchman

By Persis Standish.

A DISTINGUISHED French scientist who came to America on business was more or less pushed by Mr. Boss into Harry's care. Of course, Mrs. Harry was delighted, because she is more or less inclined to be a Franco-maniac in a mild way and because the scientist himself proved to be a charming person, rather youngish and having a delightful sense of humor.

Mr. Boss already had introduced him to a number of persons besides the Harrys, and so, of course, he was having a fairly busy time. He dined with the Harrys several times en famille and went with them to the few restaurants where the cooking would not make a Frenchman cringe—none of them fashionable, of course.

His Kind of Girls.

After she had got to know him pretty well, Mrs. Harry proposed giving a dinner party for him. She said: "I wanted to wait until I knew whether you expect women to be well informed or pretty before asking them to dinner to entertain you. I want you to have a good time, you know."

"Do you know now what kind of girls I like?" asked the scientist.

"Yes," said Mrs. Harry, "I think I can guess that you like a reasonable combination of intelligence and looks."

"I will tell you," said the scientist, "just what kind of girls I like."

"Well?" said Mrs. Harry.

"American girls," said the Frenchman, gallantly.

"I like everything about your country except one thing," he continued, "the elaboration, the exaggerated way in which most people shower a stranger with lavishness. You alone of all the persons I have met have not striven to impress me with your wealth and influence."

"O, well," said Mrs. Harry, "I have neither, you see."

An American Dinner.

"You wouldn't if you had," said the scientist rather cryptically, "but I will allow you to give the dinner party if you will promise me that it shall be simple—not more than six persons and not more than four courses. As simple as possible and your everyday linen—no lace, madam—and no gold table service."

Mrs. Harry laughed: "You make things easy for me, indeed. I think I shall give you a truly American dinner."

"O, that would be delightful," he said. "I shall be no end grateful for that and I shall be able to tell about it, when I go home, as the happiest time of my visit."

"Had you not better wait until afterwards," said Mrs. Harry, "to say nice things about it—or do you consider that it will be easier to say them now?"

"To show you how really anxious I am to enjoy the party, I hope you mean to give it this week."

So Wednesday night was settled and Mrs. Harry began on Monday to plan her Pilgrim Father dinner. She drove out into the country and got a turkey for the main course. She had no appetizer, because that would count as a course and she did not intend either to repeat French recipes or compete with them.

So the first course was black bean soup with cornsticks; the second was roast turkey, cranberry jelly, and mashed potatoes. She remembered that the French do not like to eat their vegetables and meat together and that there probably was no Pilgrim Father salad, and so she had a clever vegetable course for the third. It consisted of succotash made of tomatoes, corn, and lima beans, and with this she served hot baking powder biscuits, although she was in doubt as to whether they did not originate at a much later date and from a southerly direction. However, she didn't have time to ask Miss Eddington about them and she needed them to make the course good. For dessert she had pumpkin pie and cheese.

The dinner was a great success and the scientist said he believed the pilgrims Mrs. Harry represented at the feast must have had French blood somewhere, because nothing so good as that menu could have come from England or, in fact, from anywhere else by ancestry except la belle France.

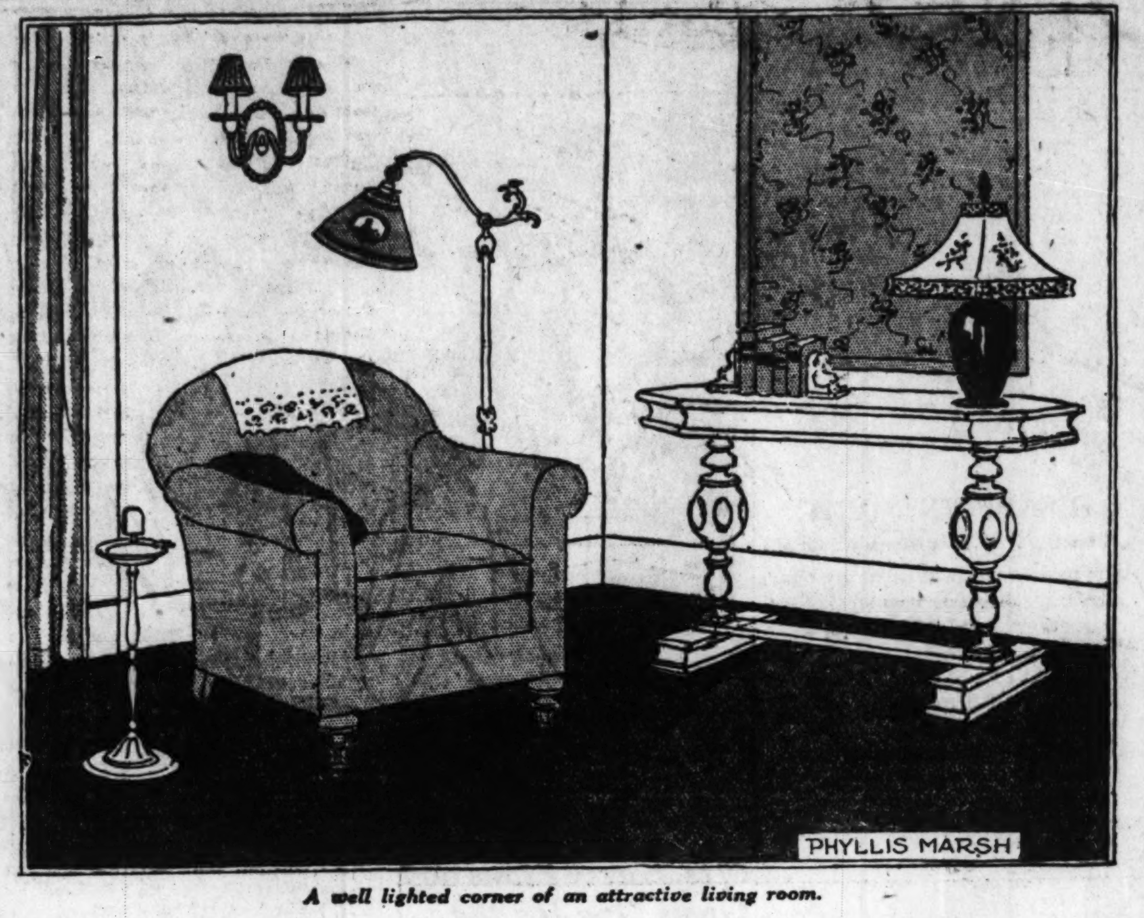
The HOME HARMONIOUS

Lamps and Lighting Fixtures, If Carefully Chosen, May Make the Simplest Room Charming

Phyllis Marsh will be glad to assist the homemaker in any problems pertaining to home building and home furnishing. Address your letter to Phyllis Marsh, The Tribune, Chicago. Inclose stamped addressed envelope for personal reply.

By Phyllis Marsh.



A well lighted corner of an attractive living room.

THERE is nothing quite so charming or decoratively effective in any room as attractively shaded lamps or lighting fixtures. Whether they be in the form of wall sconces or side lights, central chandeliers, simple drop lights, table or floor lamps, they may be capable of either making or marring the decorative quality of any room.

For the average home the suspended central ceiling fixture in the living room is never as satisfactory or decorative as side lights, floor and table lamps. However, in the dining room it is quite appropriate to use the chandelier type of central lighting fixture which boasts of several upright electric candles. These should be arrayed with small shades to shield the eyes from all unnecessary glare. There are various other types of suspended lighting fixtures designed for use in halls, bedrooms, kitchens, and bathrooms.

Artificial light must be so distributed that it will be convenient to those using it and at the same time give a room a balanced appearance. For instance, do not have one end of a room well lighted while the other is in shadow. The room will lack balance and that quality of repose necessary to the comfort of the occupants.

In selecting any type of floor or table lamp it is well to remember that it is going to serve a two fold purpose. First, it is primarily to be used to read, sew, or write by, and, secondly, it must be artistic and of such type that it will fit into the style of room in which it is to be used. Direct or unshaded light should always be avoided, as it is most trying to the eyes and too glaring ever to be artistic.

No living or dining room is ever complete without its sconces or sidelights. There are various styles and designs for the house of colonial spirit, for the house of Spanish or Italian character, and for the house of early English or French peasant or cottage style, as well as for the home of nondescript character. The number of sidelights used and their size will be determined by the size of the room. It is always advisable to shade them with appropriate looking shields or shades in either parchment, silk, or chintz, as their style demands. If this cannot be done, then select frosted bulbs and those of amber tint, rather than white.

With the sidelights chosen, the next thought of the home decorator will be toward the selecting of the necessary table and floor lamps for the living room. Every living room has or should have its various individual groupings which, when carefully arranged, make an interesting ensemble and complete unit of the room. These groupings require for use as well as decoration the support of lamps, either in the form of table or floor lamps. After the choice of style has been made, it is well to see that the floor lamp is of proper height for the chair at which it is to be placed. Both from the standpoint of proportion in relation to the chair and the comfort of the person reading it is essential that the height be correct.

A shade of extreme color is never satisfactory to read, sew or write by and should never be used. This does not mean, however, that it cannot be of some soft warm tint of yellow, orange or light rose, but it does mean that the extreme inside lining should be either white or cream. A shade which is narrow at the top and flares considerably at the bottom will radiate light farther than one of more upright lines or of bell shape style. One of the most simple, inexpensive and satisfactory types of floor lamps for reading purposes is of wrought iron and is usually topped by a parchment paper shade. Then there are numerous other styles of floor lamps such as the junior, bridge, and piano lamp.

Table lamps and their shades are many and varied and in styles and designs appropriate for all types of rooms. There are simple styles and elaborate and formal ones and each has its proper place in the scheme of decoration. If the base of the lamp is pronounced in its decoration, it is advisable to select a shade of less ornate character, but if it is of simple style, then the shade may be more decorative. The shade of any lamp should look like an integral part of the lamp rather than an appendage simply added on to it for use without thought as to proportion, balance, harmony and unity. Many an artistic lamp is spoiled by being adorned with a shade which is too large and too ornate for the base. The contour of the shade should be in keeping with the contour of the base if the two are to become a harmonious unit.

It is also necessary that a table lamp be in correct proportion to the table upon which it is being used, and that it is neither too high nor too low for the comfort of those using its light. The shade should come down far enough on the lamp base to just cover the socket. It is especially essential when selecting silk and georgette for the making of shades, that the material be as attractive looking in daylight as by artificial light.

When selecting several lamps for a room, introduce various styles for variety and do not choose all the floor lamps of the same height. More than two table lamps of the same design are not advisable and these two should be arranged in bisymmetrical balance on a long davenport table. Small lamps at each end of a mantel over a fireplace may be arranged in the same manner, which is also an attractive way to adorn a dressing table with Dresden style figurine lamps.

When selecting a shade frame and the necessary materials with which to cover it, there are several questions the home decorator must ask herself. It is assumed that the lamp base is already selected and that it is in absolute harmony both in color and character with the room in which it is to be used.

1. Is the size and shape of shade frame in proportion and appropriate to the style of the lamp base?
2. Are you selecting the correct type of materials for the character of the base?
3. Is the color suitable and does it look as attractive when lighted as when not?
4. And last but not least, is the trimming appropriate with the entire ensemble?

Today's illustration displays a comfortable spot in a homelike, nondescript type of living room, which owes a great deal of its charm and attractiveness to the fact that it has been illuminated most carefully, carrying out every detail as to utility and decoration.

The TRIBUNE COOK BOOK

Fandango Styles in Foods with Garlic Perfumes and Other Spanish Exuberances Are Coming Vogues.

All recipes have been scientifically tested by Miss Eddington with current market materials and are indorsed by her.

SPANISH influences in art, architecture, music, grill work for screens and balconies, smoothed back glossy hair, garlic odors, etc., have been accumulating for some time until now they tell us we are to have a Spanish winter.

Spanish we may be, then, but there are good reasons why it is easier said than done, especially if we would have anywhere nearly the classic dishes of Spain and those consistent with the exuberance of that romantic figure of the Spanish cavalier with his guitar singing to the dark lady with a rose in her teeth. Spain has, too, some of the most romantic geographical names in all the world—Salamanca, Cadiz, Andalusia with its practical Malaga and many others, and perhaps their foods were up to these names. Yet foods were certainly as diverse over the whole of the ancient Iberian peninsula as Spanish foods are in this modern world—greatly diversified, because Spain has embraced the islands of the sea, Mexico, South America, etc.

The Roman eminences, Seneca, Martial, Lucan, were born in a highly cultivated Spain, and in no Latin works can we find more about foods than in Martial's. I once went through 600 pages of his translated poems to learn about the foods and eating of Martial's day, and it was entertaining no end. In those days men would almost sell their souls to get dinner invitations to great establishments. But we might even go back of Rome for influences discoverable in the common life of Spain. The peninsula was popular and worked by the Phoenicians, and since we can find in Marseilles, France, ways of cooking fish traced back to the inventors of the alphabet, we may easily believe that the Phoenicians influenced cooking in Spain greatly in their day, and a bit to this day.

And when the Moors came into Spain with their arts and sciences and great agricultural industry they set up many things, very likely a dietetics, for they knew how to live. They were theologians and philosophers as well as scientists. Not all the influences by any means went out from Aragon and Castille, although princely peoples have always found a way of living in a princely fashion. Malaga was Moorish and we have Malaga grapes and Malaga raisins to this day, and there have been marvelous Malaga wines. The Moors were perfectionists, and probably it was they that dried fruit and packed it more perfectly than ony one else ever has and passed the knowledge on. And besides the raisins, there have been delicious dried dates and figs sent out from the port of Malaga.

We have reason to believe that Pheonician influences lasted in Barcelona, which is in one of the great eating provinces in Spain today, our foreign correspondents tell us, with restaurants in unbelievable numbers. Granada has been great for its pleasant foods as well as for its remarkably romantic name and fame. The emblem of the city is the pomegranate, a fruit of eminence in Spain and more popular with us each year.

We have reason to believe that the surest way—but it is certainly a laborious one—to learn about what foods to set up in Spanish ways is to read books of travel on Spain—some are lovely to read—Spanish histories, and to study a Spanish dictionary, and also to go to museums where there are Spanish things to see, including pots and "braseros" or braising pans.

Spanish Cook Books.

As to Spanish cook books we would say that they are difficult to peruse, for we have a shelf full, gathered variously from Cuba to California, many of them printed in Spain. [There are many words in them not to be found in dictionaries, yet the dictionaries give many definitions which are equivalent to recipes.]

Judging by the first recipes given in the majority of these books, sauces are the leading items in Spanish cookery, although we know that it really is Spanish stews that rank as most national. But sauces and stews may be quite closely related, and Spain has given to universal cookery the brown sauce, which contains as many ingredients as the national olla or olla prodida.

Spanish Fruits.

The Seville orange and others of Spanish growing were familiar to the world and eating literature long before the Spaniards planted an orange tree on what is now United States soil, and, judging by what we see in Cuba and California, and what we have read about Mexico, anywhere where Spanish influences have prevailed, the orange and lemon have received loving attention and widest use, and appreciation.

In a hundred year book on Spain is to be found reference to the Spanish proverb concerning the fit time to eat oranges, which characterizes them as gold in the morning, silver at noon, and lead at night. You may call your morning orange juice, then, a Spanish "refresco."

Cuba seems to have fruits in endless variety, and it is perhaps the Spanish influence there, as well as climatic judgment, that has led to their serving their fruit wealth in ways unusual to us, and to serve many fruit juices and purées profusely in places corresponding to our ice cream parlors or "fountains." Cocoanut, pineapple, and banana are eaten in mountain sized heaps, and the mango with most interesting ceremony.

And fruits are preserved in these Spanish colonies, as in Spain. The Spanish West Indies has not only given sugar to the wide world but it has contributed guava jellies to international menus, and many an item less well known than this popular concomitant of cream cheese.

Spanish Raw Materials.

Of really Spanish raw materials we may have in our larder there are not a few, and we might easily have more if it was commercially important to import them even from Cuba. Of course, the Malaga raisin is one of the superlatively good things and used to be served with nuts and oranges on old time holiday tables in New England, where seaborne foods used to be so common.

Spanish olives are in our markets and there is no salad oil superior to the best of Spanish olive oils. Almost any salad with tomatoes and a Spanish oil may justifiably be called a Spanish salad. And when eggs are cooked in olive oil—a good deal of it—as is customary in Spain, humble eaters sop up all the oil with bread. A simple luncheon for the poor in the Spain of late date is "a hunch of bread and a bowlful of olives for each," or a salad.

But a luncheon in Spain, as a friend of mine describes it in one of her books on Spain, that was good enough for the Cid, consisted of "Cold soup like a melted salad, a perfumed stew in which were strangely mingled Malaga potatoes, white wine, honey, cinnamon and cloves, and, for a crowning bliss, a dish of sugared chestnuts overflowed by a sirup whose every spoonful yielded a new flavor—lemon peel, orange peel, tamarind and a medley of spices."

Of course, these chestnuts were like the French marrons, before they are taken out of the sirup and dried. In trying to make even these latter it is best to leave them in a sirup, or preserved until shortly before they are to be dried and served as a confection.

People who live down in southern Florida and Cuban waters, where the flying fishes play—to use a Kipling phrase—know not only the Spanish mackerel but some fish of as brilliant color as the most flamboyant trees and flowers of the land, and deserving of such names as parrot fish.

Spanish Eatables.

A thick and cinnamon flavored hot chocolate is called Spanish chocolate, whether you get it in Italy or Coronado Beach, Cal., where cinnamon toast has also a popularity, and very likely deserves the cognomen Spanish. In California, as in Mexico, one can buy wonderfully carved "swizzle sticks," a utensil for milling chocolate, also a utensil which has many different names in the wide, wide world, where eggs are whipped with it, or that Italian egg specialty, zabaione, and other such things in Germany, but none has been gotten up with carving and inlaying more elaborate than the Mexican utensil, which also has a Cuban name, and probably was first designed in Spain.

Spanish Mexican.

In Mexico and in New Mexico and perhaps all along the Mexican border the peppery things seem the most characteristic—tamales, tortillas, chile con carne, and frijoles. The latter beans are far more like our own kidney beans [beloved of the Creoles, who are part Spanish] than is the garbanzo or Spanish pea — curious thing and hard to cook—which is so universally used in Spain in stews and everywhere, probably, where Spanish influences are strong. Its character affords the best proof, other than a knowledge of their meager fuels, why the Spanish have understood slow cooking, for with any other sort these cannot be made edible. The last vestige of heat in a coal is utilized in cooking in all poor countries, and Spain has been poor.

The Spanish Stew.

The olla podrida of Spain, containing often fish, flesh, fowl and any vegetable, egg and oil, is a great national dish, and it is hard to tell whether this name or puchero is the more universal term for it and, there seems to be a score of names for Spanish stews, if no more, as a perusal of the dictionary more than a perusal of cook books shows. Good stews are inevitably the product of slow cookery, and slow cookery has other reasons for prevailing in Spain besides the scantiness of fuel to make hot fires.

The olla was an earthen pot, perhaps not as fragile as the almost universal and fragile cazuela of Mexico and Cuba, where a nest of four or five play cazuelas are sold as souvenirs—replicas of the real thing. In Cuba the most characteristic thing served in this dish seems to be rice with chicken [arroz con pollo] which is fricassee of of chicken over boiled rice.

Jealousy

We're all acquainted with jealousy, the monster that smashes love affairs, wrecks homes, causes business quarrels, and generally plays havoc with us mortals. We'd like to know your most notable experience with a jealous person or persons. If you have encountered a situation where jealousy led to a tragic or ridiculous climax, tell us about it. Prompted by Envy.

I had many friends at school and was frequently invited to their homes. The beautiful furnishings of these homes made me hesitate to invite these friends to my own, which lacked everything lovely save a fine old painting. This was a picture of one of my ancestors and had been in the family several hundred years.

One of the young men in the party was an art student and was quite the rage with all the girls. He admired my picture and asked to call again to study it.

My chum, who had admitted her fondness for this young man, left saying she was going home for a headache powder. One of the boys offered to take her in his car, but she declined.

When the young man called again and we were looking at the picture we discovered a large hole in the canvas. This was made by acid and ruined the picture. We later confirmed our suspicions that this girl purchased the acid when she pretended to go home for the powder. M. C. H.

Naughty Girl.

After I had, for three years, been petted and spoiled as the only child, and consequently the only grandchild, my parents became the proud possessors of a baby boy. I had been an adored daughter but now there was a boy and, besides being adored, he was adorable, with a head full of golden curls in contrast to my straight brown locks.

Even at that early age I noticed the remarks made about what a nice baby he was and always, always those curls. When he was a little over a year old, I, then past four, took my brother and a pair of scissors under the bed and cut every curl.

As I know you're curious I will add that I did not get the deserved spanking. I had just miraculously recovered from a severe illness and my parents feared the result of punishment. Perhaps, too, they were thankful my brother escaped more serious damage. MRS. P. H. S.

SCOTT'S EMULSION

MOTHER!

Look at Child's Tongue if Sick, Cross, Feverish

Look at the tongue, mother! If coated, it is a sure sign that your little one's stomach, liver and bowels need a gentle, thorough cleansing at once.

When peevish, cross, listless, pale, doesn't sleep, doesn't eat or act naturally, or is feverish, stomach sour, breath bad; has stomach-ache, sore throat, diarrhœa, full of cold, give a teaspoonful of "California Fig Syrup," and in a few hours all the foul, constipated waste, undigested food and sour bile gently moves out of the little bowels without griping, and you have a well, playful child again.

You needn't coax sick children to take this harmless, "fruity laxative;" they love its delicious taste, and it always makes them feel splendid.

Ask your druggist for a bottle of "California Fig Syrup," which has directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly on the bottle. Beware of counterfeits sold here. To be sure you get the genuine, ask to see that it is made by the "California Fig Syrup Company." Refuse any other kind with contempt.

When to Suspect Acid Scalp

It isn't age that dulls the hair. Nor frequent washing or curling. If your hair lacks all life and lustre, it may be due to a condition you can correct in twenty-four hours. Acid scalp.

Neutralize the acid secretions of the scalp, and your hair will have the lovely sheen that makes any hair so attractive. A few drops of Danderine will do this; and as its name implies, Danderine is a scientific dandruff dissolvent. Five minutes after Danderine is applied, every particle of dandruff has been dissolved!

Acid scalp should be suspected if your hair is at all stiff or stringy, or won't hold a wave. Another sign—not so easily detected in one's self—is an acrid odor to the hair when it is warm, or after exercise. And for thirty-five cents at any drugstore, you can get a bottle of Danderine that will keep your hair soft and sweet and "on its good behavior" for weeks!

A FEW WORDS TO FATHERS

What Kind of Mates Are You, Men? Are You the Sort That Are Easy to Love—or Not?

By Doris Blake.

WHY all the magazine articles, why all the newspaper articles, the sermons from pulpits and judicial benches about woman and her job of keeping the home fires burning? How about the other party? How about his duties? Are we to believe that his are accepted in the sight of man, God and his wife when he brings home a pay envelope, which half the time his wife doesn't get an even break on?

"Is this appalling increase in divorce, of which we are reminded almost daily, is it possible to believe that woman is the sole cause and with her alone lies the remedy? Does not the old bromide about it taking two to make a quarrel serve in the instance of divorce? And being so, why not ask oftener 'Are Men Husbands?' instead of 'Are Women Wives?' 'Are You on Your Job, Old Frozen Face, Grouch or What Have You?' 'Are You the Sweetheart She Married?' 'Are You a Sympathetic, Loving Husband?' et cetera, et cetera."—Weary.

Fair enough, Weary! Let's ask it. What kind of mate are you, anyway, Old Man?

Just stand still a minute until we get the tape out and see if we have been measuring the wrong person for shortcomings that lead to domestic friction!

Of course, when you married, one of the dreams you had was to be met on your return from work by a charmingly frocked, adorably coiffured, sweetly smiling dear who would offer her arms and lips affectionately while you secretly marveled how such sweet desserts could be meted out to one so undeserving.

Now that you may not be met with the coveted warmth of affection do you ever ask yourself if you might not be responsible for the change? Do you take a real interest in your home? Or, as a homemaker, do you think your job is done with the financing of it?

Of course, you have to go to shop or office every morning, put in a full day of struggle and toil. You have to buck competitors. You have hours, days, perhaps, of anxiety that are grilling. You're doing it all for the little woman and the children. You're honestly intent on getting ahead that they may have more comforts or luxuries, as the case may be; and you, yourself, may be able to enjoy some of them, too. But do you become possessed of the feeling that because of this effort of yours you alone are entitled to all the consideration at the end of the day; that you should be absolved from blame should a worried mood pursue you to the doorstep and the absent minded peck that you bestow be accepted, not at its face value but as meaning your heart is always in the right place, though your moods may vary?

Meet Her Half Way.

If you expect the little woman to greet you warmly, isn't it only fair that you give her the chance with a display of affection yourself? Unhappily, where the emotions are concerned, women are peculiarly sensitive. A warm response is easy enough, however, if there is a smile and a happy greeting to respond to.

Few of us are so phlegmatically built as to escape moods entirely. The wife is expected to respect those of her husband. She accepts the old alibi of business worries for his moments of silence, indifference or curtness because it is her job to try to "understand" her husband. How about husbands striving a bit, too, to understand that the life of a woman with a couple of children to look after during the day is likewise apt to be harassed beyond measure by mischief or accidents they fall into? In between watching them, there are sewing jobs, mending, planning of meals, cooking, doing those hundred and one things around a house to improve its appearance so "John" will have a charming home to bring his friends to.

Suppose, at the end of one of these days, her greeting is a bit preoccupied, a little understanding might save that sulky hour before and during mealtime. A cheery word, an honest interest in what has engaged her day would clear the atmosphere.

Some men seem to expect to walk into a home and find things just as they would be in a hotel. And take just about as much interest in how the management conducts things as there. And their attitude toward the whole place is one of "I pay for it. Why shouldn't it be so?" Praise is the last thing that ever occurs to them to offer. No home was ever broken where praise was given freely.

We hear a good deal of counsel administered to wives about being polite and nice to husbands' friends. Courtesy to a wife's friends is quite as much in order. It is the same gross affront to snub Emma X in your own home as for your wife to "freeze up" when Bill B drops in. If she is willing to accept invitations with you to the homes of friends of yours, what right have you to refuse to play bridge or dine with a woman friend of hers?

Affection Is Appreciated.

How often do you bestow on your mate those little marks of affection so dear to her—an unsolicited caress, a hug, a word of flattery? These are the things that mean more to woman's happiness than motors, pearls or diamond bracelets. The latter are presented on rare occasions but the other little things that make life sweet may be offered frequently and often, and more than anything else to keep alive the love in a woman's heart.

Are you the kind of man who thinks women are incompetent to handle money? If so, have you ever given your wife an honest chance to prove what she could do with it? You aren't the ideal husband just because you give her enough to buy food and clothing for herself and for the family. More bitterness in homes is caused over the money question than any other. Men are woefully short sighted who do not take their wives into their financial confidence.

Half of the extravagances of women are due to ignorance of their mates' earning power or are committed in a spirit of indifference as to whether things can be afforded or not. When the wife is let in on the partnership she knows how the balance sheet stands and there are very, very few wives who will break the confidence placed in them on money matters. When lean days are fallen upon, lean days are lived in the knowledge that when fuller days arrive they, too, will be shared equally.

Hard to Adore.

The matters of looks, charm and attractiveness, in spite of the repeated warnings to curl-papered, kimonoed, flat heeled and sallow complexioned women, isn't alone the woman's job where domestic harmony is concerned. An unshaven man, bay-windowed, purple-faced, careless about his linen, his shoes, is just as likely a target for a woman's scorn as the woman who lets her youth and looks get away.

We're not recommending that the wife of such a one transfer her affections to some slenderer, younger male, but there isn't any reason why the world shouldn't say if she did: "It's the husband's own fault. How can you expect a woman to love a man like that?"

If the wife doesn't keep herself charming and attractive enough to hold her husband, she receives very little consolation if he makes off with a younger, prettier woman.

Are you one of these fathers who believes himself to be a good parent because he brings home gifts of toys and on occasional evenings spends a crowded hour of fun and frolic with them, paying the bills but leaving their upbringing entirely to mother? An absentee father, says Harvey O'Higgins,—one who leaves the upbringing of a son to his mother—does the boy a great wrong. If he becomes so absorbed in his profession or in his business as to neglect his children and forget his wife, she is dissatisfied with him and her revolt is unconsciously imitated by her children.

Here Is an Interesting Little Felt Hat That May Be Made by the Home Milliner.

ANOTHER one of those interesting close fitting felt hats is shown here, and it can be made in any shade of felt that you like. There are only three pieces in this hat, and it is easy to make and will be up to date and chic when finished.

The hat can be cut from a piece of felt 9x36 inches if a 22 inch head size is right for you. It can be adjusted for other sizes by changing the length of sections 1 and 3 and by the number of tucks put in.

Make small tucks in section 1, as indicated. Then join the ends of this section with the raw edges out. The crown, section 2, is joined to section 1 in the same fashion—that is, with the raw edges out. Adjust and trim the edge of section 2 to get a smooth crown.

The head size band, section 3, is folded lengthwise and sewed on the inside of section 1 at the brim edge is made of a contrasting color the folded edge should extend about one quarter inch below the brim edge of section 1. Be careful in making these hats that you don't get the head size too small, for they can look decidedly close fitting and yet be perfectly comfortable.

Two attractive ornaments are shown, an aeroplane and a Scotch terrier, either one of which you can easily make from a contrasting color. For the older woman, or for formal wear, other ornaments, such as a rhinestone buckle, a flat feather ornament, or bow of ribbon, are more appropriate.

Strange Weddings

Have you ever seen a wedding so outlandish that it upset all your ideas of the traditional ceremony? Some marriages are foreign and quaint in their adherence to ancient customs; others are ultra modern in their haphazard speed and unconventionality. The Tribune would like to knew the story of the strangest wedding you've ever seen. We will pay $1 for every letter published. Address Strange Weddings, Chicago Tribune.

An Audience of Two.

The bride was the only child of wealthy parents, and her mother maintained she should have an elegant wedding.

The groom was far from rich, and being employed in a large city several hundred miles from the girl's home town she insisted on marrying him there to save him traveling expenses.

Though her mother knew no one in the ctiy to invite to the wedding, she reserved a church, minister, organist, and high priced choir for the occasion, and had the church elaborately decorated with ribbons, flowers, and white carpets in the aisles, and ordered a most beautiful outfit for her daughter.

The ceremony was performed and the singing and decorations were enjoyed by an audience of two—the bride's father and mother. Afterwards the party had dinner at a large hotel.

No wedding trip followed, for the bride and groom went to housekeeping immediately. M. M. S.

THE CHEEKIEST PERSON I EVER MET

Send us a short, [illegible] reminiscence of cheekiest person you ever met, and we'll pay you $1 for it if we print it. All letters must be addressed to the Cheekiest Person Editor, The Tribune, Chicago.

Borrowed a Hat to Keep.

When I was 16 my mother allowed me to go into a millinery store to learn to make my own hats. The first one I made was beautiful, and on Thursday, before I had worn it, a friend dropped in, admired it, tried it on, and asked if she might wear it that evening, as she was to visit people who were strangers to me.

I reluctantly consented, thinking she would return it in the morning. She never did return it. Friday night she wore it to a church social, Saturday to choir practice, and Sunday morning and evening in the choir loft.

Monday my indignant mother made me go after the hat. My friend, Lelia, seemed surprised and asked me why I was not wearing her old hat which she had left for me.

There were a dozen unsightly hatpin holes through the delicate pink and white maline and straw. As we attended the same church, as long as I wore that hat some one was sure to ask what I was doing with Lelia's hat. M. S.

A Human Sponge.

A few winters ago we had some deep snow, so that the drifts to the outer buildings were ten feet high and the walks to town where we got supplies were not shoveled for about four days.

The day before the storm a cousin came to visit and of course was snowed in and was compelled to remain more than the afternoon when he came.

After the storm had subsided and the drifting ceased my husband took his shovel and worked for hours alone till he had made a path to the street. My cousin then thought he would go uptown and I said to him, "I wonder if you will get me some sausage for breakfast and a loaf of bread?" as I was tired baking bread and eating eggs. After awhile he came home with the articles and when I asked him how much I owed him for them, he calmly said, "Thirty-five cents," and I paid him. He had been marooned [illegible] days and helped to eat what we had in store. B. K. A.

Making the Guest Pay.

One day I was invited to a friend's house for lunch. Instead of preparing lunch at home, she asked me if it would be all right with me if we went to a nearby restaurant.

The checks came to $1.80 and she asked me if I would lend her that amount until we got home, as she only had a few dollars with her and wanted to do some shopping on the way. I gave her $2. She paid the cashier, kept the 20 cents change and that was the last I ever saw of my $2. R. J. M.

Plenty of Nerve.

Last year a neighbor bought a car but had no place to keep it, so we offered him space in our garage to use until he had one built. He used the garage several months, for which we charged him nothing.

He often drove a few miles into the country to gather wild blackberries, so one day when he was ready to go I asked him if he would take me and two guests with him. When we returned I thanked him, and laughingly asked, "How much do we owe you?"

He replied in all seriousness, "Fifty cents each," which I paid, and he accepted. E. H. D.

Keep Your Skin Young

DO you know that just beneath that soiled, discolored, faded or aged complexion is one fair to look upon? Nature causes the normal skin to peel off in tiny, unseen, flour-like particles, a little each day, renewing the complexion of youth naturally, but there comes a time when this skin shedding slows up. Worry, overwork, sickness, inactivity are reasons that cause the face to be blotchy, discolored, pimply and old looking. The thing to do, if you wish to look your prettiest at all times, is to assist nature in the process of absorption by using pure Mercolized Wax. Get an ounce at any drug store or beauty counter and use as directed. It gently but surely peels away the outer scarf skin, removing freckles, pimples, blackheads or a muddy complexion. The underneath skin, now in evidence, is clear, pink, fresh and velvety, and the entire face looks years younger. Mercolized Wax brings out the hidden beauty.

To quickly remove wrinkles and other age lines we recommend a face lotion of unusual merit: one ounce powdered saxolite and one-half pint witch hazel.

Care of Babies

This baby has never had a day's sickness and never a cross or fretful spell that lasted an hour. And what do you suppose is responsible for this healthy, happy condition? Not diet, for he has eaten just about anything and everything a child could eat. Not drugs, for he has not been dosed with opiates; he has never had a drop of paregoric. Nor has his sensible mother ever made him taste castor oil. Yet his nerves are sound and his little bowels are strong, and when he does seem the least restless or wakeful, or out of sorts—or likely to be—his mother has him all serene again in ten or fifteen minutes!

The secret of this complete freedom from the many ills and upsets so common to infants? Plain old-fashioned Castoria. A million and more mothers swear by Castoria, and no wonder! A few drops and an approaching fever, colic, diarrhea or constipation seems to vanish in thin air. Castoria is purely vegetable; that is why physicians tell parents they may use it freely with children of any age—the youngest infant. And how they love the taste!

One word of warning; get the pure, real Castoria. Fletcher's Castoria is the original. It is the kind doctors specify. And with every bottle comes a book on "Care and Feeding of Babies" that is worth its weight in gold to any mother or prospective mother. So, remember; tell your druggist you wish Fletcher's Castoria.

The Three Wieboldt Stores.

The Strange Adventures of Young Robinson Grewso

By KEMBLE

His ma called him Robin; his dad called him son;
He grew like a weed and thought it great fun,
So he called himself Robinson Grewso.

YAP, the dog, ran a few hundred yards up the beach, his nose to the ground, and the puffing band stringing out behind him. Suddenly he stopped short and pointed, not with his nose, but with his right paw.

"In yonder cove," he growled.

And sure enough, under a covering of broken boughs floated the pirate craft. The boys lost no time in pulling her out from her hiding place, for they must start at once if they were to overtake the pirates and prevent them from stealing everything at Robin's camp.

"Everybody pile in," shouted the leader. "Up with the sail and get after them."

Roy, with his two airplane chicks squawking and flapping their huge wings, was the first to jump aboard. Sweet Marie was next and then the whole bunch, followed by Yap and Chin Chin. The catapult gun was run up into the bow and Sundae placed the gum sticking shot in place. Then the race began. A good mile ahead they could see the pirate crew, every inch of sail crowded on their craft, looking anxiously back at their followers.

In the fat tummy

Robin quickly discovered that they were not gaining on the enemy and Roy was having a frightful time trying to restrain the airplane chicks. They saw the pirates and wanted to fly to them. Then Dode, the genius, hit upon a bright idea.

"Let's give them a little rope and make them pull us. They can fly all right. What say, mates?"

A mighty cheer went up, and soon the airplane birds were winging it straight for their former owners and pulling the boat through the waters at a great rate. At first the pirates were panic stricken, but soon their terror turned to joy. They pointed upward and cheered; for, sailing high overhead was the old mother airplane bird, making wide circles as she whirled her propeller bill and uttering loud squawks of anger. Nearer and nearer to Robin's boat she came and then, with a mighty swoop, nearly carried the mast away.

A flying leap

"I'll fix her if she does that again!" shrilled Chin Chin.

Robin gazed in amazement. "This is no time to be funny, old bird! Get busy and do something."

"That's just what I'm going to do. You watch little Oswald when that old hen makes another dive for us," and Chin Chin rolled his eyes and ruffled up his feathers.

Again the big bird circled and came at the boat like a rocket and just as she was about to hit it, Chin Chin made a flying leap and grabbed her tail feathers with his beak and both claws. Away the old hen zigzagged; her rudder was out of gear and Robin and his mates sent up a wild whoop as she landed in the water. Overboard went Robin and swam to rescue Chin Chin. With the old parrot soaking wet, he climbed aboard and on shot the boat toward the enemy.

The big chicks took no notice of their mammy's plight, but flew straight for the pirates. Now the boats were side by side. Blip! went the catapult gun and the gum sticking shot landed plumb in the fat tummy of the chief. Overboard he went.

Blip! another shot, this time a miss. The boats drew closer together and Robin gave the order to "board her." With the jab poles jabbing the pirate crew went overboard like so many frogs.

Swimming their fastest they struck out for the old airplane bird, who was still afloat.

And then, as Robin and his victorious pals sailed away with their own boat in tow, they beheld the pirate chief sitting astride the airplane bird trying to straighten out her tail feathers.

ISN'T IT ODD?

By William Atherton DuPuy

ISN'T it odd that government scientists should find it possible to convert a race of five toed guinea pigs into a race of five toed pigs! Here is the way it came about.

Guinea pigs were raised for scientific purposes at one of the government's experiment farms. It was found that once in a while a pig appeared which had a fifth toe. The family that produced it, they figured, had within it a tendency toward fifth toes. By crossing this pig with members of the group from which it came they got several pigs with the fifth toe. They bred these together and presently had a generation all of which had the fifth toe.

This showed the power of selective breeding, which has great value. They carried the idea further. There sometimes occurred, also, a guinea pig that was albino, all white with pink eyes. One of these appeared among the five toed pigs. They followed the same principle of selective breeding for albinos with pink eyes and finally produced a race of guinea pigs with five toes that were albino.

Then selections were made for curly haired pigs. This quality was eventually developed. So had a generation been created that had three strange characteristics that had but rarely existed in their ancestors of a few generations before—pigs that were five toed, were albinos and were curly coated.

The principle back of this selective breeding is, of course, the basis for the development of different strains in plants and anmials. It was by this sort of selection that a strain of white faced catttle was developed. It was by this sort of selection that it came to pass that there are police dogs, bull dogs, poodle dogs. It was by this sort of selection that chrysanthemums were developed from daisies. It is through selection of this sort that there came to be chrysanthemums of many colors. It was through this sort of selection that the giant tomatoes of the dinner table were developed from the small, watery "love apple" of two generations ago. This selective breeding, in fact, is one of the biggest ideas in all livestock and animal breeding and has been worth uncounted millions to the human race.

$5 Apiece for Bright Sayings of Children

The Tribune will pay $5 for each childish saying printed. The story told must never have been printed in any magazine or paper. It is not possible to acknowledge or return unavailable contributions. Write on one side of the paper. Address bright sayings to Aunty Bee, The Tribune, Chicago.

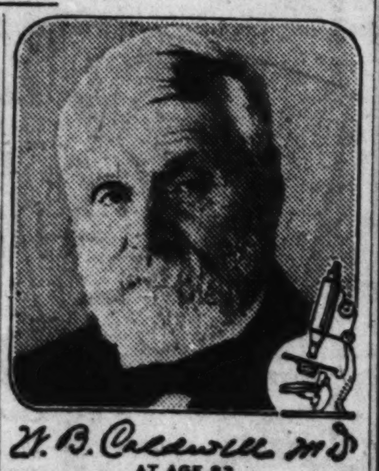
Virginia's father traveled and was home only two of three times a year. She asked her mother for new roller skates and her mother said, "Why don't you ask your father for them when he comes home?"

Virginia replied, "But I don't know him well enough, mother." B. F. R.

Charles and Freddie had stayed with their grandmother while their mother was sick in the hospital, and grandmother and daddy had kept, as a great surprise, the news that they had two new baby sisters.

Today the boys returned home and were eagerly waiting the arrival of their mother. Freddie was the first to spy her. "Charles," he called joyously, "here's mother."

Then as he perceived that she had a baby in each arm he gasped and stuttered, "and ah-a-a-, gosh, if she ain't brought home a whole taxicab full of babies." D. A. S.



Dr. Caldwell's 3 Rules Keep You Healthy

W. B. Caldwell M.D.
AT AGE 83

Dr. Caldwell watched the results of constipation for 47 years, and believed that no matter how careful people are of their health, diet and exercise, constipation will occur from time to time regardless of how much one tries to avoid it. Of next importance, then, is how to treat it when it comes. Dr. Caldwell always was in favor of getting as close to nature as possible, hence his remedy for constipation, known as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, is a mild vegetable compound. It can not harm the most delicate system and is not a habit forming preparation. Syrup Pepsin is pleasant-tasting, and youngsters love it. It does not gripe. Thousands of mothers have written us to that effect.

Dr. Caldwell did not approve of drastic physics and purges. He did not believe they were good for human beings to put into their system. In a practice of 47 years he never saw any reason for their use when a medicine like Syrup Pepsin will empty the bowels just as promptly, more cleanly and gently, without griping and harm to the system.

Keep free from constipation! It robs your strength, hardens your arteries and brings on premature old age. Do not let a day go by without a bowel movement. Do not sit and hope, but go to a druggist and get one of the generous bottles of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. Take the proper dose that night and by morning you will feel like a different person. Use Syrup Pepsin for yourself and members of the family in constipation, biliousness, sour and crampy stomach, bad breath, no appetite, headaches, and to break up fevers and colds. Always have a bottle in the house, and observe these three rules of health: Keep the head cool, the feet warm, the bowels open.

We would be glad to have you prove at our expense how much Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin can mean to you and yours. Just write "Syrup Pepsin," Monticello, Illinois, and we will send you prepaid a FREE SAMPLE BOTTLE.

YOU AND YOUR CHILDREN

By Mrs. Gladys Huntington Bevans

Forearmed with Truth

FOREWARNED is forearmed.

You—father and mother—are the ones to tell your children the truth about the facts of life and reproduction.

You are the ones to tell them the truth about the tremendous manifestation of nature that we call sex—and I wish we had a different name for it, one more dignified, more euphonistic.

You get to your children first with the truth before somebody else does with untruth. You get there before the boy in the street, before the girl who has picked up her knowledge here and there, distorted and unlovely, gets there first.

You get there first yourself so that your girl and your boy will all their lives have a natural feeling and understanding of their bodies and the laws of life.

If saying this over every day for a year would make it seem more important, more necessary, I should like to repeat it that many times. If you love your child, if you reverence life, get there first with all the knowledge that your son and daughter should have, so that they may be forearmed against the misinformation that they are sure to believe if they know nothing else, or nothing better to believe. Tell them the truth so that instead of being pitifully ignorant they are beautifully innocent.

First Impressions.

The first things children hear are the ones that are most apt to stay with them. Whether they are true or untrue, they will color for your children the facts they learn later. If untrue, they sometimes set up inhibitions or repulsions that hamper girls and boys all their lives. If true, such knowledge will help them to walk through the world free and understanding and make it possible for them to shed the often unpleasant misinformation that may come their way. If they hear the truth from you in the way they should, then your children will be able to understand the simple actual facts and to realize the alchemy of nature—to see it as the combination of a master mechanic and a master magician that it is.

Answer Their Questions.

Unless your boy and girl are different from most children they will begin asking you questions of all sorts very, very young. Answer those questions truthfully. If you do, they will ask you another and another from time to time and, if you answer, gradually they will build up a conception of life, an understanding of their bodies and of the reproduction of life that will be a great spiritual possession to them. It will be a bulwark of truth. It will fit sex into the pattern of life as naturally as sleep and sun and food and play and all the bodily functions fit into it.

But if you do not answer these questions, if you evade them, if you put them off, if you tell them they're too young to know this or too young to know that, they'll stop coming to you for information. Then they'll do one of several other things. Either they'll ask some one not equipped to tell them, or if they're not inquiring they'll ask no one, but will glean casually from time to time misinformation from other children. Or they will not gain much knowledge until they grow up and then the fact of these natural things will come to them as a shock. It is not an uncommon experience. I suppose, for instance, we have all heard older women say that many girls of their generation were married without the faintest conception of what the marriage relation meant. Ignorance of vital matters wasn't limited to those times.

In our day there are many families in which not a word passes between mothers and daughters and fathers and sons, or mothers and sons and fathers and daughters, of the important fundamental things of life.

Your Own Children.

If, at the present moment, your children are babies or nearly so, you are lucky because you can begin at the beginning and they will take all you have to tell them as they take everything else you give them—as a matter of course. If your children are older and you have never talked with them on these subjects—begin now. If you've brought children into the world there should be nothing under heaven that you cannot discuss with them—nothing should be a barrier between you. More than that, it is your duty to come close to them—as close to them spiritually as you were close to them in body when they were born.

None of this is mere theory that I am talking. It is proven, workable practice. I have not only seen it successfully carried out among the fathers and mothers and children of some of my friends, but I know from my own experience. It has been revealing, absorbing, to watch my boy through the years as he has heard the answers to his questions—the intense but everyday interest occasionally touched with wonder with which he has accepted the natural facts of life.

So I say again and again—get there first—forearm your children with truth.

(Another Sunday article will follow this one on the same subject.)

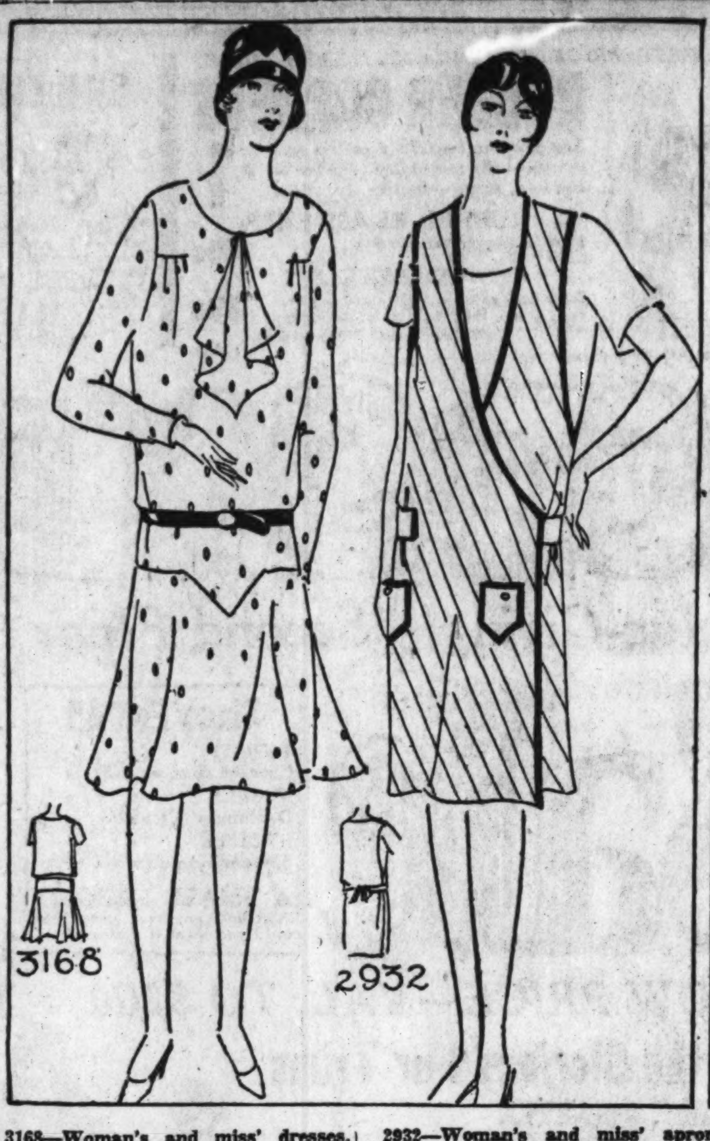
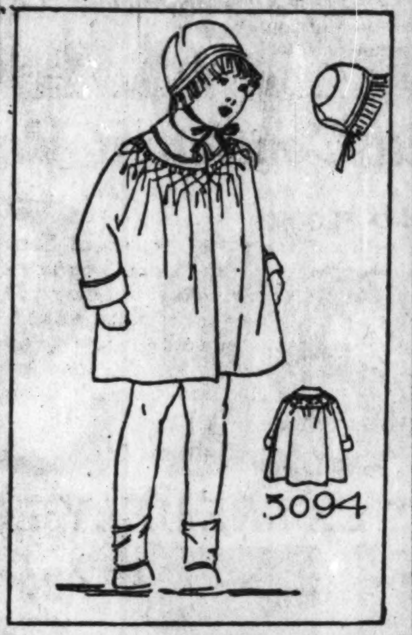
Patterns by Clotilde

Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.; Copyright, 1927, by The Chicago Tribune.



3168—Woman's and miss' dresses. Sizes 16 and 18 years and 36, 38, 40 and 42 inches bust measure. Size 36 requires 3⅜ yards of 40 inch material.

2932—Woman's and miss' aprons. Sizes 16 and 18 years and 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44 inches bust measure. Size 36 requires 3¾ yards of 36 inch material with 7 yards of binding.



3094—Child's coat and hat. Sizes ½, 1 and 2 years. The 1 year size requires 1⅝ yards of 40 inch material with 1½ yards of 40 inch lining.

HOW TO USE THE PATTERNS

A BECOMING, youthful slenderizing type of apron is shown in patern No. 2932. It entirely covers the dress, assuring perfect protection. The armholes are deep and comfortable, and there are two roomy patch pockets. This apron is made with reversible fronts, closing in surplice fashion, and having a narrow belt attached at either side of the front, and tying snugly in a bow in the back, holding the apron close to the dress at the waistline.

Blocked gingham, figured percale, plain or printed sateen and cotton pongee are attractive and practical materials for aprons. If this is made of a solid color, choose a contrasting shade for the binding. Or if a printed material is used choose some color used in the printed design for the binding.

There are many times when getting dinner that it is a convenience to dress before the meal, and with an apron like this to slip on over a nice frock no one need be worried about hurting it.

I imagine many mothers will be delighted to have a pattern of a baby's coat and bonnet like No. 3094. Kasha, cashmere or satin are any of the suitable materials and the directions that come with the pattern are so clear that there shouldn't be any difficulty in making them.

The coat is cut with a little round yoke that is seamed on the shoulders. And to this the coat is shirred or smocked. The full length, one piece sleeves are finished with rather deep, turned back cuffs, and the neck has a small, flat round collar. Crêpe is a favorite lining material, and choose a good quality of crêpe de chine, having it the same color as the coat, or a lighter shade of the same color.

The small bonnet or hat can be made of the coat material, and the strings will be pretty if you hemstitch the hems.

Pattern No. 3168 is for a delightful model featuring a collarless, round neckline completed with a cascading jabot, and an intriguing rippling skirt with circular fullness in the back as well as the front. The bodice part of this pretty dress is decidedly long waisted, and has an unusual line across the bottom in the front. Fullness is let in at either side of the armholes on the front, simulating a yoke.

The pattern provides for long or short sleeves, and the entire dress can be made without any trimming other than the finish at the neck, sleeve edges, the bottom of the skirt, and where skirt and waist are joined. The jabot may be made of the dress material and have picoted edges, and you no doubt will be able to find exactly the sort of narrow belt to wear with the dress. There never was a greater variety than the shops show today.

Crêpe de chine, faille crêpe, printed velveteen, wool crêpe and supple woolens are chosen by the smartly dressed woman for this style of dress.

Answers to Love Queries

—By Doris Blake—

Too Young to Be Steady.

"Dear Miss Blake: I am 20 years of age and go around steadily with a fellow 19. I care for this fellow but feel he is too young for me. MARIE."

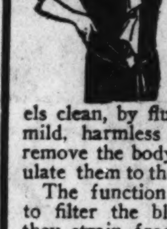
He's too young for a "steady," Marie. His mind isn't settled, and his tastes are likely to change any minute, so you don't want to depend upon him entirely for your good times.

Date Breaker.

"Dear Miss Blake: I go with a young man who has broken several dates with me. Should I keep on going with him? BLUE EYES."

Having allowed him to break dates before, you can't expect he will be particular about keeping them in the future. 'Twould be better to find another beau.

IF BACK HURTS FLUSH KIDNEYS



When your kidneys hurt and your back feels sore, don't get scared and proceed to load your stomach with a lot of drugs that excite the kidneys and irritate the entire urinary tract. Keep your kidneys clean like you keep your bowels clean, by flushing them with a mild, harmless salts which helps remove the body's waste and stimulate them to their normal activity.

The function of the kidneys is to filter the blood. In 24 hours they strain from it 500 grains of acid and waste, so we can readily understand the vital importance of keeping the kidneys active.

Drink lots of good water—you can't drink too much; also get from any pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts. Take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning for a few days and your kidneys may then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help clean and stimulate clogged kidneys; also to neutralize the acids in the system so they are no longer a source of irritation, thus often relieving bladder weakness.

Jads Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to help keep their kidneys clean and active. Try this; also keep up the water drinking, and no doubt you will wonder what became of your kidney trouble and backache.

Eats Pork and Beans, Cucumbers—Sleeps Just Fine—No Gas

THREE PEOPLE out of every four are afraid to eat many of the foods they like. They know that if they do they are sure to suffer from gas, sourness or indigestion. Yet, as in the case of Mr. Brooks, this condition can often be overcome.

"Gas on the stomach and nervousness made it impossible for me to do anything but worry. I always felt bloated—nights I couldn't sleep. All this has been changed since taking Adlerika. I eat anything I want now—things like pork and beans, cucumbers and fried onions. My nervousness is gone and I sleep better. I sure can recommend Adlerika."—Geo. C. Brooks, Knoxville, Tenn.

Quick Action Surprises

AS GENTLY and naturally as taking a drink of water, Adlerika acts upon BOTH upper and lower bowels, bringing immediate relief from gas bloating, intestinal stasis and chronic constipation.

The very FIRST dose of Adlerika often brings out astonishing amounts of old waste matter from the intestinal canal. This poisonous matter may have been in the intestines a long time, causing gas, headache, sleeplessness and many other symptoms. A treatment of a few weeks with Adlerika often corrects chronic constipation and intestinal stasis, so that just a small dose, now and then, keeps the intestines and stomach in a most satisfactory condition.

What Doctors Say

DR. H. LOUIS SHOUB, B. Sc., well-known New York pathologist, after laboratory tests on living subjects, states: "Adlerika very markedly reduces the number of bacteria and colon bacilli. This feature increases the therapeutic value of Adlerika, because, in addition to its intestinal cleansing action, it inhibits the growth of these intestinal bacteria."

Dr. A. J. Lancaster, a physician of over a quarter century's active experience, makes this statement: "In the treatment of gastro-intestinal disorders, (where thorough evacuation is indicated), Adlerika has no equal."

Dr. Carl Weschcke, a graduate of the world-famous medical University of Heidelberg, Germany, in his private practice, first perfected the intestinal cleanser and carminative now known as Adlerika. It is a compound of a specially processed saline intestinal evacuant with buckthorn and cascara, together with glycerine and other ingredients which expel gas and have detergent action.

Adlerika, unlike most other medicines, acts upon BOTH upper and lower bowels. It is recognized by many physicians as the one dependable remedy for gas, intestinal stasis and chronic constipation, or whenever real intestinal cleansing is needed.

Even if your bowels move every day, Adlerika may surprise you by bringing out poisonous, gas-forming matter which you would never believe was in your system.

In just a single month, over one thousand men and women wrote that they obtained wonderful relief from even a short treatment with Adlerika. Many of them said that now, after all other treatments and medicines had failed, they are at last rid of gas, indigestion, sour stomach, sleeplessness, nervousness or other trouble due in their cases to intestinal stasis. And now, these folks say, they are again able to eat and enjoy the foods they like.

No matter what you have tried for the bowels and stomach, Adlerika will surprise you.

Everybody in the real estate field will soon have to admit that:

(a) Adequate transportation facilities must be included in the program of the development of subdivision properties.

(b) All underground and ground improvements—that is, sewer, water, sidewalks, gas, electricity, and paving—must be included in the development program in order that subdivision property may be sold and developed to meet the expectation of the purchaser.

(c) Properties must be planned and restricted in a way that will insure the growth in value and maintain a character through all the years of development and maturity. Salespeople who subscribe to this policy and interpret the conditions of the subdivision business in this manner will find Krenn & Dato's subdivision development operations as the most promising field for advancement and remuneration. Plan to have an interview at your convenience and discuss matters with the head of the subdivision sales department.

A MENTALLY BIG MAN.

A manufacturer, rated AAA1, operating nationally, has an opening for a man of successful selling experience. Prefer one who has met and sold chief executives, although in the final analysis personality will be the determining factor.

We are not so much interested in a salesman as we are in a man with potential executive ability—one who can learn our business and then qualify to direct others. For such a man there is a brilliant future.

This is not stocks, bonds, real estate, insurance, or books—nor is it posters.

Do not investigate unless you feel confident that your services are worth $8,000 per year or more.

We can use a man immediately in each of the following territories: Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, Kansas City, and one in Chicago.

We will grant you a personal interview if you are able to interest us over the telephone. Phone Mr. C. C. Below on Monday for appointment, Randolph 4745, or, if you prefer, address K G 401, Tribune.

Come into this new organization that is now forming in the best market in the world and which is financed and controlled by a company which has made a success in Europe, Asia, Australia, Africa, and South America. DIVISION MANAGERS FOR LOS ANGELES.

The Harry H. Culver Company, one of the world's outstanding and largest realty organizations, is desirous of employing six experienced divisional managers with directorial qualifications for three stupendous projects.

The Harry H. Culver Company are the founders and developers of Culver City—the very heart of the motion picture producing industry. This development is world famed.

Culver City is a city of exceptional growth and a tremendous pay roll. The Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer-Cecil B. De Mille and Hal Roach studios are located here and are continually in production. Los Angeles adjoins Culver City—in fact practically surrounds it.

Southern California is enjoying the greatest tourist traffic in many years. Prosperity is evident everywhere.

For the right kind of manager—five years association with the Harry H. Culver Company will mean financial independence. A managerial berth with us means something.

All the propositions of the Harry H. Culver Company have especial appeal—not the ordinary humdrum of lot selling. Two universities with religious affiliations and a harbor development are now in the making. We have syndicate methods for the syndicate men and excursion and lecture methods for those that so desire them. All our properties are immediately improved with paved roads, sewer, water, gas and street lighting. We control our own building and loan, construction and improvement departments. None of our property can be called subdivision. No visualizing—homes, schools, transportation, churches, banks, stores, theaters, all here now. Beautiful paved streets and boulevards lined with palm trees and magnificent floral decorations truly make Culver City the garden spot of America. Twenty-five minutes from downtown Los Angeles and ten minutes from the beaches of the Pacific ocean.

A number of readers of this advertisement are acquainted with our General Sales Manager, Pat Manley, well known in Detroit and Chicago among real estate go-getters. If such men will wire him or better still, jump in their auto and take the Santa Fe trail, they will be making the most constructive move they have ever made in their lives. Just wire him that you are on the way. Others please write giving full details of past experiences. We are not desirous of employing floaters, sharpshooters or "deal" hunters.

AMBITIOUS LADIES

wanted by large loop firm. Must be over 25 years of age, with good references. Permanent, congenial work. Opportunity to learn business and earn more money as you advance.

We have large staff of ladies already engaged in this work. Increasing business and plans for 1928 make it necessary to employ 12 more ladies at once. If you have sales exp. you can start earning at once. If you have no exp. but are willing to learn we will teach you every step of the way. Our special plan for developing salesladies is the result of our 30 years of success.

No traveling required. No expense to you in equipment. You get the full cooperation of ladies already with us and personal sales help from veteran executives.

This is one firm where women are the equals of men. Our experience shows that women have the same business ability as men if given the same opportunity.

No flappers wanted. This is a real dignified position with a real future. Salary and commissions to those who qualify. Apply in person only. From 9 a. m. to 5:30 p. m.—to EMPLOYING MANAGER, 69 W. WASHINGTON-ST.

SIXTH FLOOR.

AN OPPORTUNITY.

IF YOU CAN SELL

HERE'S YOUR BIG CHANCE.

A real job for a real woman. This firm is well and favorably known. Its word carries weight with the people you will meet. Because this organization has been active for nineteen years and still growing, the future is bright for any woman who can qualify.

We will give you a salary, put you where you can make good money now and show you how to make more. This is a selling position, but no previous experience is necessary. Honesty, a good appearance, and an earnest desire to succeed are essential. If you have these we will spend $50 per week on you.

THIS IS WHAT YOU SELL.

Beautiful wooded property ravines, water front, gorgeously landscaped, improvements in and paid for; transportation on property; selling as low as $5.50 a front foot.

Today discriminating people pick out high and dry ground. It is a rare delight around Chicago to have a home in rolling and wooded country, away from the swarms of flies and mosquitoes. No other development offers such fine hilly country, with shady groves and cool, secluded places in which to rest up from a busy day.

Price and terms of delivery as well as the probable enhancement in value are features as attractive as the physical ones described above.

For further information come to my office after 11 o'clock, on the second floor at 3615 Irving Park-blvd. L. M. HANN, Gen. Mgr.

WHETHER to buy property that has aged or to purchase a brand new building can be debated pro and con.

The answer depends on so many different essentials. Character of the neighborhood; the percentage of old and new buildings; types of transportation; the prevailing tendency of the district; these and other things prohibit snap judgment.

Our offerings embrace both fields and an inspection does not obligate you one bit.

SECOND MORTGAGE LOANS

A few years ago the average person's concept of a second mortgage was that it cost a lot and the second mortgage company was making a barrel of money.

That time is passed, for with the advent of the Chicago Morris Plan Bank as agent for a substantial loan fund an honest attempt is being made that the home owner will not have to pay exorbitant costs for his second mortgage. And so far as profit is concerned, our rates have been projected so that the rate of return is comparable with the profit which is considered equitable in the more stabilized and better understood types of financing.

Happily there are many representative second mortgage companies in Chicago today who are emulating our example.

We invite all home owners in Cook, Lake, and Du Page counties to see how they may save money by placing their second mortgages with us. While all rates are substantially lower than they used to be our rate is the lowest quoted in this vicinity.

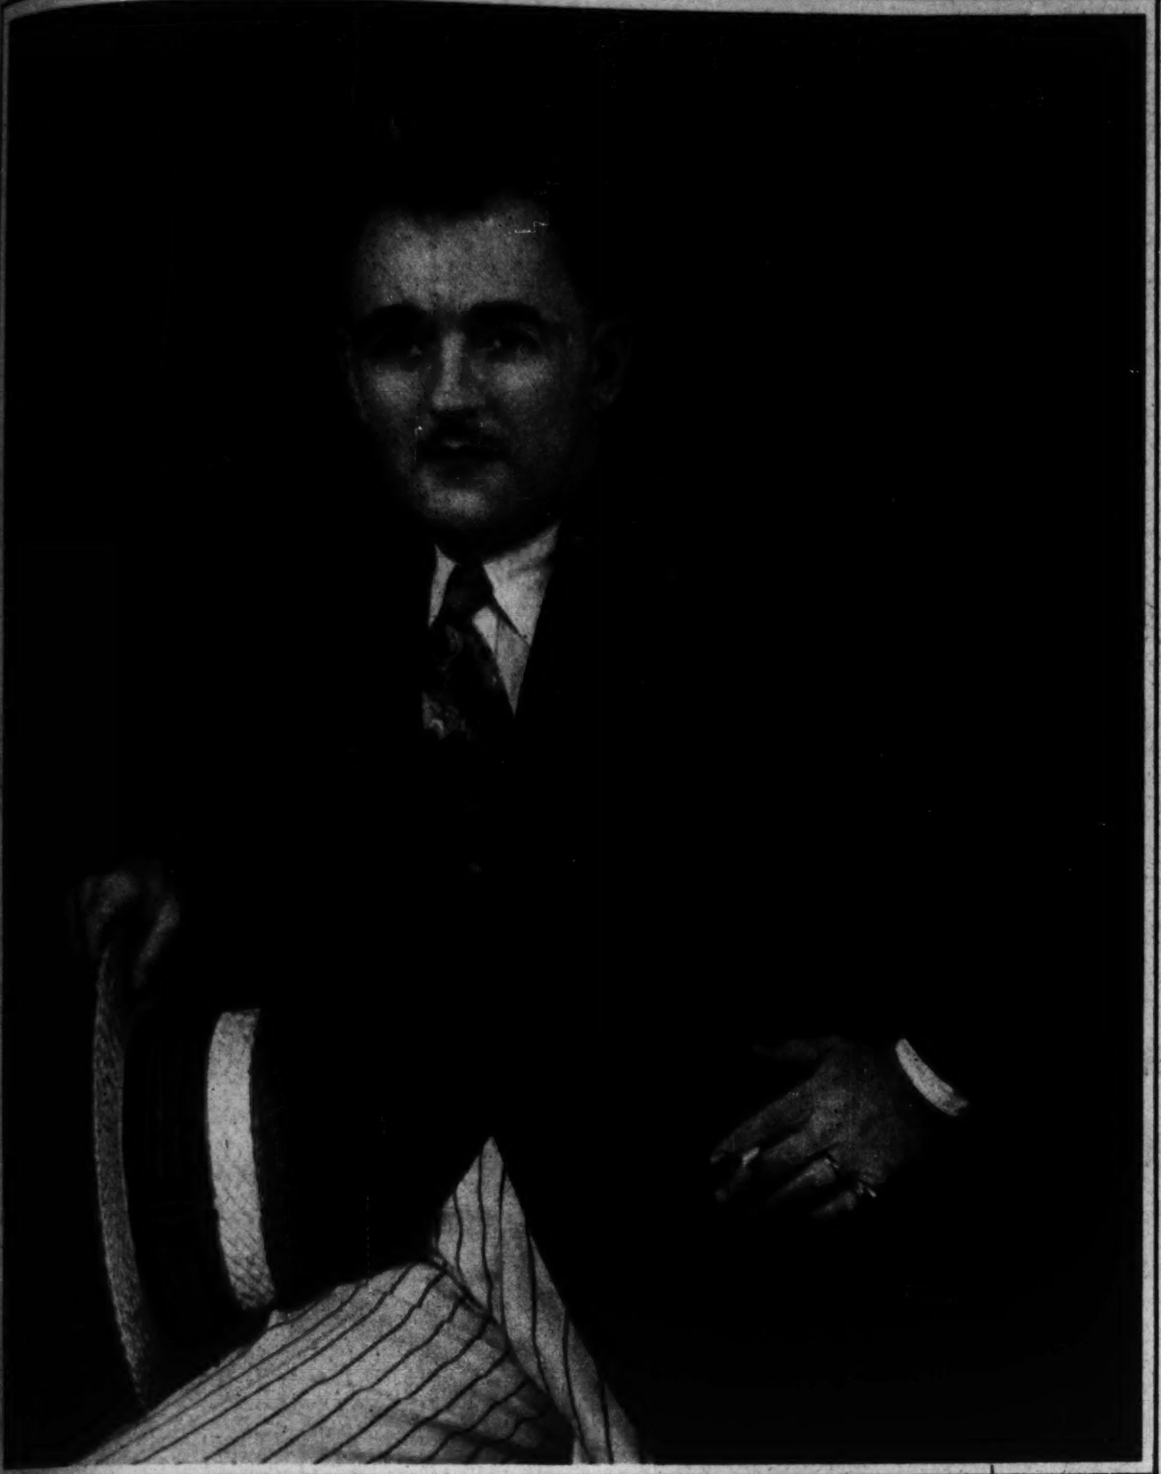
THE WORLD'S GREATEST NEWSPAPER

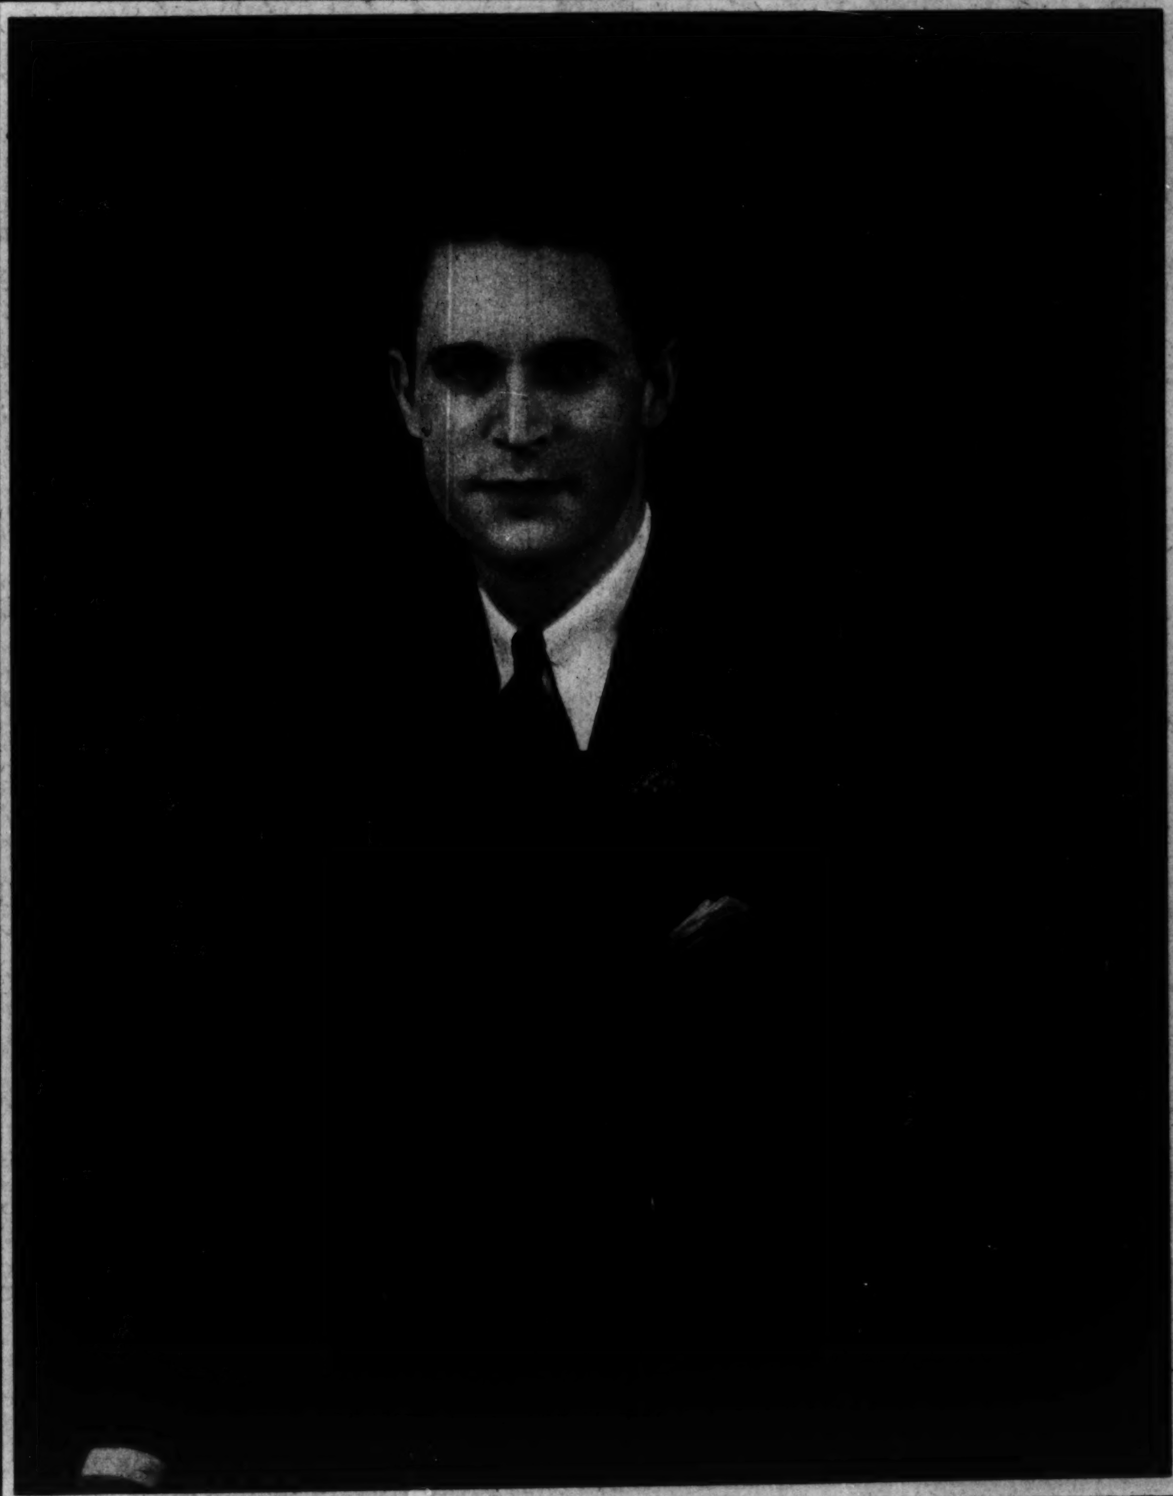
November 27, 1927



RICHARD BENNETT was in the title-part of "The Barker," the comedy of life and love in the tent-shows that ran twenty-two weeks in Chicago. He says he is eager to go into a repertory of revivals.

MISS MARJORIE WOOD also was in "The Barker," wherein, as a lovelorn hula-dancer, she made in the Chicago run the best success of her many visits. She is slated for the part of the bad girl in "The Old Maid."

MISS SYLVIA SIDNEY is a mite of a young actress who was immensely liked in the respective New York and Chicago runs of "Crime," wherein, as a bewildered 'prentice girl with a gang of thieves, she had her first real part.



CHESTER MORRIS also was in New York and Chicago in "Crime." In New York he originated the part of the ready gunman, and then was transferred to the more important part of the flossy and educated leader of the thieves' gang.

CYRIL MAUDE PLAYS A LEADING ROLE at St. Barnabas' church, Pimlico, England, the occasion being his marriage to the former Mrs. P. H. Trew. Here are the noted actor-manager and his bride, pictured just after the ceremony.

TWO KINGS SAW THEIR WEDDING—In a setting of regal splendor Princess Anne, daughter of the pretender to the throne of France, became the bride of the Duke of Apulia, son of the Duke of Aosta. The king and queen of Italy and the king of Spain attended the nuptials, performed at Naples, along with countless other members of the royal families of Europe.

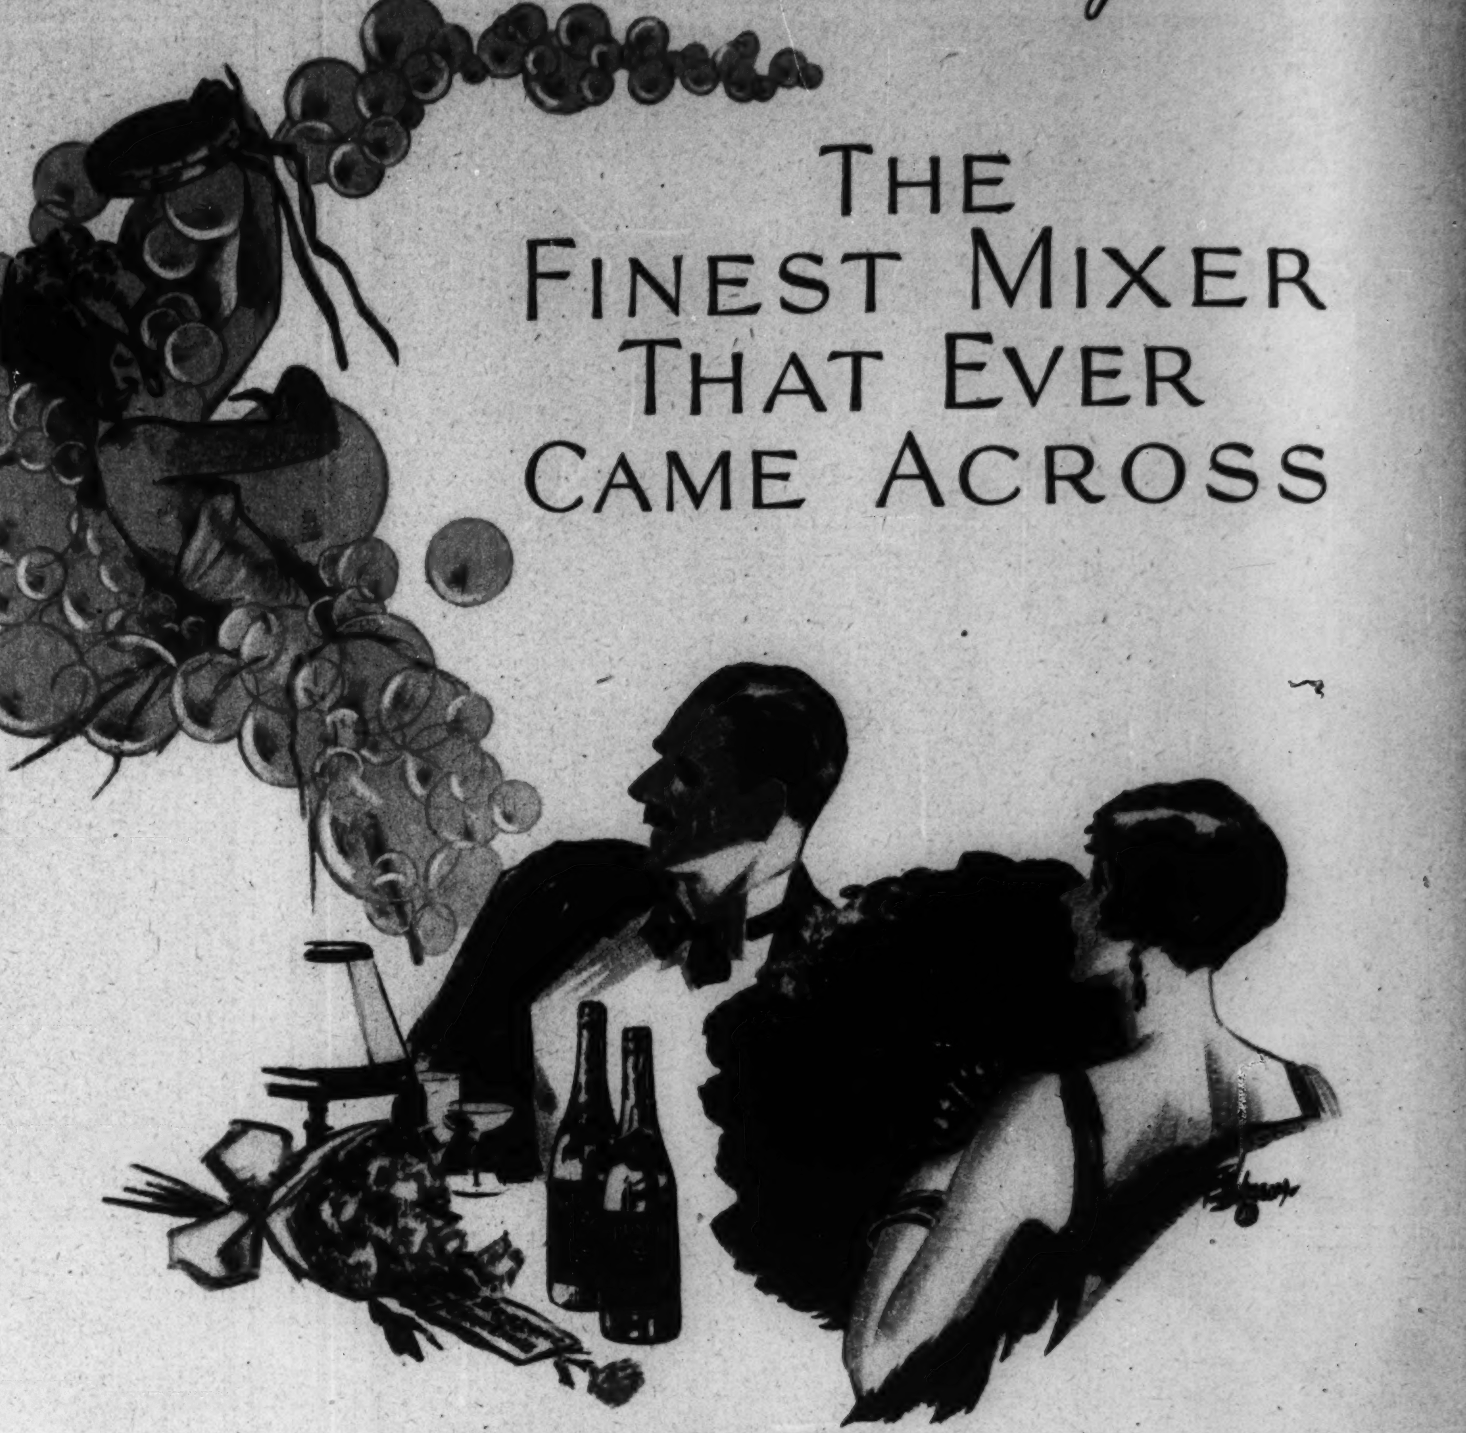
Sit down to dinner tonight with



THE FINEST MIXER THAT EVER CAME ACROSS

TONIGHT you can sit down to dinner with the most popular pal that ever graced a table . . . a happy, friendly ambassador of good taste and good times . .

Busch Pale Dry!

Until recently, you know, Busch Pale Dry was served only at America's most exclusive clubs, hotels, restaurants and cafes, where only the best will do. But now it is ready at a near-by store—waiting to add a festive touch to your dinners and dances . . . and to transform ordinary beverages into gay, festive delights.

How Busch Pale Dry does fit in with the modern scheme of things. Its flavor! . . subtle and satisfying as that of a rare old wine. Its color and bouquet! . . . like fine champagne. Real life and zest and sparkle in every dancing drop of it.

And as a mixer! . . . well, try it yourself! The very first time you do, you'll know that Busch Pale Dry is infinitely superior to any other ginger ale you have ever tasted.

That's because Busch Pale Dry is made from real Jamaica ginger and genuine fruit juices instead of harsh, biting capsicum and mere fruit essences—double-filtered thru especially constructed stone water filters, then aged in wooden casks for three solid months!

Yet it costs you no more than ordinary pale ales!

You can get Busch Pale Dry from your dealer—in single bottles, in splits, in the handy family package of 12 bottles and in cartons of 24. Phone him now.

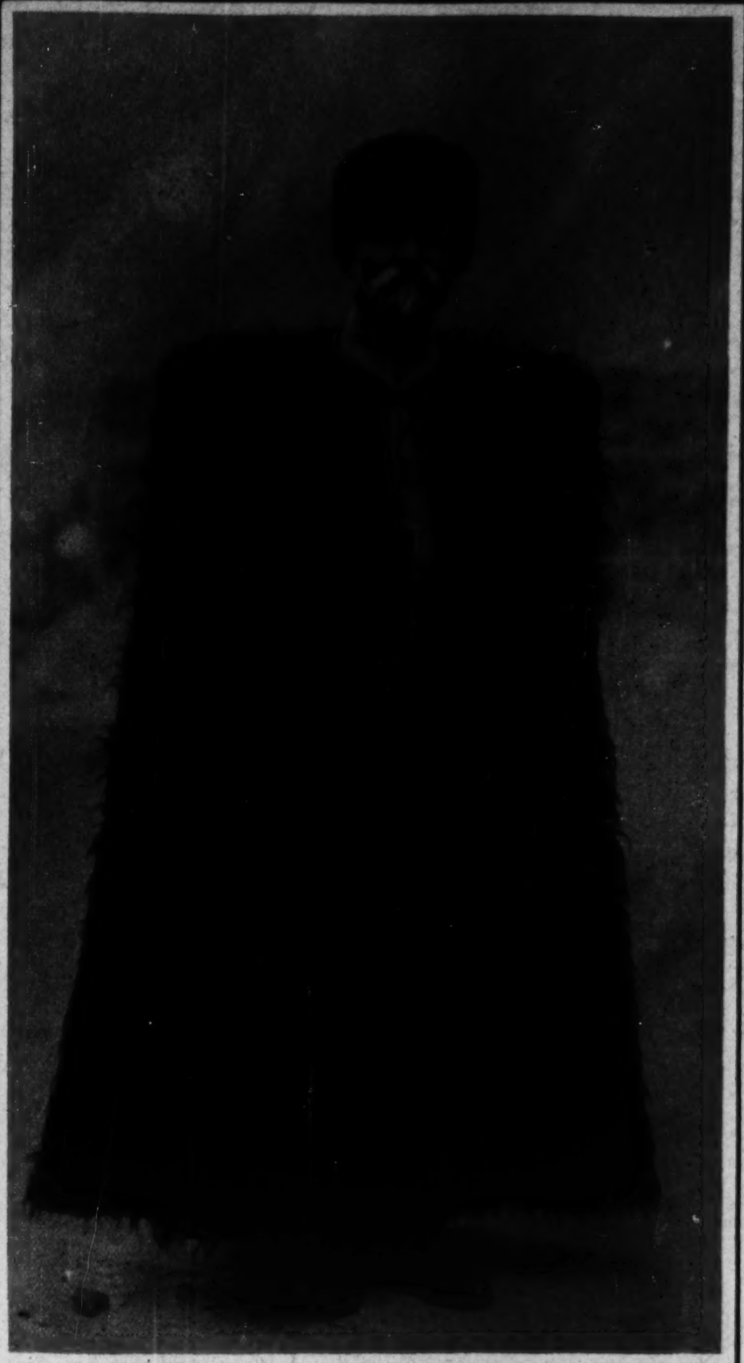
Where the Russian Looks into Asia

WHERE THE IMMORTAL SIX HUNDRED RODE—Balaklava, in the Crimea, scene of the charge of the Light Brigade, which inspired Tennyson's deathless poem.

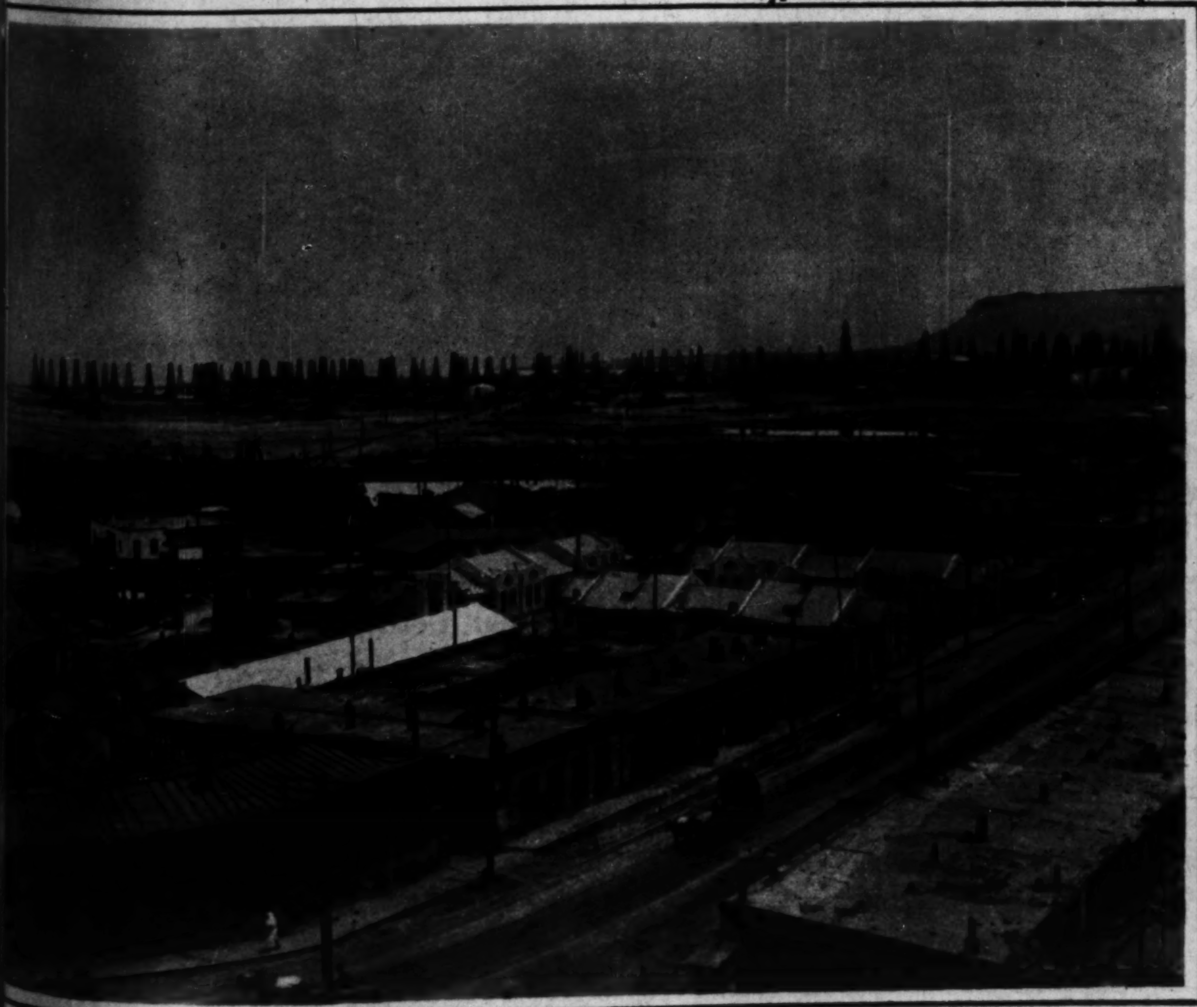


IN THE MOUNTAINS OF GEORGIA, the soviet republic of Transcaucasia, such a sheepskin coat is not uncommon. It keeps the mountaineer warm and is his protection against rain and snow.

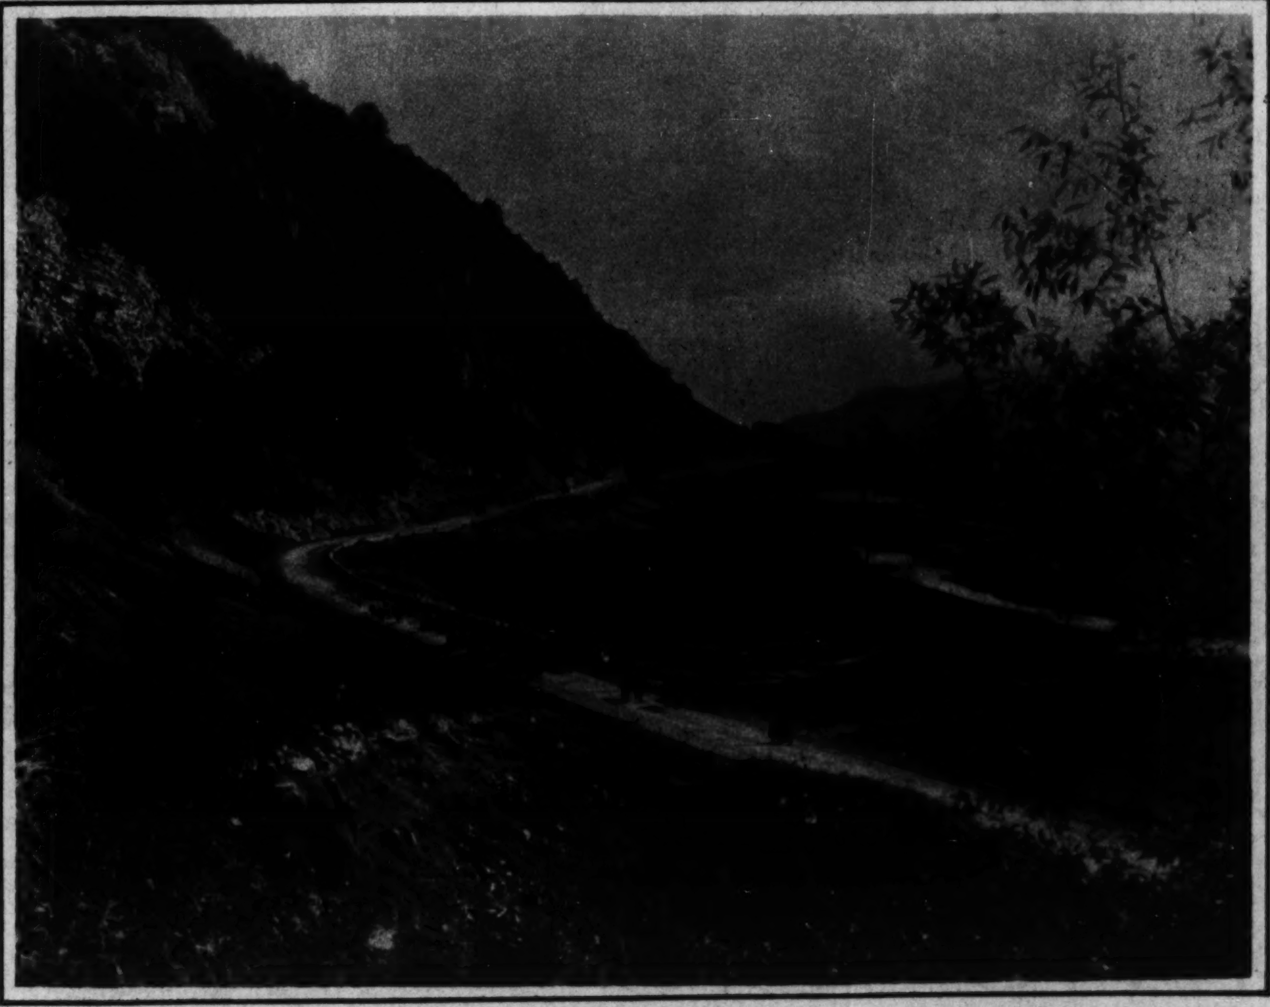
HEROES WHO FELL IN "THE VALLEY OF DEATH" sleep here in the little British cemetery at Balaklava. Many others there are, too, who died on other Russian fields during the Crimean war from 1854 to '56.

THEY SAY IT WITH FLOWERS in Vladikavkaz, one of the principal towns in the Caucasus. Which is to say that Lenin is recalled to soviet remembrance by this floral likeness in one of the public parks.

VOLGA BOATMEN, but not working at it. These third class passengers fairly swarm over the decks of the Volga river steamers, and usually they bring everything along except the kitchen stove.



BLACK GOLD assumes international importance in the great oil field of Baku, in Russian Transcaucasia. Here the Standard Oil company has contracted for enormous supplies of crude oil intended for the eastern market.



THE ROAD OF THE RUSSIAN ARMIES—The great Georgian military highway, traversing one of the richest and loveliest districts in the Caucasus.

A HANGING BRIDGE over which none may cross was left above the river near Hoosac Tunnel, Mass., by the New England floods. Rails and ties were left suspended when the bridge that formerly spanned the river was swept from beneath them. (Photograph from Pacific and Atlantic.)

RUTH ELDER VISITS MME. NUNGESSER—The heroine of the almost-completed Atlantic flight and her pilot, George Haldeman, extended sympathy during their stay in Paris to the mother of the French hero who perished in his attempt to span the sea via plane. (Photograph from International.)

AN OCTOGENARIAN EX-PREMIER goes a-visiting. Lord Rosebery, confined to a wheel chair as the result of ill health, quits his London house to travel by train for a visit to Lord Derby at Knowsley. The earl, who turned his eightieth year in May, was England's prime minister in 1894 and 1895. (Photograph from Underwood & Underwood.)

Favored-by all the World!

TWO odeurs by Houbigant—Quelques Fleurs and Le Parfum Ideal—are the most successful of perfumes . . . Since their first presentation, these lovely fragrances have continued to appeal to increasing numbers—and today the choice of smart women, both here and throughout the world, is most often Quelques Fleurs or Le Parfum Ideal.

In a gay flowered silk box from France, Le Parfum Ideal is $6.75. Quelques Fleurs, vivacious as a dancing sprite, is $7.50. In the center is shown the Louis XV gold-decorated bottle, designed by Bacarat—it may hold either of these two odeurs, and makes a charming gift. The large bottle is $25.00. There are also other sizes in these odeurs, which range to as low as $1.00.

You must send for the booklet, "Things Perfumes Whisper," and the five sachets perfumed with five Houbigant odeurs. It will teach you to use them. Houbigant, Inc., 539 West 45th Street, New York.

THE BIGGEST CROWD OF EMPTY-HEADS IN LONDON—A group of figures produced in the reconstruction of Mme. Tussaud's famous exhibition of wax works, destroyed by fire. Reconstruction is being carried on by Theodore Tussaud, grandson of Mme. Tussaud, with the help of his sisters and his son. (Photograph from Wide World.)

BROTHER JOINS ROUMANIAN KING IN DEATH—Four gamekeepers guard the bier of Prince Wilhelm von Hohenzollern-Sigmaringen in Sigmaringen castle. Wilhelm and King Ferdinand were estranged by the war. The prince returned all his Roumanian decorations when Roumania joined the allies, and the rift was never patched. (Photograph from Pacific and Atlantic.)

(Above) DOLLS FROM FRANCE are greeting Betsy Farman with a surprise party. Each receives a smile that only Pepsodent could keep so gleaming white.

(Above) WISCONSIN WINS! Which affords a striking opportunity of illustrating how Pepsodent keeps smiles gleaming white at college. Misses Rena Bob, Eileen Burns and Ted Long provide the evidence.

(Above) PEPSODENT'S FIRST MISSION is to protect teeth from serious tooth and gum disorders. To do this as science sees it, film must be removed, for film turns white teeth dull, "off color," and harbors most of the common tooth and gum troubles. Remove film twice daily, Miss Irene Love is told.

Smiles You Can't Forget

Are Those Revealing Film-Free Teeth

Dentists find that keeping teeth white this new way is curbing tooth and gum disorders

Send for 10-day Free Tube

LOVELY teeth, such as you see here, are not kept white and dazzling by ordinary brushing methods. They receive a new and special care dental science now advises for beauty and for health.

This new way acts by removing film on teeth, and film, modern opinion agrees, is the source of "off-color" teeth and of the commoner tooth and gum disorders.

Run your tongue across your teeth and you can feel film. A slippery, viscous coating. It forms on teeth and clings. In it, by the millions, breed the germs of acidity and decay.

Film is the basis of tartar. And tartar with germs is an established cause of pyorrhea.

Thus film is not merely a destroyer of beauty but a menace to healthy teeth and gums.

And ordinary brushing fails to successfully remove it.

To do that scientifically use the special film-removing dentifrice dentists advise, called Pepsodent. Pepsodent is based on the most recent scientific findings of the day. It differs in action by curdling the film, then removing it.

It acts to firm the gums. It multiplies the alkalinity of saliva. Teeth are whitened by it as by no other safe method known.

Use it twice daily and results will be amazing. To prove that, you are asked to accept a free 10-day tube. Send coupon.

SMILES ARE DAZZLING WHITE when film is gone. Teeth sparkle like polished jewels. Gums firm to healthy coral tint. Thus this new scientific way of dental care becomes one of the greatest beauty treatments of the day, and, with its unique therapeutic and prophylactic qualities, a great aid in oral hygiene.

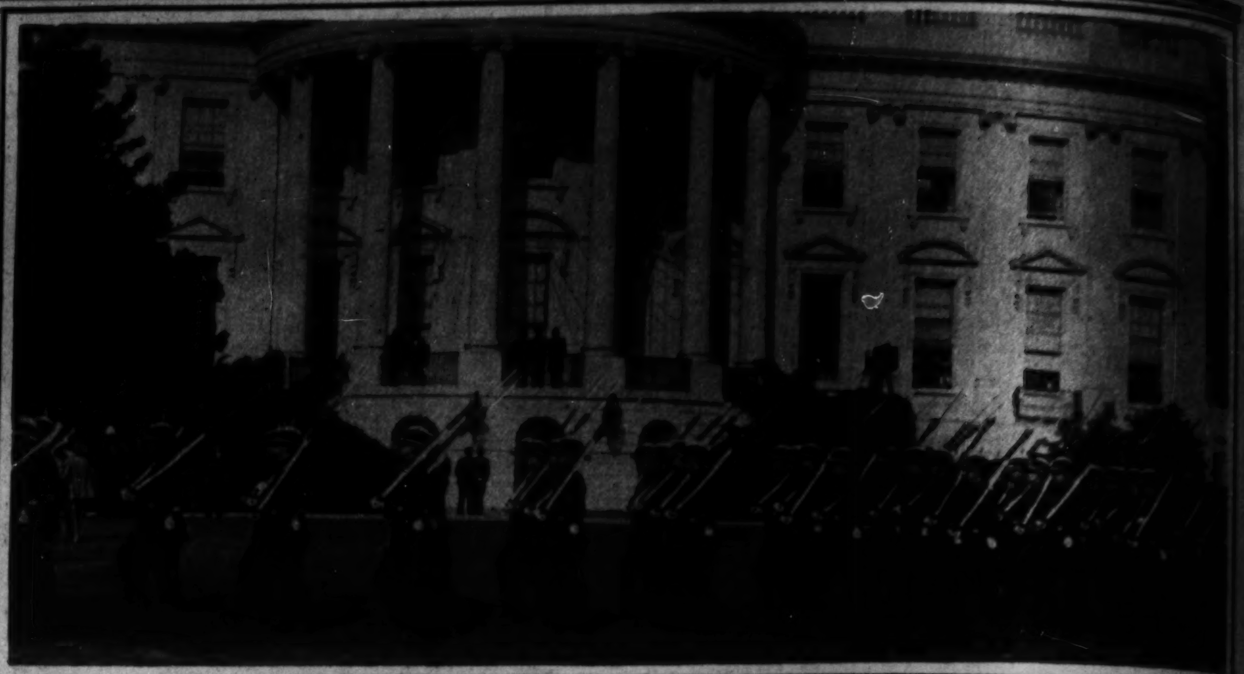
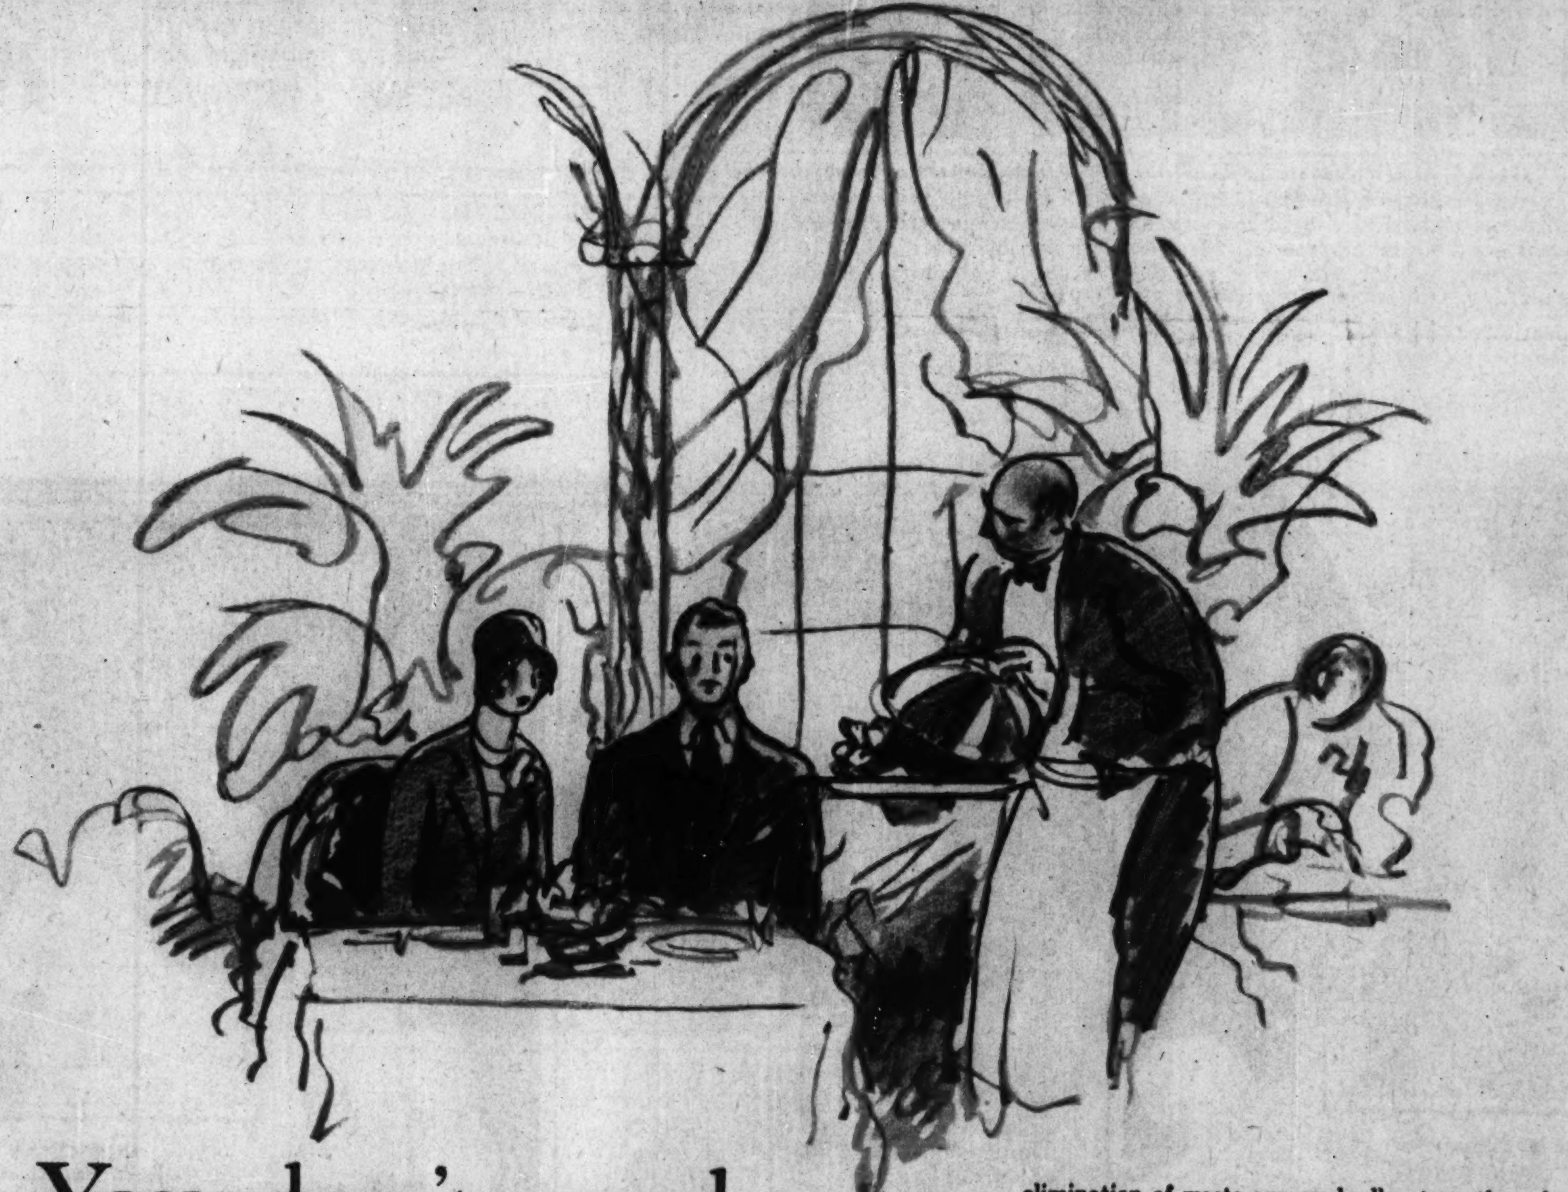
"THE FIRST DEAN OF MEN IN AMERICA" is honored at the University of Illinois by the hanging of this memorial painting of Dean Thomas Arkle Clark, guide, counsellor, and friend to thousands of Illini. It is the work of Charles W. Hawthorne, for whom Dean Clark posed last summer at Provincetown, Mass., in thirty-one sittings of three hours each. (Juley photograph.)

THE YOUTH WHO MADE THE CLARK MEMORIAL POSSIBLE—Truman Jones of Stockton, Ill., a junior at the University of Illinois, conducted the drive for funds for the portrait of the dean among men of the university, alumni, friends of Dean Clark, and business men of Champaign and Urbana.



THE FIRST BRITISH REDCOATS AT THE WHITE HOUSE SINCE 1814, when English troops burned the executive mansion, were these Canadian regulars, visiting the President on a mission of friendship. The troops, inspected at the White House by President Coolidge, had been sent for the dedication of the Canadian memorial to American soldiers who died while serving with Dominion forces overseas. (Photograph from Pacific and Atlantic.)

UNCLE SAM LAUNCHES WORLD'S BIGGEST SUBMARINE—The V-4, christened with high ceremony at Portsmouth, N. H. The first mine-laying submarine laid down by the navy department, the V-4 is designed for maximum cruising radius and endurance, enabling it to operate in conjunction with the fleet. Decrease in weight has been obtained by use of aluminum, nickel steel, and other alloy steels. (Photograph from Wide World.)



You don't need to give them up . .

DOCTORS say, "Eat heartily, eat a variety—but keep yourself 'regularized'"

FILET MIGNON—creamy potatoes—Russian dressing on your salad—chocolate parfait to finish . . .

These rich concentrated foods you like are not poison. They provide excellent nourishment and energy.

But how will you get rid of the waste from them? Cabbage, carrots, spinach at each meal? Every housewife knows how unpopular they are. And yet they must be eaten in huge quantities to have any decided laxative effect.

Cathartics? A temporary help but never a cure. Exhausting and dangerous to use daily.

Modern doctors are meeting the problem. Not with any medicine, but with a corrective food. Today physicians all over the country are successfully prescribing fresh yeast to provide the elements civilized diet lacks. To keep your system clean and active, so that it can eliminate waste completely.

As fresh as any vegetable from the garden, yeast actually decreases the number of harmful bacteria which are the result of a diet of rich, constipating foods. The daily absorption of poisons is prevented. The muscles which control the elimination of waste are gradually strengthened. Elimination becomes regular, more complete.

You will be amazed at the difference this simple corrective food makes in your skin, in your daily health, in your whole outlook on life.

Eat three cakes regularly every day, one before each meal or between meals. Plain, in water or any way you prefer. For stubborn constipation dissolve one cake in hot water (not scalding) before meals and at bedtime. Dangerous cathartics will gradually become unnecessary.

You can get Fleischmann's Yeast at any grocer's. Buy 2 or 3 days' supply at a time and keep in any cool, dry place. Send for a free copy of our latest booklet on Yeast in the diet. Address Health Research Department, N-804, The Fleischmann Company, 701 Washington Street, New York City.

San Francisco, Calif.

"Certain things I ate invariably upset me. For fully a year I had suffered regularly from indigestion and heartburn. Medicines didn't help a bit. Then, one day, I read about Fleischmann's Yeast and began to eat it every day. In a short time I was entirely relieved of my indigestion and heartburn. Today I can eat anything I want."

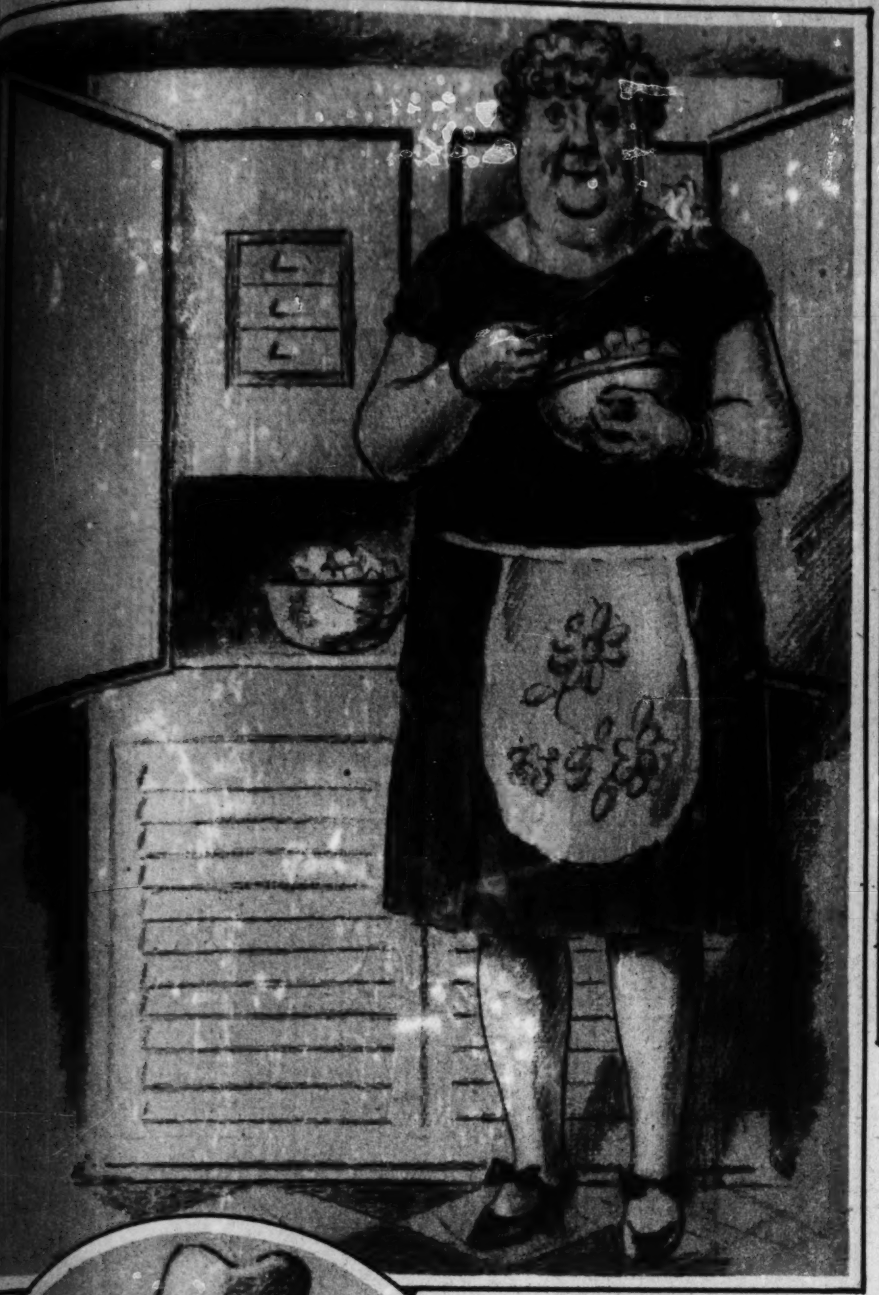
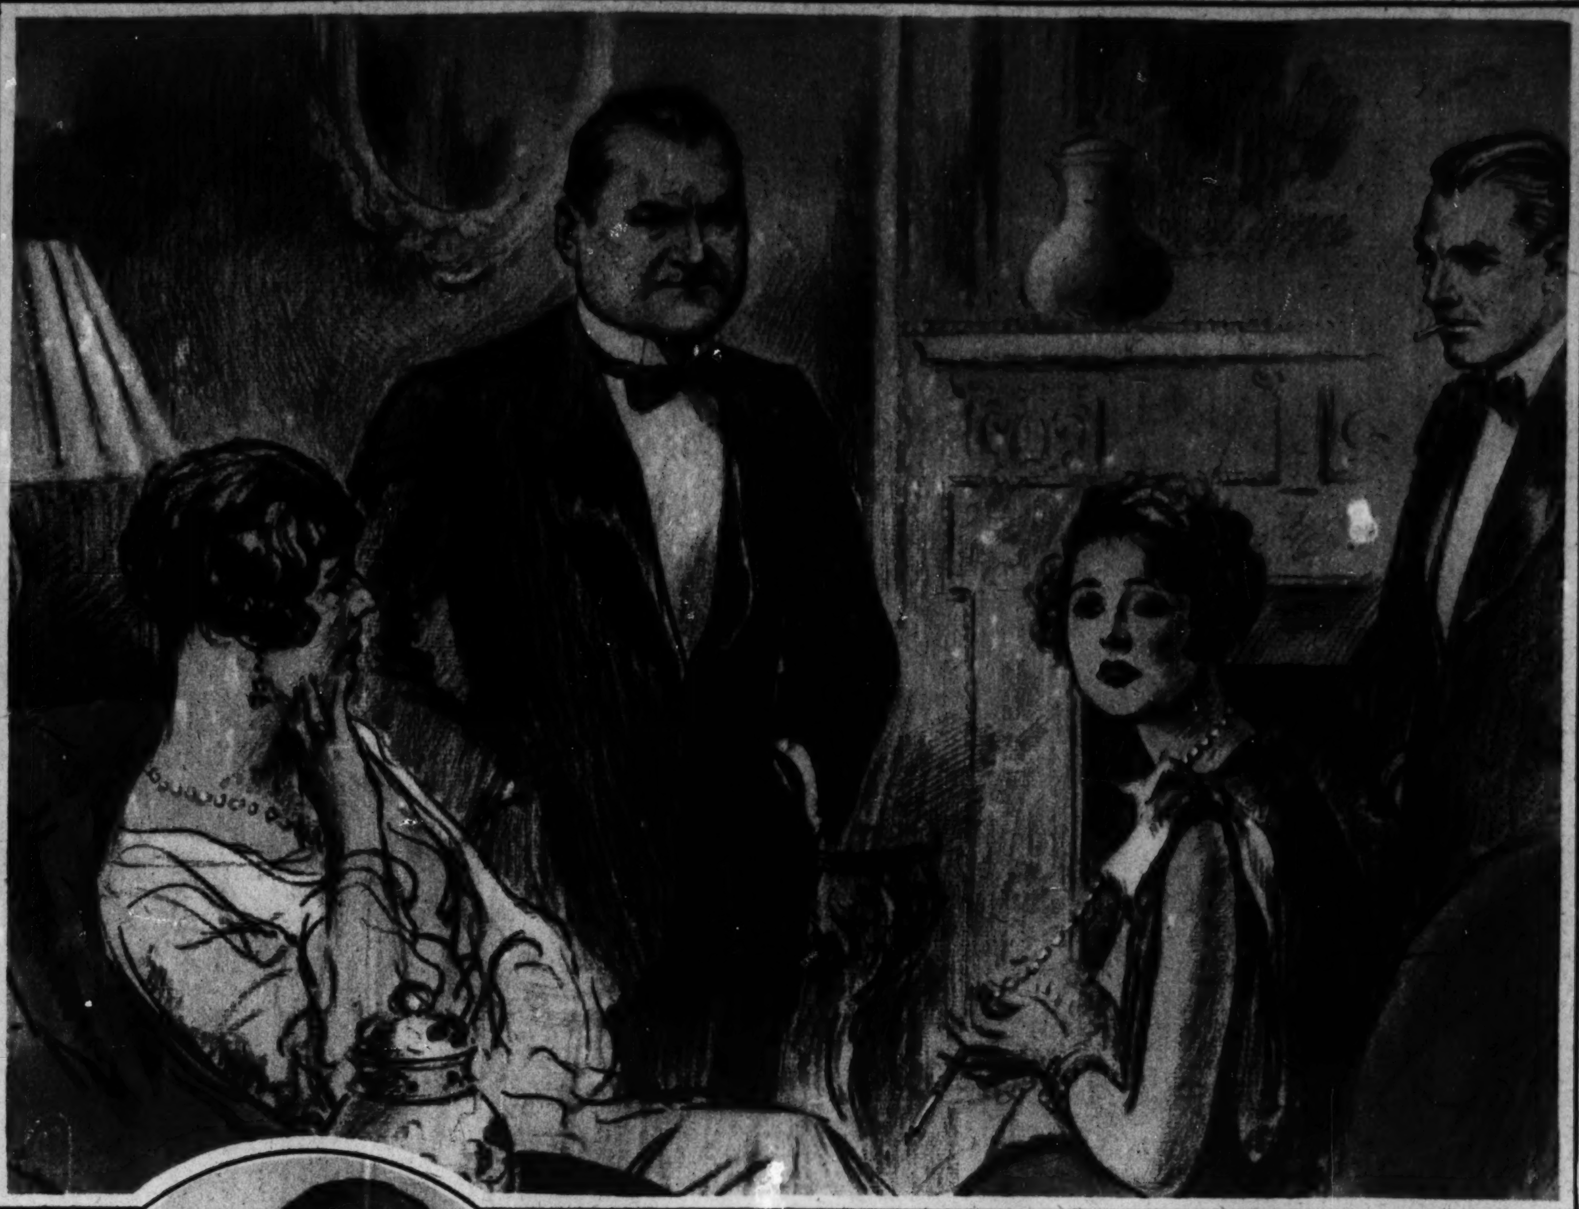
Artificial Ice

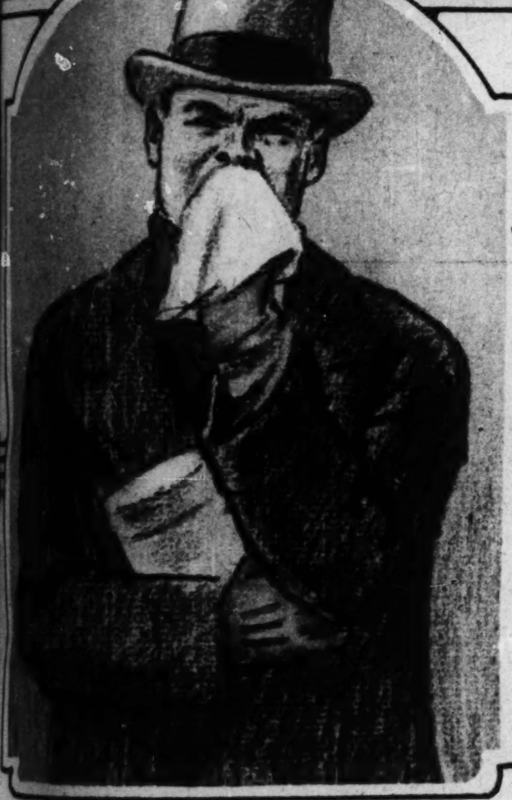
By W. E. Hill

(Copyright: 1927: By The Chicago Tribune)



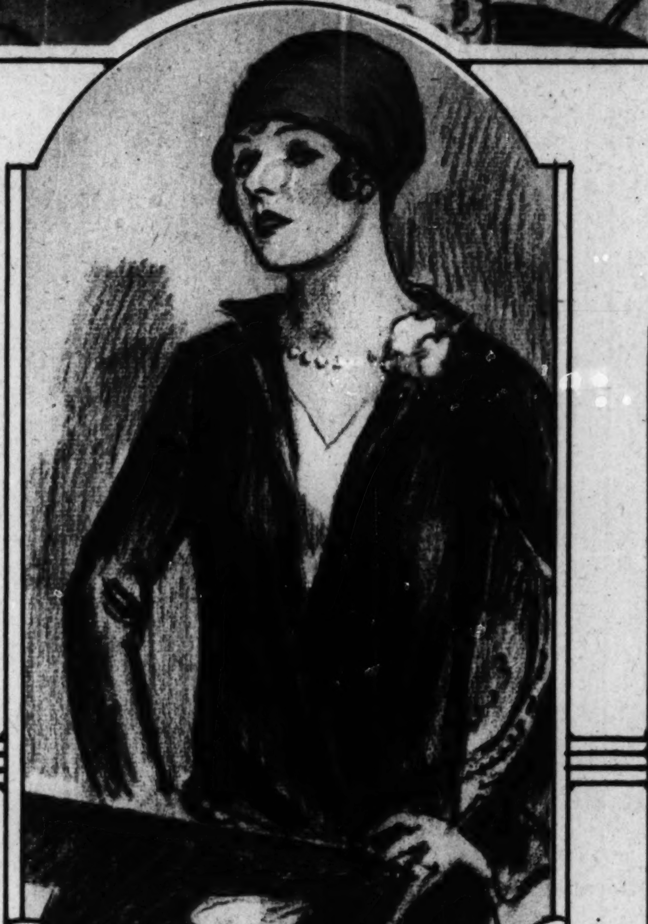


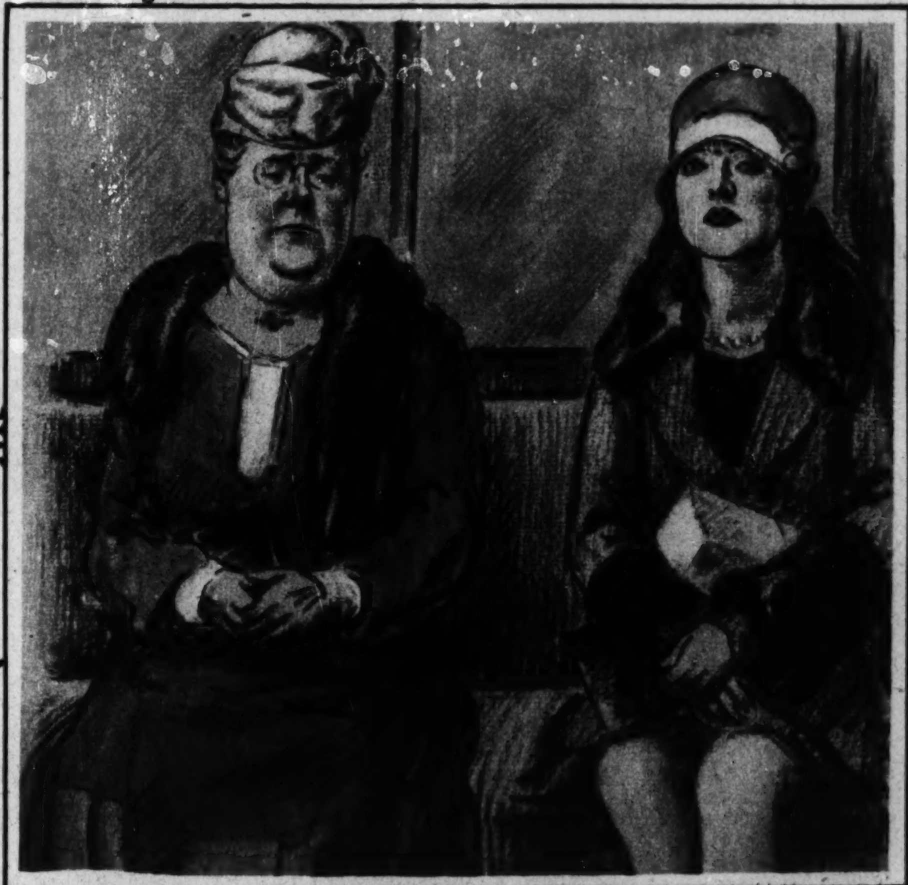
"My dear, you must come over and see our new artificial ice and electric stove combination with radio attachment that broadcasts as the ice freezes!" Social life in the suburbs has become awfully hectic since everybody who is anybody has gone in for plain and fancy electric ice plants. Time was when you could get a line on a family's social status by the make of their car, or the way they were interior decorated, but that was long ago. Nowadays you can tell instinctively whether the so and sos are worth knowing by the number of ice cubes per minute their ice box is capable of throwing off.



The ice substitute. Archie is one of those delicate boys, nearly sneezing his poor little head off at the slightest provocation. The little wife asked him to bring home a container of caramel ice cream in one of those dry packs, and he must have hugged it too closely to his manly breast. Anyhow, he's sneezing again.

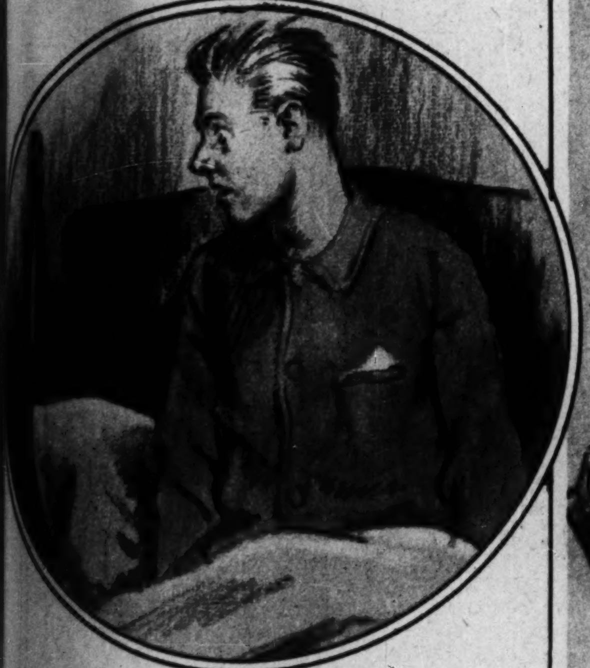
The girls who inhabit de luxe apartment hotels (no cooking allowed) where, with every two rooms and bath, the management throws in an individual ice plant, are having no end of fun with the artificial ice. Ladies with too much time on their hands and a tendency to undue introspection can go into the serving pantry and make the cutest little ice cubes for hours at a time. It's a grand way of keeping off the blues on dull afternoons.



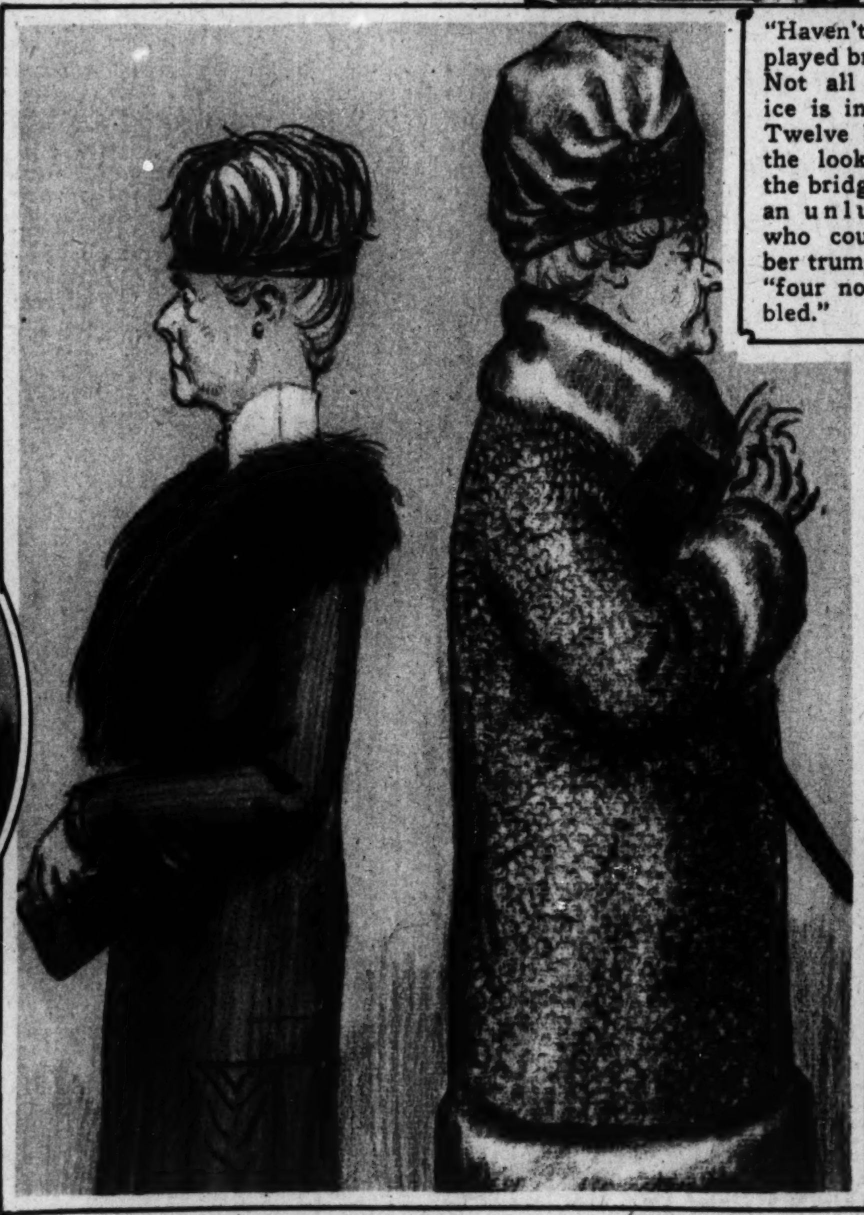


No artificial ice plant ever freezes as completely as does the Victorian lady when confronted by 1927 legs and knees and what have you in a public conveyance.

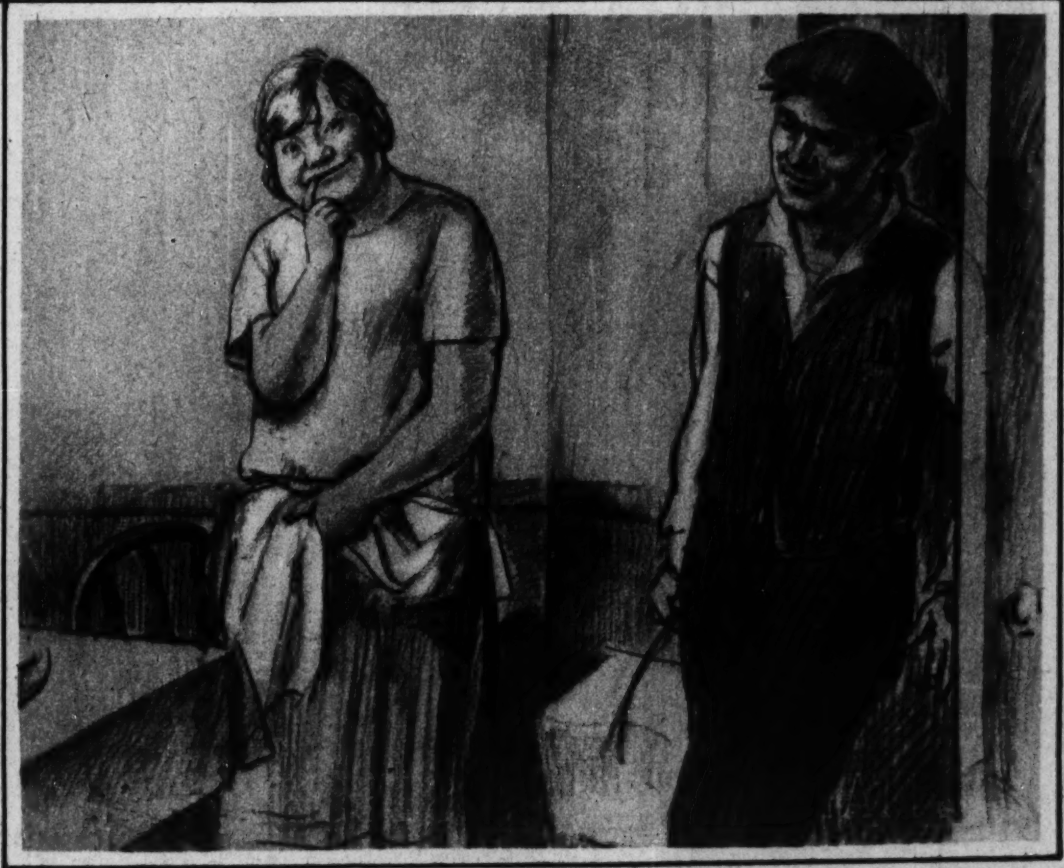
"Haven't you ever played bridge before?" Not all the artificial ice is in the ice box. Twelve below zero is the look with which the bridge player fixes an unlucky partner who couldn't remember trump when it was "four no trumps doubled."



An over-the-kitchen guest room in a country household where one of those semi-noiseless electric ice plants has been installed will be a lot more exciting for a week-end guest than sleeping over the morning coffee grinder. On and off and off and on during the night said guest will wake from a troubled slumber thinking that maybe there's an earthquake or that maybe something is going to blow up.



There's plenty of ice along Main street this morning, and it's not manufactured ice either. Mrs. McMorgue and Mrs. Corpsey had a little difference of opinion not long ago, and now, when they pass by, ice forms on even the warmest days.



And right here we may as well warn those families which are putting in artificial ice as a kitchen convenience for the cook that a good old fashioned ice man has a sex appeal that somehow or other is lacking in a modern refrigerator. There has yet to be an artificial ice plant with "It."

Le Début

It is not hard to understand why Parfum le Début made so notable an impression when it was first presented in Paris. Here is a fragrance so delicate, so illusive, so captivating that it spells sheer enchantment to one versed in the subtleties of perfume.

THE BADGERED BADGERS display a flash of power as Captain Crofoot of Wisconsin shakes off two Maroon tacklers and cruises around end for a hefty gain. It was not enough, however, to conquer the lust for victory that closed Chicago's season with a 12 to 0 triumph.

MINNESOTA GRABS THE LITTLE BROWN JUG—Hovde of the Gopher back field is cut down in an end run by Miller of Michigan, but it doesn't matter: the Thundering Herd rushes on to 13 to 7 victory before the crowd of 85,000 at Ann Arbor, climaxing a triumphant conference season marred only by the tie game with Indiana.

WHILE ILLINOIS NAILED DOWN THE BIG TEN TITLE—Eby of Ohio is loose, but not for long, as fighting Illini bear down on him during the clash witnessed by 70,000 at Columbus. Neither by plunge nor pass, indeed, could the Buckeyes score against the Zuppke machine that turned out a 13 to 0 victory for the day and an unblemished conference record for the season.

X-ray pictures show

what happens to babies' bones

In Bottled Sunshine—cod-liver oil—is the element of sunshine that builds good bones and teeth

when they are not protected by Bottled Sunshine!

Your baby may look plump and rosy. Yet physicians now are warning of a danger the more serious because it is not apparent.

It is the danger of poor bone and tooth formation. Too often the X-ray shows the little bones and teeth to be soft and porous instead of solid and sound.

This condition, if not corrected, will prevent your baby from having some of the things that count so much for appearance and health. A shapely head, a fine full chest, straight legs, and sound, uncrowded teeth!

Even though your baby has the great advantage of being breast-fed, he is not entirely safe from this danger. He needs the same protection that the bottle-fed baby must have.

A protective substance (Vitamin D) must be supplied to build strong bones and sound teeth. Science has found two readily available sources of this substance—sunshine and good cod-liver oil.

Sunshine would keep your baby safe if he could get enough of it on his bare body. But clouds, fog, smoke and clothing make this impossible. Even ordinary window glass shuts out the rays that protect—the ultra-violet rays.

Authorities therefore have come to depend for protection on what they call "Bottled Sunshine"—good cod-liver oil! They urge mothers to give it as a regular part of the daily diet, because it is the richest known source of both Vitamins A and D.

A great many of these authorities recommend Squibb's Cod-Liver Oil because it is exceptionally rich in the two protective elements—Vitamin D which is essential for building strong bones and sound teeth, and Vitamin A which builds vitality and helps to prevent colds and other infections.

Squibb's Cod-Liver Oil gives a greater amount of protection because it is all oil, undiluted. And, unlike other oils, it does not deteriorate with age.

Your physician will tell you that you can give no better cod-liver oil than Squibb's. You can get it at all reliable drug stores.

No longer soap, water and luck

It is no longer a mark of intelligence and good breeding for a woman to trust her precious complexion to nothing but soap, water, and luck. It is unscientific, dowdy, and not even very cleanly.

Dorothy Gray's method of skin care appeals to the modern woman, for it was evolved with this scientific principle as its foundation; a rapid, healthy circulation is the first essential of a good complexion. Miss Gray's treatments and preparations cleanse, of course; they nourish the skin; they correct excessive oiliness or dryness. But the basic principle of the Dorothy Gray method is the stimulation of circulation.

That is why Dorothy Gray has had so remarkable a success in strengthening sagging muscles, in restoring the firm contour of youth, and the satiny skin texture which is every woman's natural heritage.

The Dorothy Gray treatments are now available to Chicago women at the new salon at 900 Michigan Avenue North. There, and at the leading shops, the Dorothy Gray preparations may be obtained.

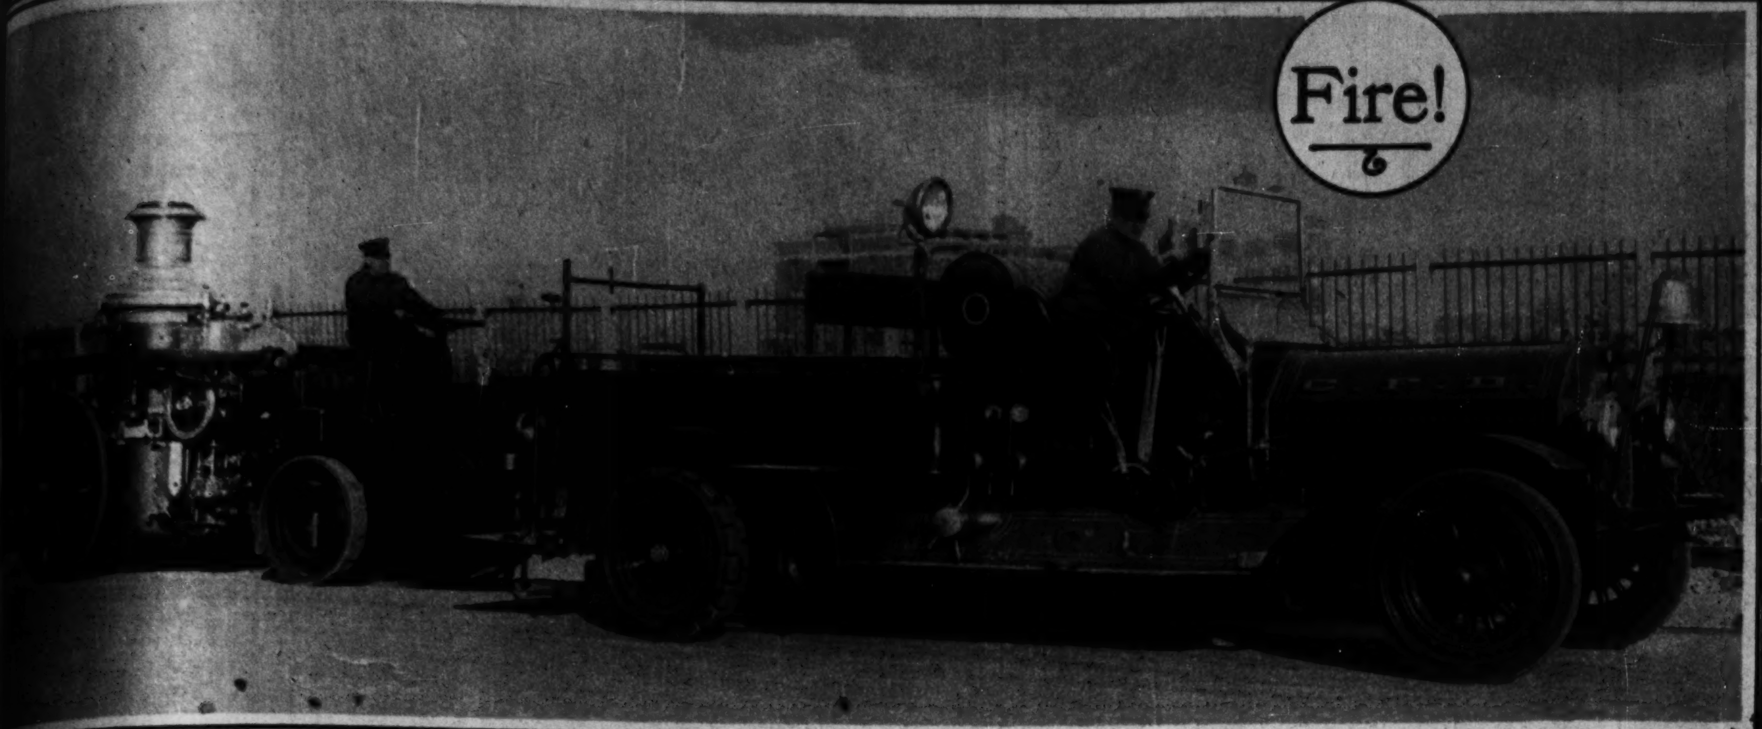
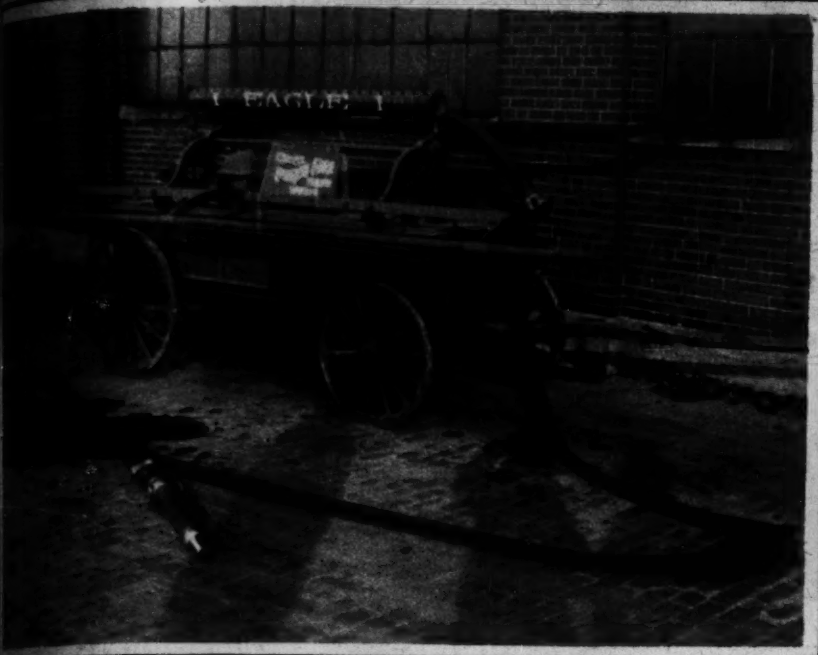
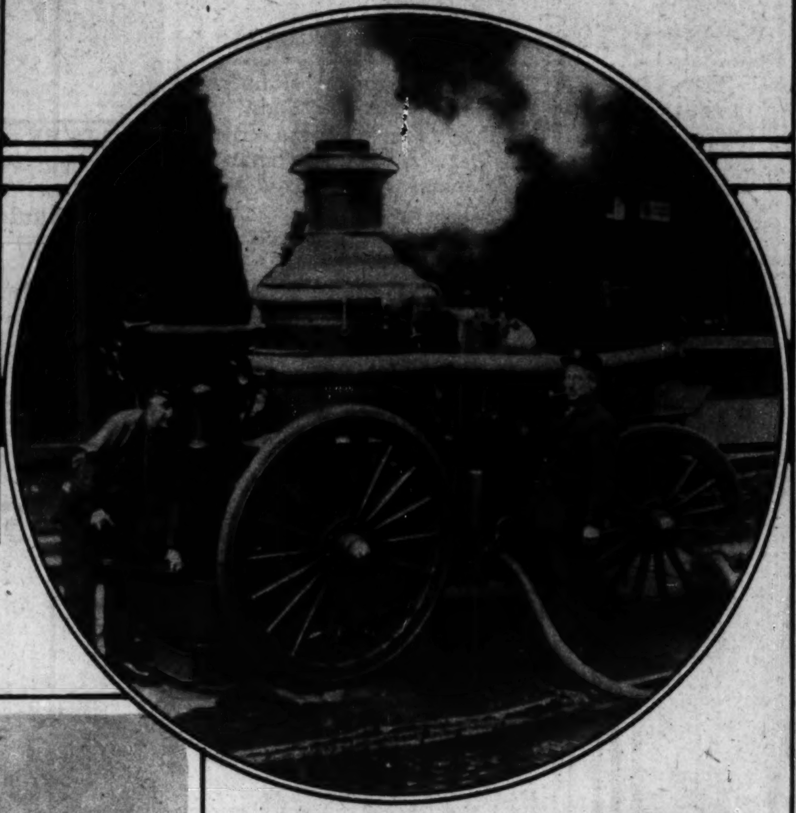
Fire!



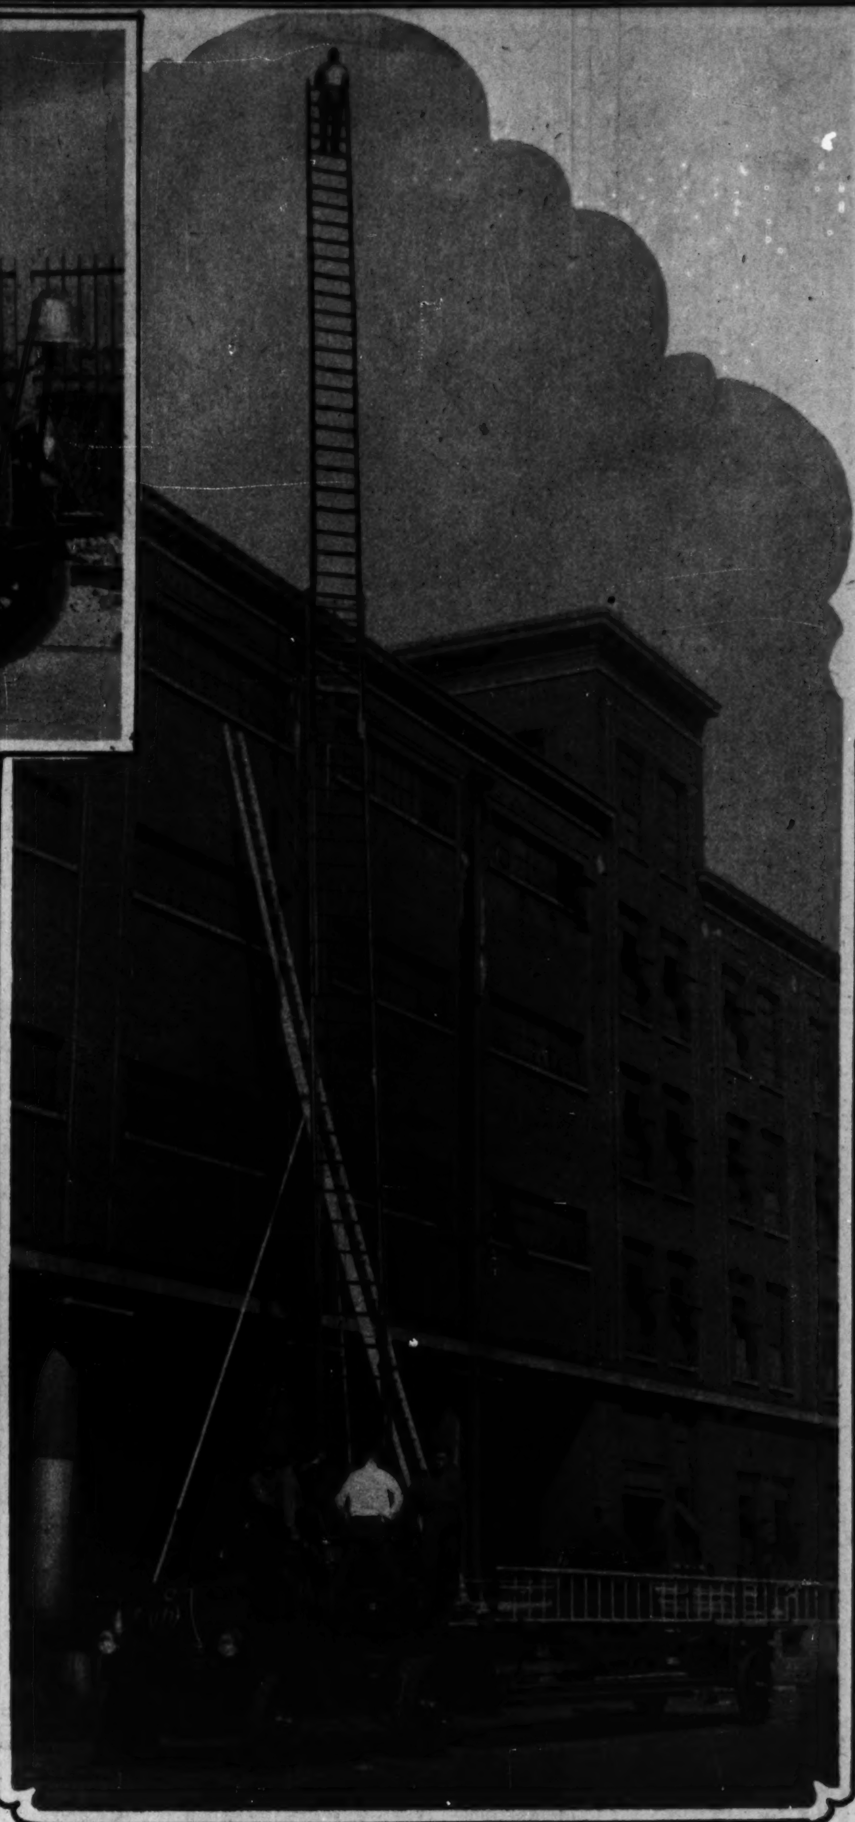
CHICAGO'S FIRST MOTOR ENGINE is the 'way-back-whenner at the left, which put the gallant horse out of a heroic business. In front of it is the powerful pumper of today, epitomizing progress and efficiency in its very lines.



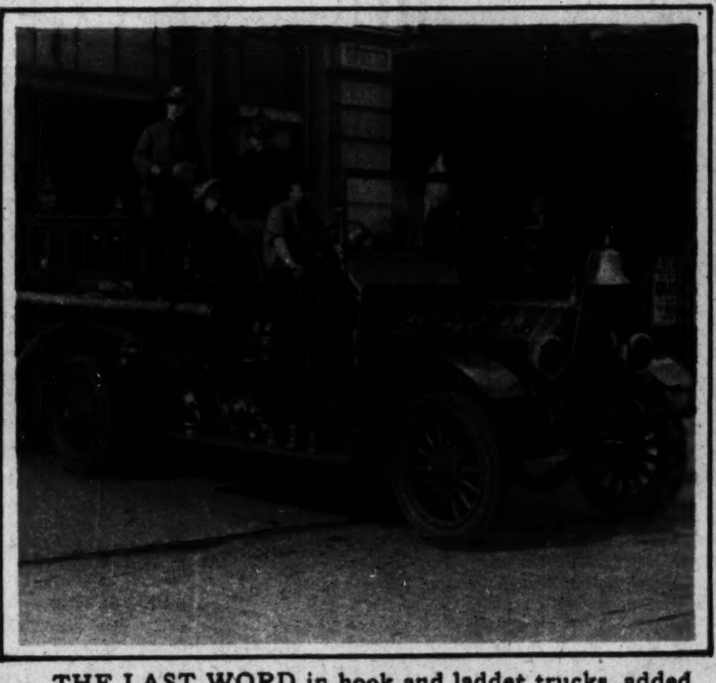
BACK IN 1838 the boys raced to the engine house when the alarm was rung and by hand power dragged out this ancient machine, treasured by Chicago's fire department as the city's first engine. That was only three years after the organization of Chicago's first force.



GONE ARE THE DAYS when the horse drawn, coal burning snorters thundered to the scene of the conflagration, hooked up to the hydrant, and settled down to business. Not very far gone, however; the department has been completely motorized for less than five years.

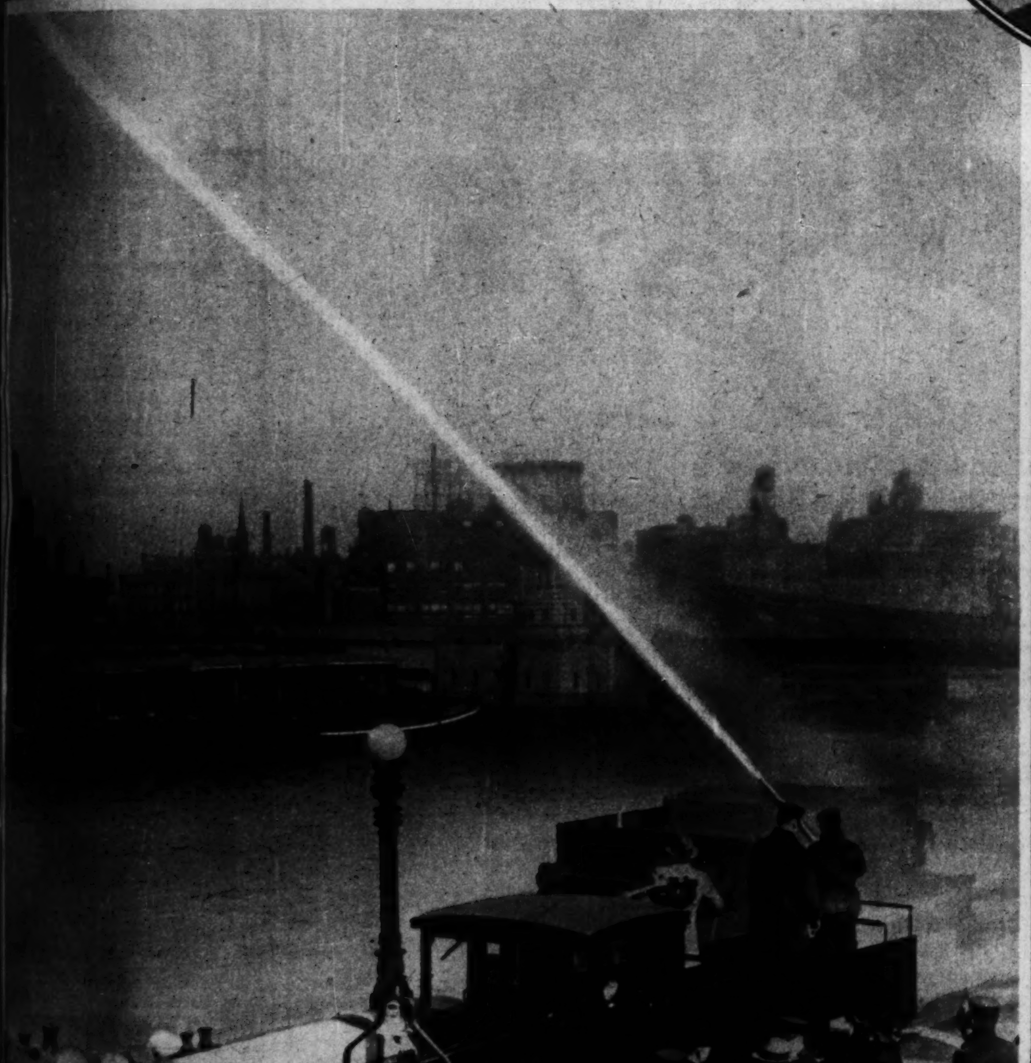


QUICK AS A WINK the smoke eater of today goes into action. This new hook and ladder truck, put into service just this fall, thrusts the ladder 85 feet into the air in three seconds by means of compression devices operated directly by the engine.



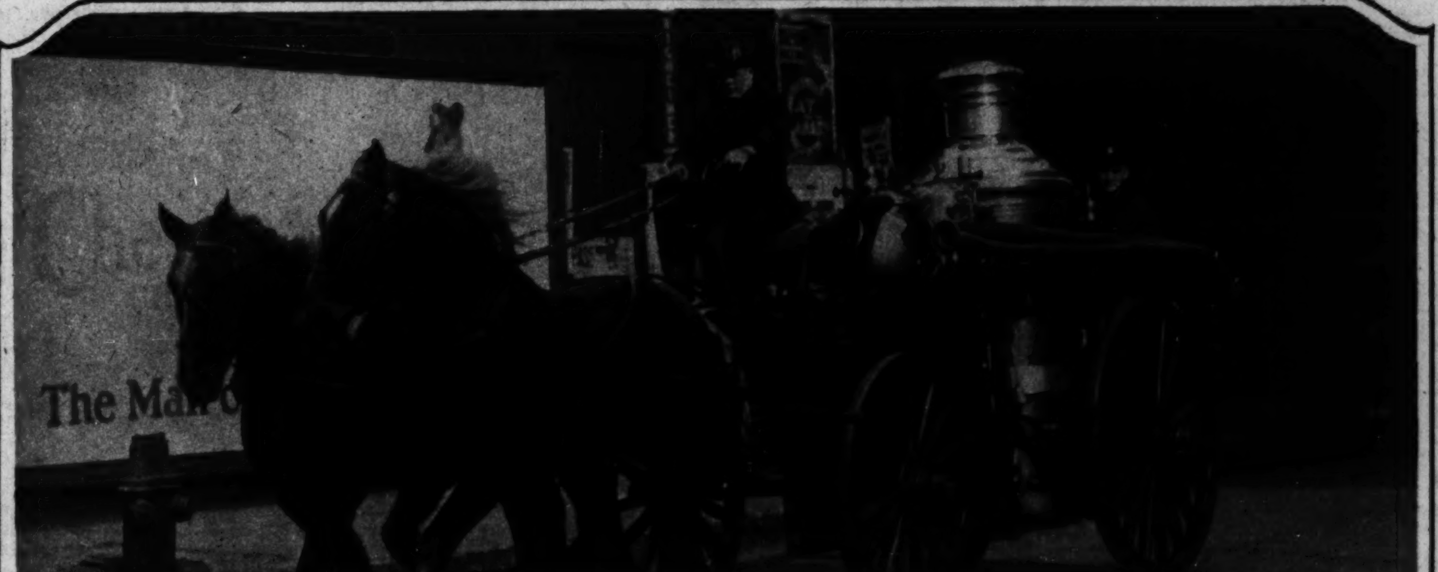
THE LAST WORD in hook and ladder trucks, added this fall to Chicago's equipment.

THEY SMOTHER THE FIRE with the foamite truck when gasoline, grease, or high explosives are ablaze. Such equipment comes into its own especially at the stock yards and at garages.



THE NEW HIGH PRESSURE NOZZLE, hooked up with fire engine or fire boat. A far cry from the '40s, when volunteers pumped the water, if any, from cistern, sewer, or river!

NOT AN ANTI-AIRCRAFT GUN, but the high pressure nozzle in closeup. So powerful it is that even a brick wall will crumble before its attack.



BUT "THE MIDNIGHT FIRE ALARM" IS A THING OF THE PAST—And however efficient the new-fangled contraptions may be, there isn't the thrill of wild-eyed horses tearing down the street in front of clouds of smoke and showers of sparks and clanging bells that used to set a feller's pulse a-racin' with his feet.

DOROTHY GULLIVER, TOM GALLERY, AND RIN-TIN-TIN form this trio. You will see them all so sad and noble in "A Dog of the Regiment," which is the attraction this week at the Majestic theater.

JEANNE EAGELS, who made "Rain" famous and was made famous by "Rain," makes her initial appearance in pictures, co-starring with John Gilbert in "Man, Woman and Sin," which starts showing tomorrow at the Chicago theater.

LADIES FROM HELL? Naw, naw! Just Raymond Hatton and Wallace Beery acting up for their new picture, "Now We're in the Air." It's on the screen this week, beginning tomorrow, at the Oriental.

Now—for a good night's Sleep

The kind that makes you wake up feeling fresh and full of energy . . . Make this 3-day test and see

Tonight—you can get 8 hours of solid sleep—without the use of drugs. Tomorrow—you should awaken abounding with new-found vigor.

Drugs, even though they put you to sleep, always leave you "logy" and muddled when you awaken. You never feel refreshed.

But no matter how sleepless your nights have been in the past, there is no need for drugs today. For a Swiss scientist has developed a pure food-beverage called Ovaltine that gives you sound, restful sleep in a natural way. The special food properties restore your tired mind and body as you sleep. You don't wake up feeling "logy."

Morning finds you a new man. Fresh, clear-eyed, buoyant. You have the energy to carry you right through the day and into the evening.

We offer you here a 3-day test. We want you to prove what we claim. Note, especially, how good you feel when you awaken in the morning.

Why Ovaltine brings restoring sleep

First—It digests very quickly. Even in cases of impaired digestion.

Second—It supplies your system with certain health-building essentials which are often missing from your daily fare. One cup of Ovaltine has actually more food value than 12 cups of beef extract.

Third—Ovaltine has the unusual power of digesting 4 to 5 times its own weight of other foods you eat. Hence digestion goes on speedily and efficiently. As a result frayed nerves are soothed because digestive unrest, the main cause of sleeplessness, is overcome.

This is why, when taken at night, a cup of hot Ovaltine brings sound restoring sleep in a natural way.

Hospitals and Doctors recommend it

Ovaltine is a delightful pure food-drink. It contains no drugs. It is the special food properties of Ovaltine—and absolutely nothing else—that bring its wonderful results and popularity. In use in Switzerland for over 30 years. Now in universal use in England and her colonies. During the great war it was served as a standard ration to invalid soldiers.

A few years ago Ovaltine was introduced into this country. Today hundreds of hospitals use it. More than 20,000 doctors recommend it. Not only for sleeplessness, but because of its special dietetic properties, they also recommend it for nerve-strain, malnutrition, backward children, nursing mothers and the aged.

Just make a 3-day test of Ovaltine. Note the difference, not only in your sleep, but in your next day's energy. You tackle your work with greater vigor. You "carry through" for the whole day. You aren't too tired to go out for the evening. There's a new zest to your work; to all your daily activities. It's truly a "pick-up" drink—for any time of day.

A 3-day test

All druggists sell Ovaltine in 4 sizes for home use. Or they can mix it for you at the soda fountain. But to let you try it we will send a 3-day introductory package for 10c, to cover cost of packing and mailing. Just send in coupon with 10c.

I took Ovaltine to get a good night's sleep. I noticed that I slept much better, getting up with more vigor. I consider Ovaltine a sturdy, healthful food.

A RARE JEWEL IN CHICAGOLAND'S CROWN — Old Capitol, once the statehouse of Iowa and now the administration building of the University of Iowa. It was designed by Father Samuel Mazzuchelli, a Catholic missionary to the Indians, and the corner stone was laid in 1840. Today architects from all over the country visit the structure to study its proportions. At the left is the hanging staircase of Old Capitol, extending two stories. There is said to be only one other unsupported winding staircase in the United States, and it is but one flight high.

Waved again and again..........yet never waved over

As soon as your permanent wave begins to grow out, your hair is readily re-waved—by The Eugène Method. For the gentle Eugène Method is selective. It permanently waves the new straight hair without waving over the old.

Thus a Eugène Re-Wave is not a double wave—it is a matched new wave, strictly confined to the new straight hair.

You will find that it pays to pay the slightly higher price for Eugène perfection in permanent waving. Our booklet "The Eugène Method" tells the whole story. We will gladly send it to you, together with the names of accredited Eugène Wavers in your city.

School Teachers! NOTE:— The Game of Flags is instructive and entertaining. It teaches facts concerning races, lands and national emblems! To encourage teachers to assist their pupils 5 special prizes of $100 each will be awarded to the five school teachers whose pupils submit the best entries.

Here Are the Simple Rules:

1. Each Sunday for 14 weeks The Chicago Tribune will print a set of composite Flags of 3 different nations. Each set of Flags when cut apart and put together properly will make complete Flags. The public is invited to cut apart, assemble the Flags and name the nations they represent. The Chicago Tribune will pay $10,000.00 in Cash Prizes as specified on this page to the persons who send in the nearest correctly named and neatest complete set of Flags, in accordance with these rules.
2. This contest is open to everybody—men, women, boys and girls, except employes of The Chicago Tribune and their families. It does not matter where you live.
3. You pay nothing, just prove your skill.
4. The composite Flags must be cut out, assembled properly and pasted or pinned together. Below each Flag when assembled must be written the name of the country the Flag represents. Clues will be printed beneath each composite to aid in identifying the Flags.
5. In all, 42 Flags will be printed—3 each Sunday for 14 weeks. Flags are to be submitted only in complete sets of 42. Hold all Flags until you have the complete set of 42. Then send them to "Flags," The Chicago Tribune, Postoffice Box 1539, Chicago, Ill. Be sure to write your name and address plainly on your entry. All Flags must be in by midnight 21 days after set No. 14 is published. We cannot undertake to return any entries.
6. Each entry should be sent by first class mail—postage prepaid. Entries with insufficient postage will be returned by the Postoffice Department. Contestants may send as many sets of Flags as they wish, but no contestant will be entitled to more than one prize. Accuracy will count. Neatness will count.
7. To encourage school teachers to assist their pupils, 5 special prizes of $100.00 each will be awarded to the 5 teachers whose pupils submit the best entries. Teachers in public, parochial and private schools are eligible for these special prizes.
8. You need not purchase The Chicago Tribune to compete. You may trace or copy the Flags from the originals and assemble them from the copies you have made. The Tribune may be examined at any of its Offices or at Public Libraries free of charge. The judges will be a Committee appointed by The Chicago Tribune. The judges' decision will be final. In case of ties a duplicate award will be given each tying contestant.

BESS DOES HER BEST

by RUTH PINE FURNISS

A FASCINATING STORY
Complete in this Issue

Music Almost Wrecked Bess Bradley's Marriage Till Common Sense In the Form of One Wallace Marvin, Critic, Came to the Rescue.

WALLACE MARVIN walked up Pearl street smiling. He smiled at the store lights, blurring through the half-hearted spring storm; he smiled at the big flakes floating lazily before his young and earnest face; he even smiled at the passersby—but fortunately the snowfall concealed his beatitude from unsympathetic eyes.

This beatitude of his quite overwhelmed him. With a kind of sober ecstasy, an awed enthusiasm, he embraced it. Never, he told himself, never had brand new music been visited with such high good fortune. To set out on one's career with a chance like this——

Ever since last fall, when Mme. Bradley had first come before the public, he had longed to hear her play. But each time she had given a recital in or near Albany, some untoward circumstances had kept him away; and each time he had devoured the subsequent encomiums of the local music critics with a regret that exceeded mere envy. Elizabeth Volnar Bradley, niece and pupil of the great Josef . . . Next year, when, as her concert manager had announced, she was to transfer her activities to New York City and begin making longer tours, she would become, so to speak, national property. Now she belonged to this part of the world; she was local, and locally beloved. And he was to hear her play at last, was to be free to praise—nay, was to be paid to praise!

His smile had reached its maximum. He felt he could do nothing more about it. So he turned it into a soft and solemn whistle.

"Whoi—whoi—whoit! Whoi—whoi—whoit!
Whoi—wh-whoi—wh-whoi—wh-wh-whoi——"

Grieg's Bridal Procession, his own, his special favorite. She was going to play it tonight. O, incredible good fortune! O, apogee of blessed responsibility!

Responsibility, to Wallace, was a sacred trust welcomed with all the ardor of the youthful idealist. It was a chance to prove yourself. Some one or something—your paper, for instance—depended upon you, and it was your glorious duty to give of your best. Even as a cub reporter, he had turned out paragraphs that were minor masterpieces of conscientiousness. He had felt then, however, that in a bare setting down of events, a chance to prove was conspicuously absent. The most you could do was watch your English and not let the other fellow get in ahead of you. But in critical work. . . . ah, there was CHANCE, completely capitalized. There you could exercise your skill, your originality, your wisdom (when has twenty-four not abounded in it?) and your intellectual honesty — all, of course, for the sake of your paper. There you could really give of your best.

He halted in front of a store and lifted his watch into the light. Half past five. Only three more hours to wait. Turning, he retraced his steps to a cheap restaurant near the Ten Eyck, where he sat down at a marble topped table. After some little time a waiter drifted reluctantly to his side.

His order given, he stretched out in his chair luxuriously. Yes, sir; of all embryo critics he was certainly the most fortunate. A sacred trust, and a worthy beginning for it. Tomorrow morning the Albany Eagle would be proud of him. Tomorrow morning the boss would say, "That young Marvin—there's a man who'll bear watching——"

He began again to whistle his favorite, but remembering suddenly the new dignity which should surround him (like a halo), he ceased, and, drawing a magazine from his pocket—a copy of the Pagan Review, New York's most radical publication—he commenced to read.

ELIZABETH VOLNAR BRADLEY was practicing the Bridal Procession. Only three more hours before it must be played—in public. Her curly brown hair was awry, her forehead wrinkled, her red lips clamped close together.

Bing—bing—bang! Bing—bing—bang!
Bing—b-bing——

A wrong note! Her mouth pressed tighter; it was nothing, now, but a stiff tiny pucker of determination.

The Bradley's apartment was out near the Country club. It was a very small apartment, with a nursery barely large enough for Ellen's bed and the two cribs, a kitchen obviously not planned with Bridget's great bulk in mind, and a living room whose walls fairly bulged to accommodate the concert grand piano before which Bess now sat—and suffered.

For she was suffering. Ever since her program had been made up, she had suffered intermittently over these measures toward the end of the Procession. Whenever she had had a few extra moments, she had shut herself in the living room to work over them. But they still eluded her. It wasn't the actual "bing—bing—bang" (that part was easy; just chords), it was the passage introduced by the "bang"—a series of irregular notes running up and down the keyboard an octave apart in both hands, a passage which nervous fingers invariably ruined.

It was curious. She couldn't understand it at all. The thing wasn't really hard, not nearly so hard as several of her other numbers, the technicalities of which she had completely mastered. But this she simply couldn't get. The passage had a sharp, definite rhythm, and recently she had found herself inventing a kind of idiotic rhyme to go with it—repeating words (goodness knew where they had come from) every time she tried to play the recalcitrant bars.

"Do your best! Do your best!
Don't let an-y-thing ever keep you from——"

That was as far as she could get. For some reason or other, there didn't seem to be any more words which would fit in with the peculiar rhythm and still make sense. It was maddening—and utterly absurd. Why in the name of heaven did she want to find words? Here she was, giving all her attention to the silly rhyme, and letting her fingers go stumbling on by themselves. And the more she searched for the words, the less she did that "best" which formed the burden of her song! O, it was maddening!

Her cheeks burned, her hands were like ice. She was accomplishing, she knew, exactly nothing. But she couldn't give it up and stop. With the concert three hours away—no, two and three-quarters hours away . . . She must, she must get the best of that passage—and of that rhyme! She was filled with a desperation bordering on panic.

If Uncle Josef were only here. He could have set her straight in five minutes. But he was off on his annual grand tour. This was the first time in her six months before the public that she had undertaken to play a number without his careful coaching, his interpretation literally at her finger-tips. He had left while she was still on the first page of The Procession. Her protests had been brushed aside brusquely. "Pst, girl! Go ahead and play it. Surely you can work it out alone, after all the studying you've done with me . . . Work it out alone."

This time she got through it. But when it was over she felt weak and ill.

In one way, though, she was almost glad he wasn't here—with his storming and his sneering and his driving her on and on. She was never quite at ease when Uncle Josef was beside her on the piano bench. There was something about his harsh voice, his wild black hair, his darting, glittering eyes—something, even, about his very genius itself, that always made her vaguely uncomfortable. And yet, there was no denying that she was in sore need of him just now.

She rubbed her hands together in a vain endeavor to warm them, and tried again. She was half way through the passage—it was going better this time—when the door burst open and two small figures flung themselves into the room. Her hands dropped to her lap and she frowned.

"Now, Betty! Aren't you a naughty girl! Don't you remember you promised Mommy to stay away—and make Buddy stay away, too? A great big girl five years old certainly ought to be able to remember promises. Go back now. Go right back to the nursery."

But Betty, a plump mite with a rebellious eye, moved closer to the piano. "Don't wanna go. Wanna stay here."

"You can't, dear. Not now. Mommy's busy. Go on."

"Buddy wants to stay here. He was cryin' to come in."

"Buddy can't stay either, Betty. Neither of you can. Go right back to Ellen."

"Don't wanna. Don't like Ellen. Wanna stay with you. We like you, don't we, Buddy?"

The baby nodded carefully.

Bess' heart warmed. She leaned over and threw her arms around them collectively, realising all too well that her action imperiled discipline, enjoying it all the more for that realisation. "Well, then, five minutes," she conceded. "You may stay for just five minutes—if you promise to go away like good kittens after that. Will you?"

"Yes, Mommy."

"You, too, Buddy?"

"Umhum."

She accepted this as affirmation. "Sit down on the floor, then, and don't speak. If you do, you'll have to go at once."

They plumped themselves down near the piano stool, their round faces upturned, their eyes limpid with angelic obedience. Bess smiled at them approvingly and lifted her hands.

"Do your best! Do your best!
Don't let any——"

"Mommy!"

She shook her head.

"Mommy!"

"No, no, Betty. You must be quiet.
"Do your——"

"But Mommy——"

Bess' fingers paused on the keys. "Well, what is it? You may speak just this once—but not again, or out you go."

"Mommy—that's not the Pussy Cat song!"

Reluctantly Bess laughed. "You're quite right, Bettykins! It certainly is not! Mommy can't play the Pussy Cat now. She's practicing. Now, are you going to be quiet, or must I call Ellen?"

"Quiet," nodded Betty.

Buddy, intent upon unlacing his shoes, had, apparently, no surplus energy to waste.

"All right. But remember——
"Do your best! Do your best!
Don't let anything ever keep——"

"Mommy!"

The bar came to an end in a discordant crash. "Very well, Betty!—Ellen! Ellen!"

"No, Mommy, no! I'll be good. Please let me stay, Mommy!"

"Mommy warned you. Ellen!"

The nurse appeared in the doorway, her thin face black with gloom. Why was it, Bess wondered, that Ellen, usually so efficient and pleasant, always grew ogreish when a concert was in prospect?

"Ellen, you'll simply have to keep the children in their own room. I can't get a thing done if they keep coming——"

"They won't stay with me, Mis' Bradley. I'm after tellin' and tellin' them."

"Well, lock the nursery door, then."

"But they do holler somethin' terrible."

"I can't help it, Ellen. They'll just have to holler. I must be left alone. You know how it is, around concert times."

"I certainly do, m'm." Her tone implied that the knowledge was not among her dearest possessions.

Bess sighed. "Well, then, I wish you'd try to help me out more. It does seem, however, we're all a bit on edge just now, I guess. Now, please take them away."

Ellen's scowl was a victory in self-expressionism. "You better come along yourself, m'm, first off, so's they won't holler."

"I can't, Ellen." Her voice was crisp. "I've got to work, I tell you. You'll have to take them yourself. Make them go. Carry them."

GRIMLY Ellen advanced upon her charges. Buddy had succeeded in getting one shoe off and was chewing contentedly on the laces. He looked up at her with mild concern. But Betty, emitting a whoop of misgiving, ducked under the piano and came up on the other side, flat against the wall and well out of reach in the curve of the piano frame.

"There! See that?" An acid triumph lurked in Ellen's words. Clearly, this was no more than she had expected. "Sure, it's a young divil she can make herself when she chooses, so it is. And it's no one can manage her then but her papa. I can't get her out of here, m'm; indeed I can't."

Bess stood up. She felt that she was fast sliding toward a display of disastrous anger. "Betty!" she cried, sharply. "Come out of there! Come out at once, I say. If you don't——"

"What'll you do?" inquired Betty, with interest.

"I—I'll—I'll tell daddy."

Betty sniffed. "Hmph! He'll scold you!"

She was not far from wrong. Tully's failing was his daughter. Hastily Bess corrected her error. "Well, I'll spank you, then. I mean it—I'll spank you hard, if you don't come out this minute—before I count three. One! Two! Two and a half! Two and three-quarters! Thr-r——"

With a small squeal, Betty bobbed down and crawled on her hands and knees to Ellen's feet. But as soon as the nurse stooped to lift her, she went limp—a dead weight of pink gingham and naughtiness.

"I—can't!" grunted Ellen. "Sure, and I can't raise her an inch off the floor."

Abruptly, Bess's rage came to a head. Marching over to her daughter, she seized her in her own strong arms. "You bring the baby, Ellen. I'll attend to Betty myself."

Without wasting further words, disregarding the screams in her ear and the soft arms encircling her neck in an abandonment of anguish, she crossed the hall into the nursery and sat down on the bed. Ellen arrived with brother just as the promised attention was being administered. Shortly afterward, a kicking, howling bundle rolled from Bess's lap to the counterpane.

"Now, lock this door, Ellen, and keep it locked." She had almost to scream to make herself heard above the tumult. "You'll have to get them to bed yourself, alone. I'm not coming in again. It's after six."

And steeling herself against an inner whispering voice of weakness ("Comfort her! Kiss her! The poor little thing—tell her you didn't mean it!"), Bess went back to the living room, where she sank down on the piano bench. Tears that she would not shed were burning her eyeballs; she was shaking all over.

WITH a disconsolate attempt at detachment, she considered the situation. This was the way it always was, the way it always would be, apparently, whenever she was booked for a concert. Every one—every one in the house—in a jangle of irritability. And why? Why? Other married women managed it. Plenty of married women were artists of one kind or another and seemed really to get something out of it.

Even on her short tours away from home things weren't much better. She never could seem to separate herself from her responsibilities. She was always worrying over whether Ellen was taking proper care of the children, or whether Bridget was giving Tully enough to eat, or whether the window in the nursery had been mended.

But what good did it do to consider the situation, when consideration brought no light? And when the concert was only two hours away? Wearily she raised her hands to the keys.

"Do your best! Do your best!
Don't let anything ever keep you——"

Betty was still screaming; she could be heard distinctly through both closed doors. And now Buddy, frightened, no doubt, by the din, added his own staccato yelps to the unbelievable confusion.

Heavens! It was all very well to babble on about doing "your best," but with everything and everybody doing their worst—interrupting and interfering like this . . . More than anything else in the world at that moment she longed to bow her head and join her tears with theirs. But she must not, she must not give in. A crying spell before a concert always made her feel more jangly than ever. Weeping couldn't be substituted for working. If the noise kept on much longer, though——

She wondered miserably what the tenants above and below her must be thinking. "That artistic Bradley woman—she can play in concerts all right, but can't manage her children."

Well, she couldn't help what they thought. She had her reputation in the musical world to maintain, and Uncle Josef's as well. And there was her talent, too, to be doubled, according to scripture. She must never let herself forget that parable of the talents; they must be returned to their giver at the last, doubled or redoubled in proportion to one's capacity.

And added to this celestial obligation was her terrestrial one—the obligation to Uncle Josef. This being the niece of a world famous pianist was no light matter; it made her responsibility just twice as great. She almost wished that her uncle had never consented to give her lessons. Almost wished? Suddenly, surprisingly, she wished it very definitely. If she were the pupil of some one else—any one else—her success or failure would be a thing that concerned her alone. There would be no back-kick of personal relationships. And yet she really had no cause to be sensitive about relationships; Uncle Josef was making a very good thing of her financially.

But that was ungrateful! It was disloyal! Naturally he couldn't afford to give her lessons free. And look at all he'd done for her. (O, for heaven's sake, why didn't Ellen make the children stop crying! It was almost as if she took pleasure in it—as if she pinched them to make them cry!) Look at what he'd done for her. Given her a rapid grounding, followed by a start, a push, into the concert field long before most musicians were able even to think about beginning. A comparatively short time of intensive study, and he had sent her into the limelight, unselfishly allowing her to share some of his own glory. And he had egged her on, driven her on, whenever her all too frequent periods of discouragement had seized her. O, yes, he had been marvelous to her; indispensable.

Perhaps if he were here now he could shame her into taking a brace. At least he could show her what was wrong with this passage—this annoying, this tantalising, this damned—yes, this damned!—passage. If he were here——

With a start she awoke to the realization that she had been going over and over the damned passage, over and over and over again, quite automatically and not at all correctly. Appalled, she came back to earth with a thud. All that time wasted! See here, my girl, this won't do. You've got to keep your mind on what you're about! Now, then—(O, Betty! Buddy! Do keep still. Please!) Now——

"Do your best! Do your best!
Don't let anything ever keep you from——"

Her fingers fumbled as her brain sought the elusive words. Her mouth trembled. Why must she keep hunting for them? What difference did words make when——

A door slammed in the outer hall. Her heart jumped. Tully was home—and the children were still at it. Now there would be a fuss for fair!

Within three minutes he had stamped into the living room. His dark, handsome face was thin lipped with exasperation.

"For the Lord's sake, Bess, what's the matter with the children? I never heard such an uproar! I tried to get into the nursery, but that old fool couldn't—or wouldn't—hear me knocking. What's the matter with them?"

"Betty was bad. I had to spank her." Bess tried to speak calmly. When Tully looked like this it was well to address him with all the gentleness that you could muster, no matter how you might feel inside.

He was staring at her accusingly. "You spanked her? You spanked Bettykins?"

"I had to. She was—just awful."

"Well, I'll be damned! How many times must we thrash this thing out! How many times must I tell you that she can't be managed that way? See how good she is with me. Why can't you bring out that side of her? Why is it that whenever I come home I find——"

"That's not fair, Tully. You know

"The Three Musketeers."

It was like a picture some artist of a charmingly old fashioned school might have painted, using every last color on his palette. Rather obviously he would have called it "Paris on a Spring Morning;" and that's just what it was—with the sunshine, yellow as a lamp, pouring across the boulevards in a great, warm flood, the vaulted sky as blue as flax, the gay, shameless life surging everywhere.

Women of either world were there, pleasantly conscious of their fine feathers. The army was there, stalking along in clumsy, bulgy boots, dragging truculent sabers, twirling mustaches, ogling the women. A sprinkling of the navy was there, and a good deal of the nursery. The gendarmes were there, raising quite ineffectual, white gloved hands to stem the tide of motor cars that raced past with gleaming brasses and sneering, hooting horns. Little schoolboys were there in tight trousers and bowler hats, aping their elders who, in their turn, like all good Parisians, aped the British. Workmen were there, blue bloused, voluminously mustached, aggressively democratic; cassocked priests with gentle lips and weary, wise eyes; young business men in all the crunching dignity of recently acquired beards and recently acquired bank accounts; middle aged business men, comfortable, silk hatted, crowding about small tables in open air cafés, sipping gold and pea green apéritifs.

Also, there were foreigners. All brands and degrees of foreigners: a drove of Brazilians, wearing whatever was most exclusively and expensively bad taste; American and English tourists, smoking short briars with an air of moral protest; a handsome Italian with the black, staring eyes of his race, making the arrogant love of his race to the copper haired, green eyed Castilian woman who tripped by his side on high, crimson heels; a dandy Chinaman from the embassy in embroidered peacock blue satin, looking with deliberate respectability through his incongruous, gold rimmed monocle; a plum colored cannibal king, loyal subject of France, sporting the ribbon of the Legion of Honor on his savage breast; a Lutheran clergyman from Switzerland with white side whiskers and dusty frock coat; an Arab aristocrat, [illegible], burnoosed, contemptuous, statuesque; a kilted Highland Scot, his sporran jerking from side to side to the skirl of an imaginary bagpipe.

People on foot. People in motor cars. A very few in carriages.

The motley, highly colored mosaic of Paris—and over it all the scent of Paris, a mingling of gasoline and perfume and acrid tobacco.

"I like it," said the young man with the very dark, straight hair to the young man with the very pale, curling hair. "Here it is—this Paris—ours for the asking, the taking——"

"And the paying," the other interrupted. "Don't forget the paying."

"Damn!" exclaimed the first.

He was dressed in shabby worsted, his friend in shabby tweeds. They were shabby because they had no money, and they had no money because the war—they had served in the same French regiment—had cut them adrift from their moorings. Still, their shabbiness could not conceal that the blonde young man was good looking, the dark young man striking looking.

Women glanced sideways as they passed. Some smiled. Some turned and frankly stared.

There were, for instance, those two little short skirted errand girls who carried huge, round boxes stenciled with rose red poppies, improbable purple butterflies, and the world famed name of a modiste's shop near the Place Vendôme. They stopped at the curb and watched the two young men who had halted to light cigarets.

"Suzette," said Lucienne, "what nationality are they, do you think?"

"I've no idea. Shall we ask them?"

"Let's!"

They did.

"Bon jour, messieurs!"

The two young men raised their hats.

"Bon jour, mesdemoiselles!"

"Pardon! But, to decide a bet, what nationality are you?"

"I'm a Russian Tartar," replied the dark young man. "Sometimes the Russian in me bores the Tartar, sometimes the Tartar shocks the Russian. I am Prince Mehmet Tamerlanoff—at your service." He bowed; continued, indicating his friend: "This is Lord Frederick Augustus Cyprian Treherne de [illegible] Carmyon."

"Pleased to meet you!" said Suzette, thoroughly indignant at what she thought was a lie and an unnecessary slight. "I am the empress of China."

"Whereas, I," chimed in Lucienne, curtsying [illegible], "am Queen Mary of England."

They turned on their heels and walked away, their noses in the air, while Prince Tamerlanoff and Lord Carmyon looked at each other and laughed. For they really were Prince Tamerlanoff and Lord Carmyon.

"Now," commented the latter, "if you had only been dressed like a Viennese headwaiter and I like a [illegible] little cockney selling gents' underwear they would have believed us."

"I wish I hadn't pawned my silver gray morning coat. It was devilish becoming, don't you think?"

"Don't be a fantastic ass, Mehmet!"

"I fail to see——"

"What earthly good's a morning coat, even a silver gray one tailored by Mr. Poole himself, unless you can afford to have your shoes polished?"

"You are so patrician, so Anglo-Saxon."

"Not enough so, to believe the duke."

"What do you imagine he wants to see you for, Fred?"

"I don't know."

"Are you going to eat humble pie?"

"Within reason. Never cared for it as a steady diet. Come along, Mehmet."

They walked on. The spring lay across the boulevards like a carpet of gold. It was not yet June. But already the heat was growing oppressive.

"My feet hurt," sighed Tamerlanoff. "Shall we take a taxi the rest of the way?"

"What with?"

There was indeed neither money in their pockets nor anything pawnable. Three months earlier Lord Carmyon had spent his last ten francs on an extra rasher of bacon with his breakfast and Prince Tamerlanoff his last twenty francs on a tawny orchid for a very beautiful woman with passionate eyes and a stony, chilly heart.

The reason for Prince Tamernaloff's financial condition was simple enough.

The outbreak of the world war had found him military attaché of the tsar's Paris embassy. Unable to return to his native land and his old regiment, the Turkoman Cossacks, he had fought under the tricolor—had fought with that rather naïvely spectacular heroism so typical of his race, of both his races. At the time—don't you remember?—you could hardly open a Sunday supplement without seeing his picture—always with the trench helmet cocked on one side, the monocle in his left eye, and his riding breeches perfectly cut . . . it was a wonder how he kept his monocle from breaking and his breeches so superbly pressed—even in the trenches—even at Verdun.

Yes. Verdun. The quite amazing things he did there—this and that and the other thing, usually dealing with German machine gun nests—and a Chicago paper headlining his most foolhardy exploit with "Attaboy, Tamerlanoff!"—and the huzzas and hoorays whenever he went to Paris on leave—and the hysterical crowds following him down the boulevards, yelling:

"Ah! This brave Russian!"

"Ah! This brave Tartar!"

"Long live the tsar!"

General Foch had kissed him. The queen of Belgium had kissed him. The president of France had kissed him. Lloyd George and Irvin S. Cobb had almost kissed him.

Oh, yes—that brave Russian—that brave Tartar . . . and long live the tsar!

But the tsar had not lived so long after all. Revolution had broken out in Moscow and Petrograd. Thence it had rolled on, north, east, south, west, rushing across towns and villages, fields and steppes, like a sheet of smoldering fire, yellow, inexorable.

The bolshevist juganath had jerked into motion. Crunchingly, pitilessly, its wheels had moved.

Everywhere the cry had been:

"Da zdrastvooyet revolutzia—long live the revolution!"

And more ominous, more bitter, more direct:

"Smyert boyarum—death to the nobility!"

If not death, in case the particular aristocrat happened to be safely abroad, then complete financial ruin—and exile.

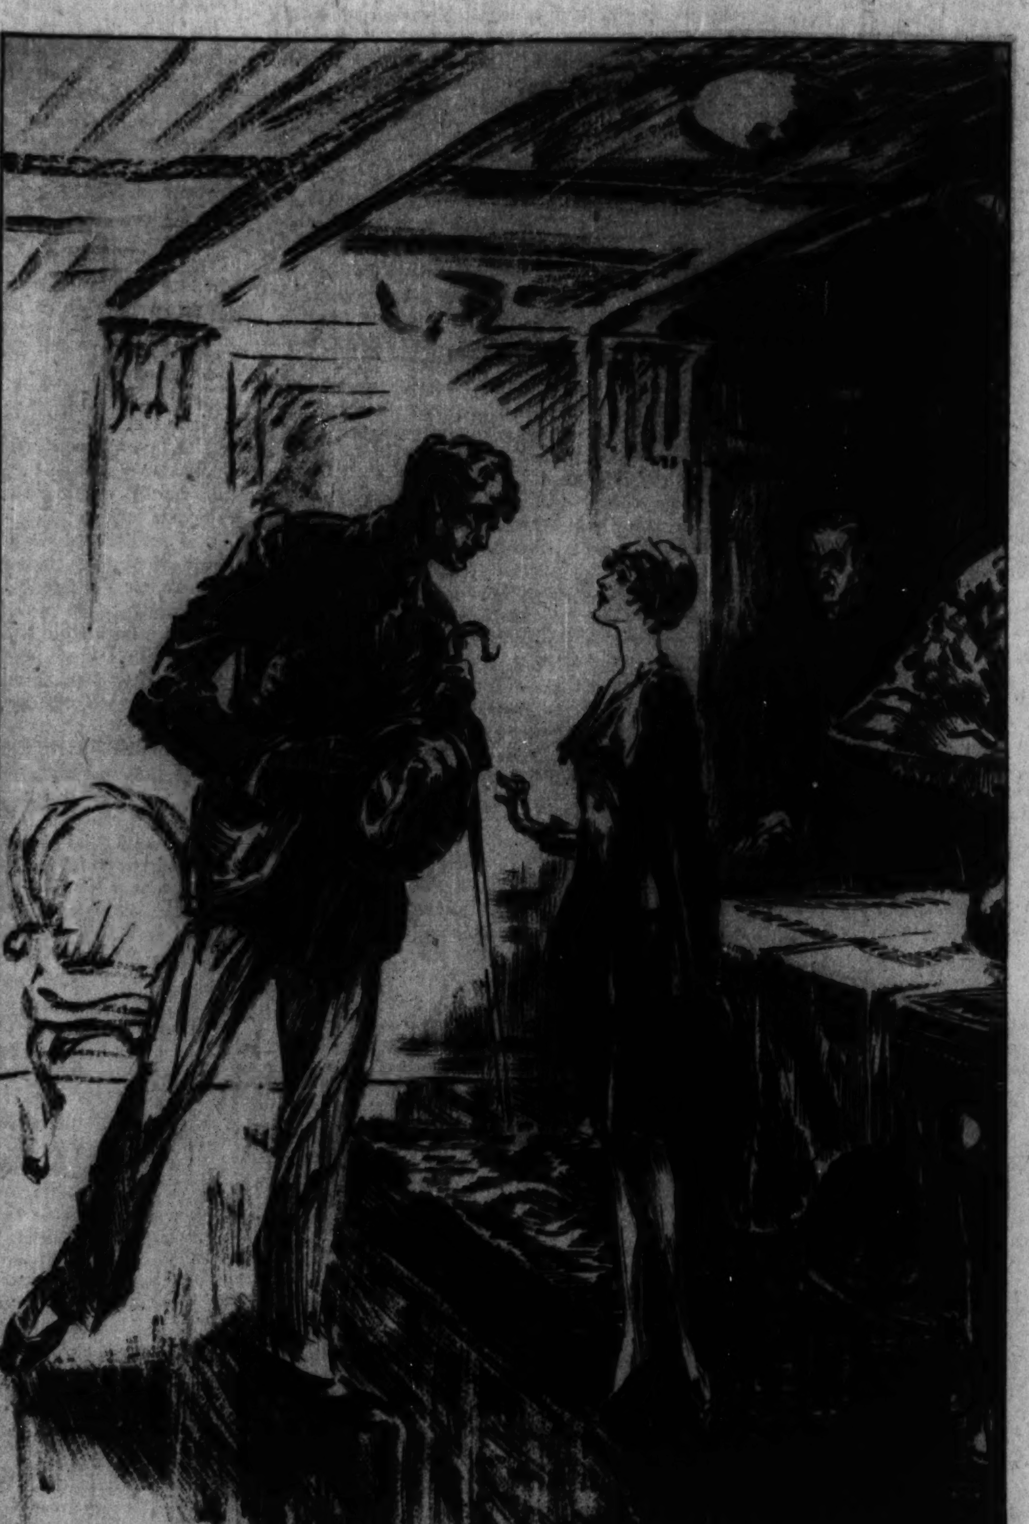
Thus the fate of Tamerlanoff, who discovered that with peace he was no longer the brave hero whom queens and generals had kissed, but just another bankrupt foreigner. Nor very popular. For was he not a Russian? Was not Russia bolshevist? Did not the bolshevists refuse to pay their debts to the French bondholders?

He tried for employment. Tried for it hard, his shabby hat in his proud hand.

But the invariable reply would be that there was no employment for Russians . . . ah, those dirty, thieving, murderous bolshevists, those . . . pardon? You belong to the old régime? You fought in the French army? You have been decorated? All the same, we have no jobs except for Frenchmen. War was war—but business is business, M. de prince!

So Tamerlanoff had spent his last twenty francs on a tawny orchid for a very beautiful woman with passionate eyes and a stony, chilly heart.

She, too, had kissed his lips during the days when he had still been that brave Russian—ah!—that brave Tartar. . . .



"I say! If you should ever need me—I can do the most fantastically reckless things."

The reason Lord Carmyron was broke was also quite simple.

For his parents were dead and he had always been penniless since his father—the famous, some say infamous, "Sportin' Freddie" Carmyon of Mayfair, Biarritz and points adjacent—had squandered on a red haired chorus girl the remnants of the fortune which his grandfather—the famous, some say infamous, "Fightin' Freddie" Carmyon of the regency, Carmyon of shady stock deals, Carmyon, almost, of Brixton prison—had squandered betting on the prowess of gentlemen with cauliflower ears who had battled according to the rules laid down by the late Marquess of Queensberry.

Of course, the present Lord Carmyon—"Mad Freddie" Carmyon, they called him—was related to half the British peerage, and the most powerful of all his kinsmen was his distant cousin, the Duke of Hampshire, that staunch old nobleman with the unkempt farmer's whiskers who nearly automatically becomes a cabinet minister whenever the Conservative party is in the saddle.

There had been a few thousand pounds, left him by an aunt, that had footed Carmyon's bills through Eton and Oxford. Afterwards His Grace of Hampshire had got him a berth in the Indian civil service, though the younger man had not wished to go, saying the army would exactly suit his style.

"No!" His Grace had replied. "You're as poor as a church mouse—and the guards cost money."

"I'm not keen about the guards. I'd like a commission in some line regiment where I can live on my pay."

"Impossible. You are Lord Carmyron . . ."

"I don't care."

"I do—since you are my kinsman. I shan't have you sip your sherry in the same messroom with a lot of shopkeepers' sons. To India you'll go!"

And to India he had gone, with the duke's parting advice that impartiality and tolerance were the keystone of Britain's imperial polity. From India he had returned a year later, saying calmly to His Grace:

"I resigned."

"Why?"

"The viceroy himself insisted I should. In fact, he gave me the choice between resigning—and being jolly well kicked out."

"What?" His Grace had roared.

"Right-o! I followed your advice."

"What advice?"

"Impartiality and tolerance! Britain's imperial slogan!"

He had explained how, overlord of a small Indian community which boasted only one street but three religions that hated each other cordially, he had been approached by the high priest of the Moslems, the high priest of the Hindus, and the high priest of the Sikhs. On the following Monday would coincide the feast days of a great Moslem, a great Hindu, and a great Sikh saint; the three priests had asked permission for their co-religionists to parade in solemn procession with their holy relics . . . "and only one street," Carmyon had added, "and bitter, three cornered hate! Well, sir—I rendered a decision worthy of Solomon, king of the Jews."

"Namely?"

"I proposed that the three priests pool their processions. Suggested that I myself should head the whole jolly show with a British military band playing 'Hail! Hail! The Gang's All Here!' Impartiality and tolerance—what?"

At which His Grace had exploded, tactlessly, brutally:

"You're a damned arrogant, brainless ne'er-do-well—just as your father—and your grandfather . . ."

The other had turned red, then white.

"Sir," he had interrupted, "you may not have cared for my late father's taste in chorus girls nor for my grandfather's taste in pugilists. But—by gad, sir—I don't care for either your taste in manners nor in whiskers!"

And he had plucked three hairs from his ducal kinsman's rustic beard; had left the room, slamming the door, and—somehow it had seemed the natural, logical thing to do—had taken the next boat for Calais and Paris.

A week later the world war had broken out. At once he had wired the duke:

"What about a commission in the army? Sorry about the three hairs."

Perhaps, in the hullaballoo of those first hectic war days, the telegram had been tossed aside as unimportant by His Grace's private secretary. Perhaps the duke had still been too angry to reply. At all events, no answer had reached Lord Carmyon, who, furious at his kinsman, furious, without rhyme or reason, at England, had promptly enlisted in the French army and marched to the front, dressed in the illy fitting uniform of a private in the Seventy-seventh infantry.

Had come peace; discharge from the army; a few thousand francs back pay.

Return to England?

No. The war had made him restless. He could not bear to think of living there—"pinched in," as he put it, "between Anglo-Saxon virtues and Anglo-Saxon vices—and the vices so much more prosy than the virtues—and both smelling so wretchedly of mutton suet and stale beer."

After all, he was a romanticist—a romanticist who, like Prince Tamerlanoff, found it impossible to obtain in Paris such an unromantically necessary thing as employment; and who, again like Tamerlanoff, the last ten francs of his back pay spent, might have genteelly starved to death had it not been for the good offices these last three months of a certain Hector Aristide L'Hommedieu.

The latter was a gascon who had served in the same regiment with Tamerlanoff and Carmyon and who, the war over, had once more taken up his former civilian occupation: that of bottle washer at the Chien Qui Fume, a cheap restaurant in the neighborhood of the Rue Pirouette.

He had remained a private while the Englishman had risen to the rank of captain, the Russian to that of major. He was a peasant, while the other two were aristocrats. But the democracy of war—the democracy of the same dirt, the same despair, and, occasionally, the same high elations—had made them fast friends. The Three Musketeers had been their nickname in the Seventy-seventh infantry.

So, quite simply, their last centime gone, the two musketeers had appealed to the third. Quite simply he had given them a fair share of all he had: his narrow bedroom in the Rue de Turbigo, his modest food, his cigarets.

He even offered them money. Of course, with elaborate delicacy.

But they knew how hard he worked for his few francs. They knew, too, that every day of his life he bought a bouquet of red roses for Mademoiselle Jacqueline Vauquelin, the pretty, little, black eyed daughter of the master plumber around the corner, not far from the Restaurant Pharamond, the Ritz of the vicinity.

The headwaiter of the Pharamond was also in love with Jacqueline. He had already spoken to father Vauquelin. So the Englishman and the Russian, guessing that L'Hommedieu needed every centime he could save for roses, accepted his money—they did not want to hurt his thin skinned, quixotic, gascon soul by refusing—only to lose it back to him, promptly and deliberately, over card games.

Never once did the gascon suspect.

"I'm lucky, eh?" he would exclaim guilelessly. Then, a hand on either of his two friends' arms, he would add: "Never mind! Some day your luck will change—at cards—and other things!"

And indeed it seemed that this very morning the gascon's optimistic prediction had a chance of coming true, at least where Lord Carmyon was concerned. For the latter had received a note from the Duke of Hampshire, who was passing through Paris on his way to London from the League of Nations, where he represented his country. This note asked the other to call at the British embassy a little before the noon hour—"to talk over your future."

"I hope he'll write you a fat cheque," suggested Tamerlanoff as they stopped in front of the embassy.

"Only for full value received—and then some. At times I suspect my ducal cousin was baptized with glue—the way he sticks to his money." He rang the bell. "Will you come in with me?"

"Heavens—no! I'd better wait outside."

"Why?"

"You seem to forget that, right now, being a Russian is considered something of a social error."

Upstairs, a minute or two later, Carmyon shook hands with Dennis Trelawney, his uncle's private secretary. They had known each other at Oxford; had met again casually in the mud of the trenches.

Trelawney was a hook nosed, serious faced young man who wore his braided morning coat and his monocle as if they were the sacramental vestments of some pompous, pagan faith of which he was high priest. He was the ideal private secretary for a man in politics. For he knew how to handle the importunate seeker after patronage, the professional reformer armed with a nostrum for all national and international ills, the important and official personage with a well stored mind badly arranged, the personal friend who thinks that every one has the same amount of leisure as himself . . . he knew how to speed them on their way, one and all, without either interview or grievance.

"What does Old Whiskers want?" asked Carmyon.

"He'll tell you himself."

"Sounds fishy."

"Don't be silly, Fred! You know he has brains."

"Trouble is that his brains are usually superior to his ethics. Well—lead me to him, Dennis."

Trelawney had already opened the door to the duke's sanctum when another visitor, a young girl, was ushered into his office from the outer hall. Carmyon was on the point of crossing the farther threshold when he saw her and at once rapidly retraced his steps, presumably to deposit his hat on the desk—which he knew quite well to be wretched manners—but in reality to get a second and more satisfactory glimpse.

He looked at her: the low, broad, white forehead; the whorl of russet hair peeping from beneath a tight fitting toque; the slightly curved, sensitive nose; the chin, soft in outline, yet indicating courage and strength; the violet blue eyes; the mobile lips, coral rather than cherry; the head poised with dignity upon a slim, white throat; the lithe body in simple, blue serge.

Here—came his silent and very un-English comment—is a lovely young girl . . . a girl exquisitely and intemperately beautiful . . . a girl for the sake of whose eyes a young man might do grand and glittering deeds and . . .

"Come in! Come in!" the duke's impatient voice interrupted his revery from the other room. "Don't dawdle!"

So he hurried across the threshold, closed the door from the inside, shook his kinsman's limp hand, and was immediately put on the defensive by the latter's first question:

"Have you grown more sensible with the years?"

"A viewpoint, sir."

"Not a bit of it. All people should be sensible."

"What a middle class remark—for a duke!"

His Grace flared up a little. His Grace was always flaring up a little.

"We can't all see life through—ah—the medium of a couple of absinthe cocktails before every meal," he rejoined.

"I never touch absinthe. Tastes too much like soap."

"You know damned well what I mean. Broke, aren't you?"

"Quite, sir."

"Going to try to earn your living?"

"I have tried!" This time it was Carmyon who flared up.

"But you have not succeeded. What do you know? What can you do? What are you fit for?"

"I can drill an infantry battalion. I can dig a trench with the best of them. I can handle a machine gun if it isn't the jamming sort, and even if it is I can make a fair stab at it. I can . . ."

"I know," the duke cut in. "You can murder people with the most scientific and modern methods. Nothing to that—just now. What else do you know?"

"Languages. My French is rather decent—and my Hindustani and Persian not so bad . . ."

"Which means that you can order a dinner without causing a riot between the Alsatian chef and the Swiss waiter, that you can get the points of the more naughty stories in the Paris scandal sheets, and that you are able to swear at oriental servants. What else do you know?" His Grace continued inexorably.

"What's the idea of cross-examining me?"

"To find out if you're beginning to see life straight—to see yourself straight."

"I prefer a sideways view. That's the way to overlook the things I don't like in life—and in myself. Well, sir—why did you write to me? What do you want?"

"I want to help you."

"Jolly decent of you. Make out your cheque to bearer."

"I've already done so."

"You—wh-what . . . ?" Carmyon was utterly astonished.

"Here it is!" And the duke produced a signed, pink slip of paper, filled out for five thousand pounds.

THE younger man shook his head.

"I don't believe it," he said. "I fancy it'll come back marked 'no funds'."

"It's perfectly good—and it's yours . . ."

"Thanks!"

"On one condition."

"I knew there would be a catch somewhere. Carry on, sir."

"Before, when you enumerated the catalogue of your accomplishments, you omitted one or two."

"How careless. You tell me!"

"You're a gentleman."

"Granted."

"You are familiar with all the social parlor tricks—you have a certain disarming charm—you are good looking . . ."

"Don't make me blush!" interjected Lord Carmyon, while the other went on:

"With this five thousand for a starter and more coming in every month you'll make a tremendous hit in Paris society—chiefly considering your war record and the many friends you must have made in the French army."

"But—I don't see . . ."

"You'll see in a moment. Society and international politics are hand-in-glove in France. Extraordinary people—these French!" His Grace of Hampshire was soundly insular. "Always messing about with intrigues! Remember Felix Faure—the Panama affair—Caillaux? Yes—always a scandal—always a woman mixed up in it—always a good looking young man. Always state secrets whispered—discreetly, or rather indiscreetly—across a bottle of champagne, a silken boudoir cushion, or—well—in payment for a string of pearls. I'll see to it that you get all the money you need—for champagne—and pearls."

"Aren't France and England allies?"

"No longer. The war is over. There are new conditions—new ambitions—new secret international alignments. British and French interests clash—in Africa—in the Near East. And Paris—a certain section of Paris society—is the clearing house for all the whispered news."

"In other words, you want me to spy on the country under whose flag I fought?"

"Why not? You're an Englishman."

"But—as you yourself told me—I'm also an English gentleman. Sir," said Lord Carmyon, "I shall tickle your sense of the ridiculous with one of those melodramatic gestures which that American actor chap—what's his name?—O, yes—John Barrymore—does so superbly on the screen. Look, my lord duke!"—as he tore the cheque into a dozen pieces and walked to the door.

He had already opened it when his kinsman called after him:

"Silly young fool! You would have been a howling success in the days of chivalry! Well—those days are over!"

"I'm not sure of it," replied Lord Carmyon as he entered Trelawney's office.

The young girl was still there.

"I'll tell the duke that you are here," said Trelawney, leaving the room.

By this time Carmyon had picked up his hat and crossed to the outer door.

He turned there and looked at her.

She looked at him with her frank, violet blue eyes.

"I wonder," she said quite suddenly, "if you can be right by any chance."

"About what?"

"The days of chivalry. Are you sure they are not over?"

To which Lord Carmyon—indeed there is a family tradition that his grandmother's grandmother had had more than a drop of Spanish gypsy blood—made one of his so typically un-English replies:

"Of course I'm right. Chivalry depends on a woman's charm, and beauty, and graciousness. And you——" He slurred; was silent.

"And I . . . ?"

"You are—if you will permit me to say it—like one of those lovely symbols which, so very rarely, a great and good God shapes out of the shoddy stuff called life. O, yes—looking at you, I'm quite sure that chivalry still exists."

"You say that because it's Paris—and May—and the sky so blue."

"I say it because it's true."

"If it were only true! O—if it were!" She spoke very softly, very seriously. Then she shook her head. "Of course, it isn't," she added with a little laugh. "I'm afraid you're a romantic young man."

"Decidedly. And, being a romantic young man, I beg you to put me to the test."

"How?"

"Allow me to tilt a lance for the sake of your glove . . . they did tilt lances in the days of chivalry, didn't they?"

"Those were the days when knights rode in armor."

"Well—this knight rides, rather walks, in regrettably shabby tweeds. But the outer man doesn't count—unless you're a snob . . . you aren't a snob, are you?"

She smiled.

He thought: the small, white face of her—how amazingly lovely—how perfectly, amazingly lovely!

She was still smiling. But he noticed that there was no life in her smile. Worry there was—and a certain fear . . .

"I say!" he exclaimed suddenly, impulsively. "If you should ever need me . . . ? I assure you I can do the most fantastically reckless things . . ."

"I'm quite sure you can."

"I'm glad you believe in me. I . . ."

"I beg your pardon!" came a voice from the door.

Carmyon spun around, tremendously interrupted. Trelawney had returned, walked up to the girl, and talked to her in an undertone for a minute or two, evidently expostulating.

She stamped her foot. Her words were high and clear and imperious:

"Useless or not—I shall speak to him."

And she entered the duke's room, while Carmyon turned to Trelawney.

"Useless—what?" he asked.

"Trying to persuade the chief. He can't help himself. We have our hands full in England—what with taxes rising—unemployment growing—imperialism at a discount . . . we can't afford trouble with Russia—not just now."

"What are you talking about? Who is she?"

"I thought you knew. She's the Sultana of Kivastan."

"O—that's who she is!"

"Right-o. Her Royal Highness Sultana Evelyn . . . only I'm afraid she won't be sultana for very long."

KIVASTAN is a small, independent principality up there in the far, yellow heart of central Asia, where three countries—Russia, China, and India—meet and swap lies, and intrigues, and threats, and occasional bales of goods.

Doubtless you have heard of Kivastan; doubtless read of it in your school histories. As doubtless you forgot it; relegated it to a back cell in your brain as something quite fantastic, legendary, romantic. But then, at times, Mr. H. L. Mencken notwithstanding, romance has a trick of being true—so much more true than mere realism—and Kivastan is a case in point. True, the tale of it; as true as there is today in Sarawak a ruling rajah with the prosy, burgess Saxon name of Brooks; as true as, quite recently, there died a certain kaid, Sir Harry M'Lean, commander-in-chief of the Moroccan army; as true as, almost until the Indian mutiny war, there lived in Rajputana and the Punjab mighty, turbaned thakur-rajahs called M'Gregor and Stewart and M'Kerr.

Highland Scots, you will notice; descendants from that Gaeldom which, a century or two ago, was pistoled and legislated out of existence by the German, today so English, Hanovers' red coated soldiers and black coated judges.

Amongst these highland Scots, early in the eighteenth century, was a kilted, landless, lawless gentleman by the name of Colin Mor Macdonnell. Having ambushed and killed a great English duke and with the king's men of law on a trot after him, and the moorland, the heather, and the bog myrtle giving him but bleak asylum, he left Scotland one fine, dark night aboard a French sloop; disappeared; turned up again a decade later in central Asia at Ullahbad, the capital of Kivastan.

There he liked it very much. Indeed, we have still in the Bodleian library at Oxford an age yellowed letter in which he writes to his cousin, Lord Ranald Macdonnell:

> "The women here are lithe and golden and rounded, with smiles like honey, and the men so strong and cruel and splendid. Mutton is cheap, seven shillings a hundred-weight, and there is laughter here and the grandest silks out of China and Persia and a fine deal of strife at which, as you know, I have always excelled. The Sultan, Mehmet Alwani, has made me his sipar salar, which means captain-general, and he treats me as if I were his son. So here am I, an honest Scot and Christian gentleman, serving the heathen Mohammedans. And, by your leave and may the Dear Virgin forgive me, I like it, and the turban which I wear is cunningly in the tartan of my clan. And will you give the enclosed lines to my second cousin, Lady Mary Macdonnell of Barrisdale, and tell her about the mutton costing only seven shillings a hundred-weight, but say not a word to her about the golden, lithe women of Kivastan, because I want Lady Mary to come out here and be my wife . . ."

Historians tell us how the old sultan, having no kith nor kin, adopted Colin Mor Macdonnell, who, on the former's death, inherited the throne; who wedded his cousin, Lady Mary; and whose descendants have ruled Kivastan ever since, always seeking their wives in the highlands of Scotland.

Wisely they ruled, keeping their country independent in spite of Russian and British intrigues . . . "until," said Trelawney, "both Sultana Evelyn's parents died and she came on the throne, the last of her line—and, as I told you, I'm afraid she won't be sultana very long."

"What's the trouble?" asked Lord Carmyon.

"Chap called Iskander Bek, Sultan of Mervistan—neighboring principality, you know. A while back he unearthed some ancient, local law according to which no woman may mount a central Asia throne. Furthermore, he produced what seems to be proof that he's distantly related to the former, extinct line of Kivastan sultans—says he's their rightful successor. I rather fancy he greased hands right and left. For there's a powerful court cabal—nobles and Moslem priests—in Kivastan upholding Iskander Bek's claims. And—she had news this morning, told me so while you were talking to the chief—revolution has broken out at her capital."

"Won't England interfere?"

"That's why she came to Europe—to put her case before Great Britain and the League of Nations. Iskander Bek followed suit. Sent his oldest son, Mustaffa Bek—nice youngster—I know him—educated in Europe. But England's unable to help the sultana."

"Why?"

"Page Mr. Trotzky! The Russians gave us fair warning they'll throw in their influence in Iskander Bek's favor if we should embrace her cause. Well—Kivastan's outside our sphere of interests . . . and it's hardly worth getting into a fuss with the bolshevists."

"I see." Lord Carmyon turned to go. "By the way, where does the sultana live?"

"At the Violette."

"Never heard of it."

"Ramshackle old hotel—near the Place de Thionville. She's very poor, you know." They shook hands. "So long, Fred!"

"Toodle-loo, old dear!"

DOWNSTAIRS Prince Tamerlanoff's first question was ingenuous and direct:

"How much?"

"Not a centime. Old Whiskers hasn't changed."

"What did he want?"

Carmyon told him.

"I suppose you were right," admitted the other with a sigh. "What are we going to do next? Hold up a rich Armenian—or a Brazilian? What's your preference?"

"Deeds!" Suddenly Lord Carmyon raised his stick and with a dry, hollow stamping of feet made a pass at an imaginary foe. "Fabulous and storied deeds!" he added, leveling his stick and poking his friend in the place where once was his watch, now pawned.

"Pardon?" demanded Tamerlanoff, receding a step.

"We're going to make history. Jolly easy—making history—when you're young and reckless. In other words, I've an idea."

"One of your usual mad ideas?"

"Quite mad. Therefore quite logical."

"Mind telling me?"

"Afterwards. I'll tell you and L'Hommedieu at the same time. Are we not the Three Musketeers?"

So they walked home through the golden day. They were silent.

Only when they came within sight of the Rue de Turbigo did Lord Carmyon open his mouth, and he spoke words which he should not have spoken, since he was not a Montmartre poet with floppy hat and unkempt beard, but only a titled English man in shabby tweeds.

"Mehmet," he said, "once, when I was still a schoolboy at Eton, I fell in love with the headmaster's maiden aunt because she had hair like silk and slim, white hands like riddles. And when I studied at Oxford I loved a number of giggling girls whom I met here and there—at Kensington, and Hampstead, and—God help me—at Earl's court. Then, growing ever in taste and wisdom, I fell in love with a brown, blowsy girl—that time I was in Marseilles—and her love was a laugh and a scuffle. But now I know that the only girl whom I can really love must have violet blue eyes and ruddy hair, and a grace and a something to put her aside from all other women . . . a girl, you might say, masquerading as a queen . . ."

"Romance, Fred!"

"The privilege of the very rich and the very poor . . . and heaven knows I'm poor enough."

They reached their house, climbed the winding stairs, entered the small room which they shared with Hector Aristide L'Hommedieu.

Then they stopped on the threshold, in utter surprise. For there, on his knees in front of the bed, was the Gascon, his shoulders heaving, mumbling words which sounded suspiciously like prayers, and holding high in his hands a little silver crucifix which his brother, a Dominican friar, had sent him at the outbreak of the war.

Quickly he rammed the crucifix into his pocket, quickly rose when he saw his two friends, and greeted them with his usual, boisterous good nature.

But his gayety was a pose.

"What's the matter?" asked Lord Carmyon.

"Nothing—nothing!"

"What is the matter?" insisted Tamerlanoff.

The Gascon was perfectly serious.

"My friends," he said in a low voice, "my heart is a sore and lacerated thing. My life is a little clay toy which has been dashed into many little pieces."

He lit a cigaret and continued calmly:

"I shall probably commit suicide. Do you think that gas is less painful than a revolver bullet?"

Lord Carmyon took him by the shoulder and shook him.

"Don't be silly, Hector. If it's mendable, we'll mend it. What's wrong?"

The Gascon sighed, went on with staggering earnestness:

"It is useless. I think I shall prefer gas. Gas is much less messy."

The Englishman shook him again.

"Tell us what has happened!"

"It is Jacqueline," replied the Gascon with a pathetic expression in his fine, deep brown eyes. "It's the daughter, the only child of that unspeakable master plumber round the corner."

"You don't mean to say that she has jilted you?" demanded Prince Tamerlanoff. "That she has married the headwaiter at the Pharamond?"

"No, no! She has a heart of gold. Ah—but there is her father—the plumber!"

And he sat down on the bed, his head in his hands.

BESS DOES HER BEST - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - By Ruth Pine Furnis

it's very seldom you find things like this. You know——"

"Seldom? It's been every night for the last two weeks."

"Well, I can't help it. Everything's gone wrong for the last two weeks. I can't put up with it indefinitely. I have to take a stand now and then. I tell you I had to spank her. It was the only way. She came in here and brought Buddy with her, while I was practicing——"

"Why shouldn't she come in here at this time of day? It's the children's time. Why can't you get your blessed practicing done earlier, so that——"

"I've been practicing steadily, Tully, all through the day, and every day, for more than two weeks. You know that. But there's one place in the Procession that I simply can't get. And I've got to get it. In fact"—her gentleness was beginning to evaporate—"in fact, if you don't go out of here and leave me alone to get it, I won't answer for the consequences. Please, Tully, please don't let's have an argument now. Do go on out and let me work. We can hash it all over tomorrow if you like, but don't bother me now. I can't stand it, just before my concert."

"You never can 'stand' anything before your concerts. And this——" he motioned toward the articulate nursery—"this is always the result. Nice kind of house to come home to! Pandemonium! You'd have just as good concerts and get just as good criticisms if you behaved yourself before——"

"Behaved yourself! I? When every one in the house—when—O, Tully, do go out!" Determinedly she forced herself to lower her rising voice. "We're both getting more and more tragic every moment! Go on, like a dear. If you don't, I'm sure I don't know what'll happen to me tonight." She looked up at him appealingly, but he did not stir. In the face of his unwillingness to meet her half way, a wave of indignation swept over her.

"Tully!" she cried. "Try to see my side of it, for once. Do you suppose I enjoy practicing here in the midst of everything? Don't you suppose I'd like to have a studio outside somewhere, where I could——"

"There! That's right! Fling it in my face! I'm not making enough to—that's right! Fling it! Your regular comeback. Why don't you use your concert money——"

"You know very well where my concert money goes. Back to Uncle Josef for lessons, nearly every cent of it. And the rest——"

"Goes to pay the servants, eh? My fault, of course. If I were making more. Well, if you were willing to turn a hand yourself now and then, like other women——"

At this she flung aside all pretense at self-control. Springing to her feet she faced him, white with fury. "Be still! Be still, I say! I begged you to go, and you wouldn't. Now you can just stay and listen to me for a while. And you can be fair about the thing—fair and just, or I—I—'Turn a hand!' How can I turn a hand, when my hands must be spared for my work? How can I go dipping them in pots and pans and babies' baths, when they must always be kept in perfect condition? How can I be a servant and a concert player at one and the same time? Do you think I relish my position—a Tomlinson, neither one thing nor the other? Do you think it improves the situation for you to be forever digging, digging at me—just when I need most to be quiet and be helped? Do you think——"

"I think," he interrupted, harshly, "that you're behaving like one of the children." He wheeled, banging the door behind him as he left the room.

She heard him pound on the nursery door with a crash that was not to be denied. For a moment she stood motionless, staring at the spot where he had been. Then she dropped to the bench and buried her head in her arms.

. . . .

THE snowstorm had stopped. Albany had turned out full force to hear Mme. Elizabeth Volnar Bradley. It filled Concert hall with its sleek and fashionable numbers. It whispered respectfully, "A niece of the great Volnar, you know. He taught her . . ." It was inordinately proud of its celebrity.

Bess's inner turmoil had not abated. She and Tully had driven down to the hall in hurt silence, each in a corner of the taxi. She was aware that a word from her would immediately clear the atmosphere, but pride forbade its utterance—even though she was also aware that in withholding it she was paving the way for a period of sullen and aggrieved silence on his part. Tully always acted that way if she didn't make the first advances after a quarrel. Talk about her behaving like one of the children. He was worse than both the children put together. Far worse! Sometimes she wondered why she adored him so. But she did. And she knew she always would.

At the door of her dressing room he left her with a curt nod.

The first part of the program went, she felt, every bit as well as usual. In the concerto she acquitted herself really creditably, and as for the rest . . . well, it was all familiar to her; the very shadings and intershadings of it had come to be a part of her—via Uncle Josef.

The Grieg Procession was the last number. When she reached the end of the Chopin Waltz which preceded it her fingers were stiff and numb with anticipation.

As she rose to acknowledge the applause after the Waltz her attention was suddenly caught by a face in the audience—a boyish face, a stranger's. He was sitting well down toward the front of the hall, and he was watching her—with the oddest look. Usually she saw no individual faces — not even Tully's; the hall was just one vast blur of darkness, picked out with indistinct grayish blobs. But tonight . . . that boy . . . such a queer expression, too . . . For no reason at all, he disturbed her. She could see him distinctly enough—too distinctly, even to a pencil in his hand and a pad of paper on his knee. She tried to reassure herself: "Just another critic. One I've never happened to notice before. Nothing to get upset about. I'm being ridiculous."

She sat down again slowly, arranging the skirt of her rose colored dress with unnecessarily prolonged care. Ridiculous—but hideous—this inward, quaking fright. She felt that she could not, could not, begin. At last the skirt was adjusted, and she was obliged to raise her hands.

The first three pages were accomplished without mishap. And then—the passage—the passage, was upon her.

"Do your best! Do your best!

Don't let anything ever keep you from——"

What were the next words? What could they be, and still not spoil the rhythm? She stumbled; stopped.

There was a deathlike stillness. Then the audience drew in its breath, shifted its position—a gasp and a flutter of surprise.

With a deprecatory, apologetic little smile, Bess shook her head. Her impulse was to run sobbing from the stage. But she set her teeth and took up the music where she had faltered.

This time she got through it, all of it. But when it was over she felt weak and ill. It was an effort even to stand up and bow.

Standing there with one hand on the piano, inclining her head, biting her lips to keep them from trembling, she found herself looking down at the top of the young critic's head. She could no longer see his face. He was bending over his pad, writing. . . .

In the taxi on the way home she said timidly to Tully, "Was it—very dreadful?"

"Dreadful? No. It was the same as always—great." His voice was quite sincere, but still moody.

She saw that she had been right in anticipating a siege with him. Nevertheless, she had to find out. "But—the mistake, Tully. Didn't you hear——?"

"That wasn't anything. You went right on. Don't worry. . . . But don't let's talk. I'm tired."

. . . .

It was her custom, on the mornings after her concerts, to stay in bed for breakfast. Invariably she was too worn out to leave her room until nearly noon.

This morning the entire household awakened, apparently, in the same frame of mind in which it had gone to bed. She could hear the children, across the hall in the nursery, whining and fussing at Ellen, could hear the nurse's querulous retorts. Bridget, down at the end of the hall, was clattering pots and pans. Everybody was as troublesome and as out of sorts as possible—especially Tully.

He dressed in morose silence, while she lay with her eyes closed, thinking with dread of the period of reconstruction which must now be enforced throughout the house—a miserable period which followed every concert. And just as soon as she had got things whipped back into shape again it would be time for her next concert—in Troy, only a few miles away. Then—why then, of course, everything would break loose once more.

When Tully was dressed he went into the outer hall, came back with the morning papers, slammed them down on her bed. "Shall I bring in your tray?"

"No. I'm not hungry."

He pointed at the papers. "There's food for your vanity, at any rate."

Flushing, she murmured, "Tully——"

But he had already disappeared. She heard his chair scrape in the dining room on the other side of the bedroom wall.

Listlessly she opened the top paper and turned to the music notes. There it was—her "food." (How unfair of him. He knew perfectly well that she was the last one in the world to depend upon such nourishment). ". . . Pupil and niece of Josef Volnar. . . . Brilliant performance. . . . Has inherited his genius. . . ." The regular things. The things they always said. She was afraid, suddenly, that she was going to cry. And in the name of heaven, what for? What about? Surely appreciation was nothing to cry over.

She opened another. The same story, somewhat expanded. And another and another. And the Troy papers. All the same—all flattering, enthusiastic, eulogistic. Not one of them mentioned the fiasco of The Procession. It was as if they had combined in a loyal and mutual agreement to disregard it. Well, she ought to be thankful for that, certainly.

At the bottom of the pile was the Albany Eagle. Without interest she flipped over the pages.

"MME. BRADLEY PLAYS AT CONCERT HALL.
A Mediocre Performance."

She winked her eyes rapidly and looked again. Yes, that was what it said. "A Mediocre Performance." Sitting up straight in bed, she held the sheet closer.

"The piano recital at Concert hall given last night by Mme. Elizabeth Volnar Bradley was distinctly and amazingly disappointing—at least to one hearing Mme. Bradley for the first time. It brought up a number of unexpected and not uninteresting questions. For instance: Why have her limitations been so long and so collectively ignored by the critic clan? Why has a trusting public been kept so consistently in the dark? Why all this critical secrecy, this concerted shielding of her—which springs, perhaps, from a sort of local loyalty, but is certainly ill advised?

"There may be one answer that will cover everything—her uncle. Josef Volnar is great; there is no question whatsoever concerning that. Is it possible, then, that the clan en masse has been blinded by love, as it were? And deafened into the bargain? Has it been swayed by this love into a sentimental belief that 'only good can come out of Volnar'? That may very well be the answer. At any rate, it is the kindest one.

"As the matter appears, however, to this particular clansman, Mme. Bradley is not great. She is barely above average. True, she possesses a certain talent of a purely mechanical order, the sort of talent which sometimes dazzles by its rapidity of action and so befogs judgment. With her, technique's the thing. But there it ends. Subtleties of expression, niceties of nuance, even interpretation itself, degenerate—all—into mechanics. One feels as if she were playing from hearsay. Any personal passion for music as such, any individual conception of its underlying meaning, seems to be unbelievably absent in her. Listening, one finds oneself suspecting that her heart is anywhere but in what she is endeavoring to do.

"This suspicion became a conviction during the final number on last night's program—the Grieg Bridal Procession. Here even mechanics failed. She came to a full stop in the middle of the most inspiring passage; she faltered through to the end with obvious uncertainty. Consequently we repeat—she is not great. And once more, inescapably, we speculate upon the motives of the clan. What lies at the bottom of their silence? Love blindness? Or chivalry? Or—what?"

Bess leaned back against the pillows. She was breathing unevenly. Her cheeks were crimson.

When Tully came in after breakfast to hurl his good-by at her she held out the paper. "Read this."

"I'm in a hurry. I'll read it tonight."

"No—now. Please, Tully, read it now."

"I can't, Bess. I'm late. Here, give it to me. I'll read it on the trolley."

After the front door had closed behind him she lay for a long time quiet, staring at the shaded window.

. . . .

Against all precedent, he came home to lunch that day.

Bess was up, moving briskly about the living room, a feather duster in her hand.

Not quite sure of his reception, he halted in the doorway. "Bess, old girl—that damned paper . . . I came home especially to—it's disgusting. It's the limit." His sullenness had completely vanished. Outraged sympathy was in his voice. "I never read—I never saw—my God, the man must have been tight. Such a pack of lies——"

Bess laid the duster on the piano and came close to him, looking into his face with serene eyes. "They're not lies, Tully. They're the truth. Every single blessed word is the truth."

"The truth?" He stared. "I don't know what you're talking about. All that drivel—that rotten, spiteful, drunken drivel——"

THE STORY IN RESUME:

WHEN John Allan Morgan went to war it was with the intention of marrying Mary Deane when he returned. But at her mother's instance—because Forrest was reputed to have more money—Mary accepted Forrest's proposal. Joining an Englishman, engaging in a copper deal in the Congo, Morgan came back to New York seven years after his departure and succeeded in getting a group of financiers, including Henry Greenway, to provide the necessary capital. Then he met Mary again, was introduced to her husband, and found him devoting his attentions to Nora West. Also he learned that Forrest was a partner of Greenway. Realizing that Mary was unhappy, Morgan nevertheless knew his love for her was dead. At a Christmas house party at the Forrest home Morgan comes across Forrest in the library, trying to force his love upon Nora West and threatening to expose her letters to him if she refuses. When she leaves, Morgan enters, demands the letters, and in the scuffle that ensues Forrest is killed by his own pistol. The report does not reach the ears of the other guests. Knowing that Greenway is out to "get" him and that if he tells the truth about the accidental shot it will involve Miss West, Morgan decides to play a game. He fires a second shot and then runs around to the front door. His ruse succeeds; no one sees him enter the hall. He joins the others in the rush to the library to investigate the shooting. Braden, the county detective, and his men are unable to clear up the mystery. In desperation, Braden calls Mary Forrest, Greenway, Morgan, and Miss West into the library.

INSTALLMENT IV.

The Telltale Letters.

THE library already had undergone marked changes in appearance since Morgan had seen it last. Forrest was gone; he lay on his own bed now upstairs, and only chalk marks in the floor showed where his body had been found. The telephone had been restored to its place on the desk; the overturned chair and inkwell had been picked up. "Will you tell me, Miss West, where you and Mr. Forrest were in this room?" Braden asked.

She went over toward the desk and pointed to Forrest's chair.

"Mr. Forrest was standing by that chair when I saw him," she said. "He sat down in it when I first came in—later he stood up beside it."

"And you?"

"I was here," she said, and took up the position which Morgan, looking through the window, had seen her.

"Miss West, will you tell me what were your relations with Mr. Forrest?"

She stared at the detective; Morgan saw the color rise slowly in her cheeks.

"My relations——?" She met his eyes freely, frankly. "I—I think I don't understand."

"I used a common word. Were you and Mr. Forrest friends—or more—or less?"

There was no mistake about the color now. Her head was high.

"I thought we were friends," she said.

The stressing of a single word did not escape Braden.

"You thought so. Does that mean you do not think so now?"

"I—yes—it does. That is what I mean. I know now he was not my friend."

"You discovered this—you changed your mind—this evening, while you were here with Mr. Forrest?"

"Yes!"

"A few minutes before he was killed? You quarreled with him, Miss West?"

"O, come!" Morgan sprang up. "Look here, Miss West, he's no earthly right to cross-examine you this way! You don't have to answer these questions unless you choose!"

She looked at him. Braden, too, turned to stare at Morgan, but said nothing.

"I don't mind answering," she said. "Only—it's a little difficult. When you ask me if we quarreled—"

"Suppose I ask you if you had a disagreement?"

"Yes——" She still hesitated. "Yes, I think that—I think it might be put so. I—things Mr. Forrest said showed me how wrong I had been about—about many things——"

Again for a moment she looked at Morgan. He smiled at her. All the resentment he had, briefly, earlier that night, harbored against her was gone—had been gone long ago; had vanished definitely when, by sheer chance, he had been an unmeaning witness to her humiliation, her suffering at Forrest's hands. And now—now! She was such a gallant figure as she faced Braden and met his insinuations—insinuations made uglier, more sinister and evil, by his tone than any setting down of mere words could convey. There was sheer, lovely courage in the whole poise of her slim body, in the high carriage of her head, in the plucky tilt of her chin.

"Thank you," said Braden at last. "We're getting on. Capt. Morgan, can you tell me, a little more in detail, what your movements were after you came back from your walk?"

"I can try," said Morgan, cheerfully. "I found myself pretty much left out in the cold. There was a bridge game going on—there were two or three [illegible]. I didn't like to break in, you see. I looked at a couple of magazines—I wandered about the lower floor of the house a bit."

"Did you happen to pass the library door—this [illegible]?"

"Yes, as a matter of fact, I did. It was open—I imagine that that was when Miss West and Mr. Forrest were outside. The room was empty, anyway."

"I see. You went back to the hall, though?"

"Yes. I was a little restless—but I went back."

"You didn't see Miss West?"

"I don't remember that I did."

"Your recollection is perfectly clear as to your own movements, though?"

"Of course it is!"

"You weren't upset—your mind wasn't disturbed?"

"What do you mean?"

"What I say. Had anything occurred to upset you?"

"This evening? O—I see!" He turned to look at Greenway. "Been talking about me, Mr. Greenway? Why, in a way—yes. I'd been involved in an unpleasant row."

"With Mr. Forrest?"

"Yes."

"Why?"

"That," said Morgan, "is my business."

"As you please."

"There's no sense in taking that attitude, Morgan," said Greenway. "I've told him all about it. I regarded it as my duty."

"I see. But if he knows all about it, why ask me?"

Braden smiled.

"And that," he said, "is my business, Capt. Morgan!"

"Right!" said Morgan. "Ask and be damned to you, then—but I prefer not to answer."

"Come—come!" said Greenway. Morgan wheeled upon him.

"It's not your business, at any rate!" he said.

"If you please," said Braden. "Mrs. Forrest, do you know anything about this box?"

Morgan's nerves jumped as Braden turned and pointed to the steel box beside Forrest's desk. Fool! He—he'd forgotten it! The box—and the key that opened it, the key that had fallen from Forrest's hand as they struggled for the pistol! He scarcely dared to look at Nora West. When he did he saw how all her mask of bravery had been stripped from her; the way her lips trembled, the sudden panic in her eyes. Here was a secret that, as yet at least, they shared between them—the secret of the letters that box held, the letters Forrest had locked into it. It was a lucky thing, Morgan thought, that Braden in that moment was looking at Mary Forrest.

"That—that box?" she said. Her voice faltered. Greenway turned to look at her curiously. And Morgan, too, was surprised. She was as shaken as Nora West—and why? What did she know about that box to make Braden's question affect her so?

"That box——?" Mary said again. "Why, it was my husband's—he used it for private papers. It was very strong—and fireproof, I think—so that if anything happened——"

"Have you a key to it, Mrs. Forrest?" said Braden.

Morgan's heart leaped. That meant—if it meant anything it must mean that the key had not been found. That, for all the combing of this room there must have been, it had not been turned up!

"No," said Mary. "No one had a key except my husband. There was only one, and he always carried it."

"Would you know it if you saw it?"

"No. I never saw it to my knowledge.

"I see." Braden frowned.

"I'd know the key," said Greenway. "I saw it many times. A small, flat key, rather thick. It's a cylinder lock, of course."

"Yes," said Braden, thoughtfully.

"Wasn't it—didn't Forrest have it?" said Greenway. "You—he was searched, wasn't he?"

"Yes. No such key was found. Possibly it is in his room—in some pocket of another suit."

"You mean—you want to open that box?" said Mary Forrest. "But—the papers in it were personal—private—things he never let any one see——"

"The box will have to be opened, of course," said Greenway, almost impatiently. "The executors of Lee's will—I'm one, by the way, I happen to know—would do it, even if the authorities didn't."

"I shall have to be present—even if I have to get a court order," said Braden, quietly.

"Nonsense! No need of anything of the sort. Mrs. Forrest will understand," said Greenway. "And nothing will be given out, of course—nothing private or personal will be revealed."

"We make every effort to respect privacy," said Braden. "But if anything should be found in that box to throw any light on the crime——"

"O!" Mary almost screamed. "How could it? How fantastic! I don't know where the key is, at any rate!"

"It's all right," said Greenway, soothingly. "I think——" He turned to Braden. "Mrs. Forrest is overwrought—will it not be possible for her to retire now?"

"Surely," said Braden. "I am through—for tonight."

"You'll be staying here?"

Braden shook his head.

"No need of that. The house has been upset enough. There will be troopers on duty in the grounds—I don't want any newspaper men getting in. But that is all. I shall have to ask that none of the guests leave tomorrow until after the inquest."

"I'll see to that," said Greenway.

Morgan listened without really hearing. He was looking at Nora West. Her tragic, terrified eyes had met his at last. They clung to his. They seemed to be appealing to him. Then, abruptly, as she turned and looked at Mary she roused herself. Mary had risen; she stood uncertainly, swaying a little. Nora went to her quickly.

"Mary," she said, "let me help you——"

The two women went out. And Morgan followed Braden and Greenway from the room.

MORGAN sat in his room, smoking a pipe by the window. A pipe, though he usually smoked one in the open, but a pipe now because, for one thing, the glowing end of a cigaret, smoked in a dark room, might well be seen from outside; and, for another, because he had some need to think, and a pipe is a great stimulant of thought.

The house was still, hushed. It was a little after two; so far as any sound gave him any news to the contrary, Morgan was entitled to believe himself the only one in it who hadn't gone to bed. He was fully dressed; sleep was, just then, the last thing he needed or thought about. He had been amazed, when he glanced at his watch on his way upstairs, to see how early it was; it wouldn't have surprised him at all to look out and see day breaking far across the sound. It seemed incredible that so much could have happened in so short a time.

It was a time, Morgan felt—knew, indeed—for taking stock. He would have little time for thought in the morning; events, it seemed to him, were likely, then, to move swiftly. Braden would waste no time; Greenway would be behind him, pushing him on. Greenway, indeed, had been at work already; it was he who had turned Braden's activities into the channel they already had taken. And Morgan knew, as well as if he had followed him, what it was that Greenway had done while he had, for a few minutes, been absent, soon after Braden came.

Down in the drive, as he looked out, Morgan could see a car standing, lights out, a blanket thrown over its radiator. It belonged to the state police; so did a motorcycle that stood nearby. Occasionally, down the sloping ground that led to the public road, a flashlight gleamed; the state troopers were patrolling the grounds. Oak Hill was, in effect, in a state of siege; the camp of the besiegers was marked by a cluster of dimmed automobile lights down in the road. There were the reporters, and Morgan could guess the state of mind they were in. They were barred from all direct contact with a story that must, he knew, be keeping the presses busy even now.

Morgan was wondering about these reporters, among other things. Times had changed while he was away, and the newspapers had changed with them. There was something new in journalism; something to cause anxiety to a man placed as he was. He had been home long enough to perceive this new note—a note of a deeper, madder yellow than any he remembered. These new, small papers, full of pictures and screaming headlines. They'd make hay, sure enough, while the sun of this new murder shone.

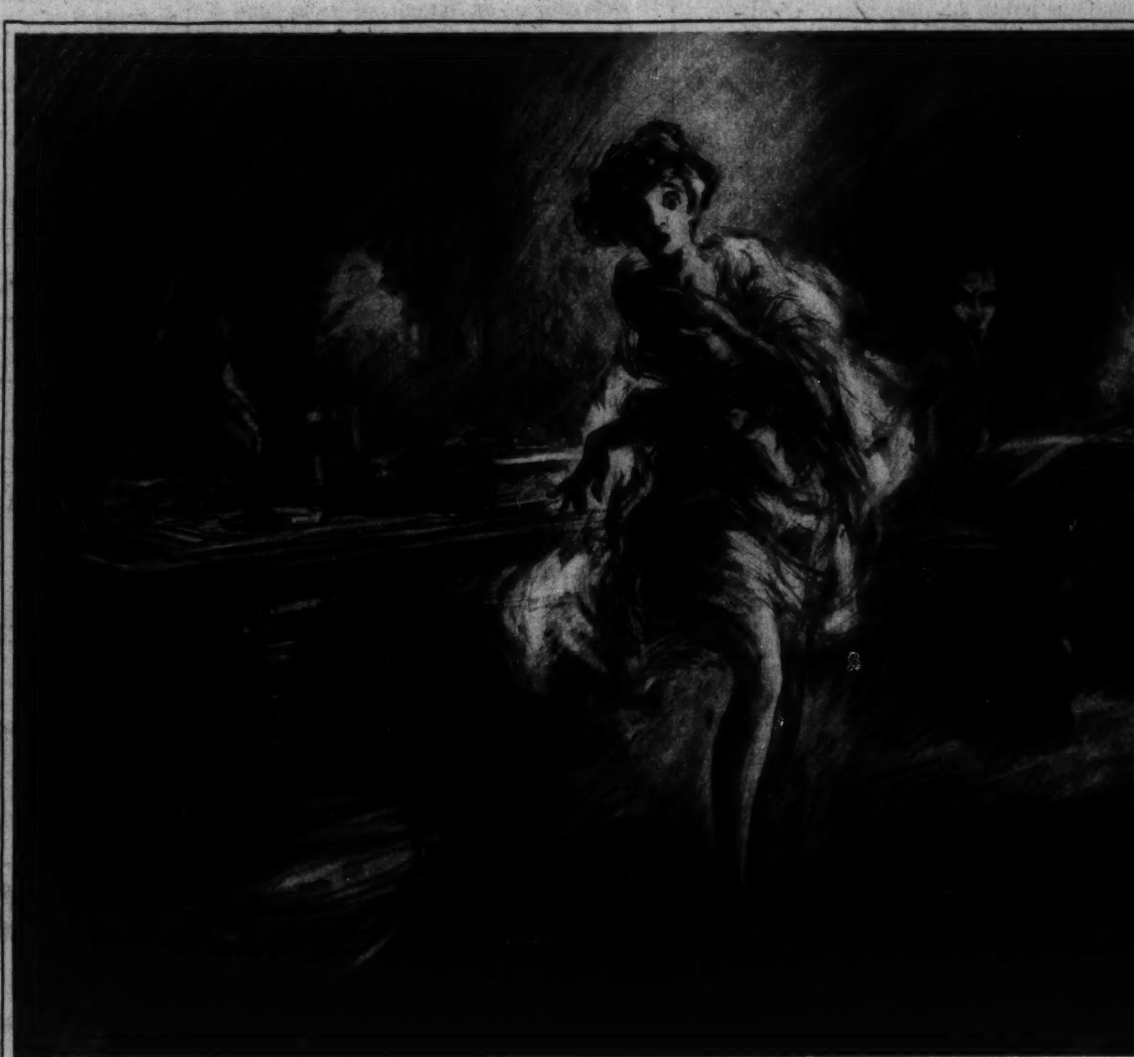
Here, it seemed to him, was another weapon ready to Greenway's hand. He could guess at Greenway's connections; guess, too, that it was more than likely that some lines ran straight from his desk to the office of one or more of these new papers.

And he had gained some knowledge, even in his short time at home, of how these papers worked. There was the famous murder in New Jersey, forgotten for four years, that one of them, single handed, had reopened; the machinery of a whole sovereign state had been set into motion at the screaming behest of a single newspaper. They seemed to care nothing for what they said; they blithely ran the risk of libel actions; they sought only to spread sensationalism and so increase their circulations.

How did he stand?

On his side there stood the fact, such as it was, of his alibi. He had been one of those who found Forrest's body, within a minute or less of the moment when a shot had startled those in the great hall of Oak Hill. He had—and demonstrably—been in the hall at a time that forbade, or seemed to forbid, the assumption that he could have been struggling with Forrest when that shot was fired.

Against him was the fact that it might well be held that he was the only member of the house party who conceivably might have had a motive for killing Forrest. Forrest had married the woman he loved; she had jilted him to marry Forrest. It might turn out that there would be those who would swear that he and Forrest's wife had been friendly during his stay at Oak Hill, almost to the point of indiscretion. And he had quarreled violently with Forrest not much more than an hour before the man's dead body was found. Yes, less evidence than that had served, more than once, to satisfy a jury's demand for a motive in a case of murder.



He could hear her breathing; he could hear the frantic beating of his own heart.

And, too, there was the fact that Greenway and Braden already had set foot upon the path that, followed truly to its end, must lead them to the truth. It wasn't going to be an easy path to follow; that counted for him. But it was there, and they had set out upon it.

They knew, thanks to the testimony of Parker, the chauffeur, that there had been not one shot but two. That, to be sure, they would have learned in any case, sooner or later. But Parker had told them what was, concerning the second shot, of vital significance—that it had been fired some minutes, three or four at least, after the first. They knew, too—and had admittedly found it full of meaning—that no one had actually seen Morgan in the great hall at the moment the shot was heard. Just afterward—yes. But at the precise moment, no. They knew that he could, at that moment, have been on the terrace; they were bound to discover, if they did not already know, how easily he might have reached the hall when he was first actually seen and still, when the shot was fired, have been at the window of the library.

AND yet, if they had enough facts to make them suspect him, if they had, indeed, enough information to point the way to the truth, they were still a long way from being able to prove it. And the burden of proof was on them, not on him. He had said, and he would continue to say, since he had had and could have no choice in the matter, that he was in the hall when the shot was fired. Both Steve Marshall and Jim Worrall had backed him in that. And certainly no one had actually seen him enter the hall. And even Greenway, he thought, couldn't command or buy influence enough to have a man indicted for murder because he might not have been where he said he had been.

What was bad, though, what was dangerous, was that both Braden and Greenway suspected the truth, or something like it. That counted heavily against him. For he couldn't know what proof might be there for them to find—what simple, obvious blunder of oversight he might have committed. Nearly always there was something the criminal overlooked, didn't all authorities agree?

And, indeed, there was one such oversight of his of which he knew already. He should never have left that room without the key to Forrest's strong box—better still, he should have found the key, opened the box, and taken from it those letters of Nora West's.

True, those letters didn't threaten him. Their discovery by Braden and Greenway wouldn't add a single link to the chain of evidence against him. Yet none the less they represented the greatest menace there was to his escape. Because—he had to get them. Not for one instant had he even contemplated the possibility of leaving them to be found by any one else.

He couldn't. Not after what he had seen and heard that night, when Nora West faced Forrest, begging him to give those letters back to her. Not after the look he had seen in her eyes when she remembered them as Braden casually, almost indifferently, talked of the necessity of opening that box and examining its contents.

He might, and he knew it, be walking straight into a trap. He couldn't let that knowledge stop him. He might, by going down to seek that key, be playing straight into Braden's hand. He had only to stay where he was, sit tight, stand pat, rest upon his alibi, such as it was. If he did that there was more than an even chance, he was persuaded, that all Greenway's influence, all his money, all his ill will, coupled with Braden's skill and his fanatical need of finding a victim, would not be enough to lay him by the heels.

He got up, laid down his pipe, examined a small pocket flashlight, shielding it so that its beam didn't reach the window. Very slowly, very quietly he opened his door and slipped out into the corridor. Noiselessly, slowly he moved toward the stairs. He looked down into a well of darkness, broken only by a faint glow from the direction of the corridor downstairs that led to the library.

Then, cautiously, his hand resting on the rail, so that his weight was thrown upon it, alert for the first warning of a creaking step, he started down.

. . . .

John Allan Morgan crept down the great staircase of Oak Hill upon the very heels of folly. He knew that; the knowledge only chilled the steel of his determination. It was touch and go

ESS DOES HER BEST

By Ruth Pine Furniss

"It isn't drivel, darling, and it isn't the least bit [illegible]. It's inspired. Whoever he is, he's seen through me, and Uncle Josef, and everybody. He's shown things up as they are—shown me up. I am mediocre. And I'm glad to know it."

"Bess! You——"

"No—wait! I am. For the first time since Uncle Josef came to America I'm seeing this thing straight. I never understood before what the matter was. I only knew I was miserable, and all of us were miserable. I used to wonder why I couldn't seem to get any satisfaction or thrill out of my work, the way other people do. He's told me why. I'm mediocre. I haven't got the real stuff. Well, glad I haven't!"

Bewildered, stupefied, Tully dropped down on the arm of a chair. "But—Bess—I swear I don't know what you're driving at. Your work—I thought it was all-in-all to you."

"So did I, in a way. But at the same time, I knew something must be wrong somewhere. He's discovered it, that's all. And he's dead right. He's right about another thing, too—about people thinking I must be wonderful, because of Uncle Josef. I—" her tone grew speculative—"I wonder what Uncle Josef thought. He must have known, all along. He couldn't help but know. And yet he's gone on—pushing me, and shoving me, and—and taking my money. Well, it doesn't really make much difference, now. For he isn't going to push me any farther. Not one-half an inch."

"But—but—Bess——"

She laughed at the expression on his face. "No, nor one-quarter of an inch, either. Tully—I'm through. And I can't tell you what a relief it is. Why in the world should I go on? The concert field is simply all cluttered up with half-way performers. I don't want to be one of them. And yet, if I should go on for years and years, I'd never be anything else. Therefore—I stop. Right where I am. O, it's like a blinding light!—No, wait. I'm not through yet. I can see now that I was driven into it. I was made to believe it was my duty to follow in his footsteps, 'develop my talent,' and all that sort of thing. It frightened me. But you can't develop what you haven't got, can you? God can't blame me for not doubling a zero."

"God?" echoed Tully, blankly.

"Yes. That parable, you know. But he can blame me for not doubling what I have got. Don't look so—so distracted, darling. I'm perfectly sane! I've worked it all out this morning. Listen, Tully, other winters, before I became an 'artist' (save the mark!) didn't everything go better around the house? Weren't the children pleasanter? And weren't the bills lower? And weren't we happier? All of us; much happier?"

"We certainly were. Everything was slick. But——"

"But that's my talent, Tully. Don't you see? Inside, I'm a Martha. All the rest—all the artist business, niece of the great Volnar, inherited genius—all that line, was simply wished on me from the outside. And wished so hard that it even fooled me. Well, it doesn't fool me any longer—thanks to one enlightened soul with an honest pen! I'm through."

"Lord, Bess, I'm in a whirl! Don't know whether I'm afoot or ahorseback! But if you really mean it—I believe you do, too, and I'm damned glad of it—what about your contracts, then?"

"I've thought of that. Of course, I suppose I'll have to finish out this spring. And then I'll simply tell Uncle Josef and my manager that 'genius' has burnt out. If that doesn't do the trick, there's another solution. It's a little drastic, perhaps, but you and I've always agreed about big families. For goodness sake, what time is it, anyway? Lunch must have been ready for ages. Bridget'll be—O, there's just one thing more—do you remember my telling you about a silly rhyme I used to keep saying in that place in the Procession? A rhyme I couldn't finish? Well, I've thought of an end for it—just thought of it, before you came back. Listen——

"Do your best! Do your best!
Don't let an-y-thing ever keep you from do-ing
What you your-self know is your best . . . ."

. . . .

The boss of the Albany Eagle had just reached the editorial offices. The knowledge that he was disgracefully late had not cooled his already bubbling temper.

Meeting young Marvin in the hall, he ordered him to forget lunch and proceed to the inner office.

There, in no uncertain terms, he gave voice to his own personal reaction to his new critic's comment upon Mme. Bradley.

"Good God!" he thundered. "What did you mean by turning in a thing like that? What did you mean by it, eh? What do you think this paper is, anyway—the Pagan Review? What do you think this job is—a chance to be funny and smart-alec?"

"No," returned Wallace, with spirit. "I thought it was a chance to be honest and use my critical judgment. I know something about music. I——"

"You're 'critical judgment!' Yours! So you think your judgment's better, do you, than the judgment of all the men who've been hearing Mme. Bradley all winter? You think a young whipper-snapper like you can step up and tell the others where to get off? You think you can model your stuff after the Pagan—destructive stuff, better-than-thou, all that sort of rot—and get away with it? Well, let me tell you right now, Marvin, you can't. It won't go. But you will. You'll go today. I thought I could trust you—your cub work wasn't bad; but I see I was mistaken. We can't be bothered with any man who's got to be watched. The honor of the paper comes first. We're a conservative sheet, and our readers expect us to maintain our standard. Your place, young man, is in Greenwich Village where you can be just as smart as you please—where you can rant and rave, unread. You've cooked your own goose here. Burned it to a crisp."

Eye for eye, Wallace met his choleric gaze. "I like 'em crisp," he said.

ALIBI - By William Almon Wolff

whether twelve hours wouldn't see him in jail, with murder charged against him. Had he stayed in his room upstairs, like a sane man, the odds against that would have been shorter; he could hardly, though, things being as they were, have brought them down to even money. Yet here he was, creeping down the stairs, into a pool of darkness filled with lurking perils, because he remembered the stricken look in Nora West's eyes as he had seen them last. Nora West, who, the last time he had come down these stairs, had turned toward him cool eyes filled with a contemptuous dislike!

ON the hearth the last embers of the log fire still glowed faintly. Even as Morgan came to the last step a fragment of charred wood blazed up and set great shadows leaping on the wall. He caught his breath at that, then grinned. Lucky he'd be if nothing worse than that came to scare away what wits he still possessed.

The brief flame died down; the big room was dark again. He had no need of a light here; he knew his way about. He wouldn't, he thought, forget the contours of this house to his last day.

He wondered about many things as he made his slow way toward the room in which Lee Forrest had come to his death. Just how far away was Braden? Suppose he could take him at his word, suppose Braden really were well away by now, what sort of watch had he set about the house before he went? Outside, Morgan knew, the grounds were full of state police. Braden had said he was leaving them chiefly to keep the reporters out. But wasn't it a fair guess that their orders covered the house and its occupants, too? He thought so.

Not that he could let that thought rule his movements. He had to get into the library. And he hated the notion just a little more, he was prepared to admit to himself, than he had ever hated anything in his life. There was no use in blinking the facts; for him to be caught now in that room, opening or trying to open Forrest's strong box, was to make the enemy a present of his neck. Given that, with what there was against him already, and even a rural constable would have case enough to hang him.

The fear he felt was, in his experience, a wholly new thing. He had been afraid often enough. He had been afraid the first time he had been under fire in France; in a way, he supposed, he had been afraid every time. Every man who wasn't a fool he had known there had been. And he had taken plenty of desperate chances since, with his eyes open; he and Mainwaring, in Africa, had come through some ticklish times.

But this was different. He was risking more than his life now. A clean death is one thing; death at the end of a hangman's noose is quite another.

He was well down the corridor, though, even as he thought it all out. And suddenly he stopped short.

"Damn!" he said, under his breath.

He saw now the source of the faint light he had perceived even from upstairs. It came from the room he had to enter.

Here was a stroke of evil fortune calculated to wreck his whole plan. It hadn't been much of a plan at best, and this business of the light in the room left precious little of it intact. In that lighted room any one outside, watching the house, was bound to see him. He had meant to get in quietly; draw the curtains, with the room still dark; find the key if he could, with the aid of his shielded flashlight, get the letters, and be off.

He waited now, considering his course. He had reason enough, surely, for turning back. He had done all that could be asked of him and more. He could go back now to a relative safety, to something like an even chance at least against Braden and Greenway and the whole pack. He could go back, knowing that he had done all he could for Nora West. He could do that--but instead he grinned, a little ruefully, and dropped to hands and knees and crawled along so to the open door.

His heart leaped as he looked in. For he saw at once that the curtains were drawn across the windows; the great curtains that, when he had last seen the room, had been looped back. So, far from being a menace, the one light in the room was an aid. It came from a floor lamp placed beside a deep chair. Forrest, he guessed, had been in the habit of reading in that chair, for the light was so placed, so shaded, that it fell upon the spot where a man would have held his book. Now, even if some one outside were watching these windows, no chance gleam from his flashlight would betray him.

He waited a moment, to see if there were any movement of the heavy curtains to betray a window open behind them, a hiding place for some watcher. There was none; they hung still in their folds. He dared not go right up to them and look out; he had to take the chance of a peephole, of some one on the terrace itself looking in.

Now he went to work, systematically, quickly, to find the key. He looked for it precisely as a good caddy searches for a lost golf ball, dividing the room into sections and searching each in turn. Two minutes served to prove what he already had surmised; the key was not, so to speak, in the open. Had it been it would surely have been found before now.

Down he went again on hands and knees, sending a tiny beam of light under every piece of furniture. And at last, as the pencil of light stabbed the gloom beneath a long, deep couch, a gleam came back; his hand, going in, came back with the key. What luck—what shining, incredible luck!

He was up in a moment and busy at the safe, his right hand gloved; he wanted no fingerprints of his about that strong box! The lock was stiff and tricky; there was a knack about getting the key in, engaging it, that it took him half a minute to discern. But then the box was open and his light was playing upon a whole mass of papers, neatly ordered. On top was the bundle of Nora West's letters; her name, scrawled out carelessly at the bottom of a page, assured him he was making no mistake.

He thrust the letters into his pocket, locked the box, started for the door. And then he stopped as if he were rooted to the floor. Outside, in the corridor, he heard a light, a stealthy sound; the sound of some one coming. He looked about; saw the one possible hiding place and sought it. In an instant he was crouching down behind the great chair by which the lamp stood. Its back made a dark pool of shadow in the dimly lighted room. He was there when Nora West came in.

He caught his breath in sheer pity at the sight of her. She was so young, so pale with terror. Her bare feet were thrust into tiny slippers; a negligee was caught about her, over her nightgown. He almost rose; stopped again. How was he to tell her that he had her letters, that she need have no fear? For a moment, as she moved across the room, she was out of his sight; he saw her again, standing by the strong box, looking down at it, desperately. Then he heard her moving; guessed that she was looking for the key, as he had done. She must find him in another moment.

And then, in that room, all at once, all movement ceased. He could hear her breathing; he could hear the frantic beating of his own heart. And something else; another sound, not in the room. In the corridor. A creak; another. Some one was coming; a man, from the weight of those stealthy, creeping steps. He heard the quick, frightened catch of the girl's breath. And in that moment he was inspired to do the one thing that offered them both a chance. He rose; he heard her startled cry as, for a moment, she saw him; then his hand went out and the room was plunged into blackness as he switched out the light.

"Quick!" he whispered. "Get out—slip out and past whomever it is."

She gasped again; he heard her going. The newcomer was moving fast now and muttering; no need for silence any longer on his part. He must be in the door; would he come in or have sense enough to stay and block the door?

Morgan heard a sudden, muffled cry from the girl; the sound of ripping silk; then swift feet running along the corridor. He was out in a moment; he caromed against a heavy body, sent it down with the weight of his impact; ran down the corridor then and up the stairs, three steps at a time, behind the girl's dimly seen figure. She, at any rate, was safe now; he saw her vanish behind her door. And as yet there was no sound of pursuit from below; he must have knocked the wind out of Greenway when he bowled him over.

He grinned at that thought in his own room as he undressed. It was Greenway who had stalked Nora West; he had recognized his voice. That didn't surprise him much; he had expected direct action from Greenway. But he would have given a good deal to know what Greenway had been after. Had he come, moved simply by some general suspicion? Had he heard something and gone to look into it? Above all, had he recognized Nora? Time would have to answer those questions—and wouldn't, he thought, be long about it. He got into bed; the letters he had retrieved were under his pillow. His door was locked, but locks couldn't always be trusted. And his window was open. He didn't think he would sleep through an intrusion. But he was taking no more chances than he must. Those were plenty.

NEXT SUNDAY:

"Bricks Without Straw"

by Dornford Yates

He asked for more of her time. She replied by flinging his ring at him. And so the engagement was broken, and Nadege and Dominick drifted along widely diverging paths. . . . A quaint tale of England, with all the charm of hawthorn trees and flowery meadows and buxom hedgerows.

He lay still in bed, listening. Outside the silence was unbroken; it was sinister, ominous. A board creaked, and another; he heard the shuffling movement of a heavy body that paused just outside his door. He grinned again; Greenway, listening. Well, it wasn't strange that Greenway should connect him with what had happened downstairs.

OAK HILL was up and about early in the morning. Morgan woke at seven, after a custom of long standing; chose not to sleep again. He wandered about after his bath, dressing slowly. It was snowing; the ground was white. He saw that the blanketed police car was gone. Down on the drive a group of young men had gathered; they looked cold and uncomfortable and anything but happy, with their coat collars turned up against the snow. Evidently the embargo had, to some extent, been raised; these must be reporters, advance guard of the host that might be expected later.

Morgan went down soon after eight. Greenway was standing with his back to the fire; Braden was sitting, feet stretched out, his face adorned by a dark scowl. He nodded to Morgan; had nothing to say. Greenway returned his cheerful greeting curtly. In the dining room he found Steve Marshall, busy among the hot dishes on the sideboard.

"Hello!" Marshall said. "Nice, cheerful morning—what? But I'm hungry, damn it, and I'm going to have my breakfast. Don't see why I should starve because somebody did Lee Forrest in!"

"Right!" said Morgan. "I'm hungry myself. What looks good?"

"Bacon and eggs," said Marshall at once. "Never make experiments at breakfast. Too damn irrevocable, breakfast is! All right to take a chance at dinner. Get something you don't like and you can change off. But bite into the wrong apple at breakfast and the day's gone blah!"

"Don't know but what you're right," said Morgan. "All right—bacon and eggs it is. Let's see, toast, coffee—right. Hello, papers come? Have they got it?"

"It's what they've got nothing else but!" said Marshall. "They all work columns out of two simple facts—(a) that Forrest's dead, and (b) that some one seems to have shot him. What they'll do when they really get going ought to be a caution!"

He tossed over two or three papers; Morgan sat down to eat with one of the tabloids beside him, because it was easier to read.

"Hope we can get away today after the inquest," said Marshall. "This place gives me the creeps, and if I don't get Kitty away today I'll have to hunt up a good, cheap sanitarium for her."

"How is she?"

"O, well—you know! No—you don't. You're not married. She's got the horrors. Tried to make her come down—nothing doing."

"I wonder how Mary is?"

"Kit went in to see her. Bearing up well, Kit says. Pretty well shot—naturally. Going to stay in bed and see Doc Whitman before she comes down. Kit's idea, that was—she telephoned the doc."

"Good hunch," said Morgan absently. "Good Lord—they certainly get a lot of mileage out of a few facts on this sheet! And pictures—hello! O, my God——"

He sprang up angrily, staring at the paper in his hand.

"What goes on?" said Marshall. "What's eating you?"

He came around and looked over Morgan's shoulder. As he read he whistled.

"—interrupted romance—the engagement was broken, it was rumored, at the instance of the young woman's mother. Capt. Morgan returned to this country only a few weeks ago, after a long absence. His presence as a guest at the fatal house party indicates that time had healed his wounds——"

"I'll be damned!" said Marshall. "Lord—I'd forgotten! You were pretty far gone, though, weren't you? But how'd these people get hold of it? There never was any engagement, was there—any announcement, anyway?"

"There wasn't any announcement—no," said Morgan.

"Rough on Mary," said Marshall. "Wonder if they've all got it?"

He read through the other papers.

"No, by Jove, they haven't," said he, when he had done. "That's queer."

"This is the one to read," said Morgan. "It's got a lot of stuff the others don't print. Here's the dope about the two shots that we got from Parker. And this chap points out that I'm the only one of the house party who can't absolutely prove where he was when the shot was heard!"

"Great Scott! No!" said Marshall, aghast. "Do you mean they single you out——?"

Morgan tossed the sheet over and picked up one of the other papers.

"That's queer!" said Marshall. "I don't get that. How did they get their dope? D'you suppose Braden stands in with them?"

"I doubt it," said Morgan. "Can't afford to favor any one of them, I imagine. He'd have the rest after his scalp in no time."

"But—damn it, some one must have seen you before we all heard that shot!" said Marshall. "I must have myself—the devil of it is I wasn't paying any attention until afterward—I saw you then, right enough. But just before that I was talking to Nora. I wouldn't want to swear there was any one else in the blasted room at all!"

Not for a moment did Morgan think Braden had given that paper that information. That was Greenway's work; he would have staked all he had on that. Greenway had wasted no time; he had struck a shrewdly placed blow, too. In theory newspaper talk, public opinion, concerning this figure or that in a criminal case should have no influence; recent history had shown precisely how much that theory was worth. He had expected Greenway to use this weapon; he hadn't, somehow, supposed he would use it quite so soon. The man, though, had ability of a high order, perverted though the uses were to which he chose to put it.

A CURRENT of cold air blew through the hall as Morgan and Marshall went out; Braden, stop watch in hand, was just coming in from the terrace. He looked well pleased.

"Coaching the police track team?" said Marshall, grinning.

Braden shook his head with a reluctant grin that was a tribute to Marshall's spirits.

"Conducting a few experiments," he said. "Seeing how long it would take to come here from the library. Hear anything in there?"

"No," said Marshall.

"Nothing like a shot?"

"No."

"Good! Been having target practice in the library. Seems to be no doubt that a shot in there wouldn't be heard out here with the door closed."

"We could have told you that—we did, last night," said Marshall. "None of us heard the shot Parker told us about. And it was fired, all right—you saw where the other bullet had gone, didn't you?"

"Quite so," said Braden. "But I like to confirm what people tell me—when it's practicable. I like to form my own judgments on facts I have learned for myself."

"Interesting to see how a modern detective really works, isn't it?" said Greenway, his small eyes fixed balefully upon Morgan. "Here's Braden, now. He doesn't go around on his hands and knees with a microscope, looking for cigar ashes and then telling you they're from a special kind of ten center that's sold only at the corner of Broadway and Fifty-first street. He's after good, solid facts."

"Useful things, facts—if you know what they mean," said Morgan.

Braden looked at him.

"Precisely," he said. His eyes turned toward Greenway. "And I like to weigh my facts myself, after I get them. I have a way of forming my own judgments."

He paused.

"And of acting on them," he added.

Marshall shivered as the detective walked away. "That's a coldblooded bird!" he said. "I'd hate to have him camping on my trail!"

"So would I," said Greenway with a horrid significance. His stare at Morgan was almost a leer. Greenway was finding less and less use for the mask of friendliness he had at first worn in his dealings with Morgan.

MY LADY FAR AWAY by Beatrice Grimshaw

INSTALLMENT XII.

The Battle of the Snakes.

IT WAS hard to realise that these uncertain, inefficient, caper cutting merry andrews in the canoe were potentially as dangerous as so many wild beasts. But Hugh did realise it. With rifle held ready, he watched, high on the bridge, the ring of canoes draw near.

"Call to them, Jacky," he ordered, in a temporary lull of the yelping and dog-howling that accompanied the advance. "Tell them that we'll blow the insides out of them if they come within bowshot. They've seen us shoot pig; they know."

It seemed that they did know, for a yell accompanied Jacky's remark. A tall man in the foremost canoe stood up, balancing himself precariously with constant movements of his long black legs, and shouted something in reply.

"Him talk," said Jacky, "him no want to make beasly row, sir, him want to come along side, you givem altogether man flenty knife, flenty calico. Behind (afterwards) him go away."

"Tell him," said Hugh, who believed nothing of this, "that three canoes can come up alongside and take goods for the rest. We'll try and fob them off for a few minutes," he explained, "just till we get the boat well under way. They'll attack when they see her start, but I reckon we'll beat."

Welch nodded, which might have meant anything or nothing.

It was near to noon now, shadeless, and blindingly hot. On the men's bare sweating bodies, as they advanced, the high lights showed like patches of white skin. They had painted their faces, making their fierce eyes look fiercer by surrounding circles of black, and lining cheeks and nose with ugly red. Some held in their mouths a hideous sort of half-mask, which deformed altogether the features of the wearer. Crowns of white cockatoo feathers and halos of glorious paradise plumes streamed on the air above the savage faces. Otherwise the men were all but naked, and no words could tell the wildness, the inhumanity and utter stone-age savagery of all the eyes, faces, forms surrounding the tiny yacht. It was as if past centuries, far back in the world's history, had suddenly arisen, and spewed forth the slime and scum of their darkest eras—creatures who lived in caves, saw the great mastodon, and fought with saber tooth tigers, hardly more fierce than they.

Wilsdon surveyed them coolly and made his plan.

The yacht could beat the canoes in anything like an extended trial, but in a short burst they might get ahead of her. There was at least a mile to go before reaching the open current of the Pelican river—luckily it was a clear mile, free from shoals and sandbanks. He would get the Lahara going, and hold the advance canoes in parley as long as he could; then, when the main attack came, he would at least have the advantage of a ship under way.

He posted his men and let the three canoes come up. The paddlers might or might not have been nervous; no one could tell, for nothing could have been wilder, more jerky and uncertain than their ordinary behavior in presence of the whites. They kept their bundles of arrows ready in the canoes, and held their bows in one hand while they paddled with the other, and all the time not a lock of hair, not a muscle, not a limb kept still for one instant.

"We want many knives and much calico," hoarsely shouted one. Jacky interpreted with ribald comments of his own.

"We have very little; it has been a long time," was Hugh's diplomatic answer. "I will give you what we have." He ordered a few small knives and a dozen yards of red cotton cloth to be handed down into the canoes. Under his feet the engines began to turn over; aft the screw was feeling the water.

The men kept pace easily. "That is not enough," they cried. Behind, the great mass of canoes was moving nearer; the long bows of the warriors bristled like rushes; the sound of the paddles was like the dull roar of a hundred muffled drums.

"I will give you a little more, a very little," said Hugh. Welch, playing up to him, seemed to search through the stores and at last produced two or three knives and a remnant of red cotton. He handed these over. "More!" was the cry.

"I have no more," Hugh told them. "Will you take a few beads?" He showed them two or three bunches of the red, white, and blue trade beads that are valued by most inland tribes. "What are you going to give me in return?" he went on as the beads were handed down. The yacht was gathering way slowly; she surged through the crowded water at three or four knots now. Still the canoes paddled; the main body closing in, but very cautiously.

The canoemen answered his question by an insult, which Jacky translated.

"Pretend not to understand," suggested Hugh to Welch. "Tell them," he ordered Jacky, "that I do not know what it is they are saying, but I have some salt to give for yams." He pulled the telegraph to "Full speed."

"We have no yams," yelled the bowman, shaking his tall bow. He took an arrow and fitted it to the string.

"You can bring them another time," suggested Hugh. His coolness, his unemotional parleying, his trading in the face of a massed battle attack, had the effect they were intended to have. The headhunters, puzzled and amazed, held back. They were ready to surround and swarm over the small yacht; they wanted to do so, but somehow they knew not how (Hugh did) they were restrained.

The Lahara gathered speed. The opening of the river appeared. Now the canoes had to paddle hard to keep up; some of them were already gripped to the yacht, hanging on. Had these men owned a leader, the crisis would in that moment have come, the charge been made. But, like most of the inland tribes, they had no true chief. The mob spirit was their only ruler and mob spirit, while crueller than Satan, is at the same time freakish as Ariel. No one knew, they least of all, when they would attack.

Yet the boiling up of the crowd was clearly visible and Wilsdon knew it could not be long.

HE unfastened some packets of salt and, pointing to a feather headdress lying in one of the canoes, offered to buy it. Salt is gold to the Papuan. For a moment the unstable owner of the feathers forgot he was one of a war party, forgot everything but the sight of those glittering white grains that he knew and longed to taste. He took the salt and handed over the feathers. Another man snatched the packet from him; they fought and the salt was spilled.

At this the luckless buyer raised a howl, and just as if the whole thing had been concerted beforehand, and the howl agreed on as a signal, the canoes, one and all, began to move in upon the yacht in earnest. The yelping war cry of the headhunter tribes broke forth. Padddles flashed in the sun, were stabbed into the water and flashed again, swift as falling swords. With the long whine of arrows came a heavy thump or two upon the decks. No one, so far, was hit.

Hugh was in a difficult position. He had never shot one of these natives, nor had any one else. They did not know the power of white men's weapons—for Smith, during all the years of his stay, had confined himself, like the headhunters, to bow and arrow. They had seen Hugh shoot a pig, and that made them cautious, but of the real power of rifles they had no conception.

Firing over their heads would have no effect. He must shoot to kill. The river was very near; once out in that the worst of his troubles would be over.

"Cartridges, please," he said.

Welch, at the outset, had been put in charge of the cartridges, which were contained in a number of small cases brought up from the hold. He now broke open one or two—there had been no chance of doing so during their hurried departure—but instead of taking out the contents, he stood for a moment silent above the open cases. Hugh, meantime, had called to his boys, "Over their heads—fire!" and after the scattering volley ceased to crackle, looked to see if any one was hit. No one had been; the boys had fired well into the sky. It became instantly evident that the headhunters despised this form of making war; with a mocking yell they came on harder than ever. The ship's crew, scramblingly, reloaded. They had the dozen cartridges in their belts; no more.

It was at this moment that Welch came swiftly across the deck to Hugh and told him, "The cartridges are gone—all."

This was a shock, but Wilsdon met it. He showed his knowledge of men by making no further inquiry. Welch would know.

"Ah!" was all his comment. Seconds were precious. Time enough when—if—they got through to inquire into hows and whys. Now he had his work cut out.

"Fire!" was his next order, ungarnished. He had attempted a little drilling during the voyage, but he knew well that these raw boys understood almost nothing of discipline. For his own part he picked out a tall jumping-jack of a savage and aimed directly at him. The man fell into the water. One or two others collapsed into the canoes. It seemed as if the natives did not realise the connection of the shots with the injuries, however, for they kept on. They were all around the boat now, paddling their hardest and hanging on to every part of her that they could lay hold of. Those behind kept pushing on those in front. The lake seemed to be covered in every direction with clouds of canoes; paddles flashed and bows quivered in every direction, and scarce a patch of water was visible save ahead, where freedom, safety lay.

But would they ever reach it?

Hugh had got one of the big trade knives in his left hand, which was abler than most men's right, and was chopping at stray fingers as they caught on to the rail. He fired now and then, husbanding the precious cartridges, and he did not miss, but for every man that fell a hundred seemed to push on from behind. The foremost would have been glad by now to give up a bad bargain and run, but the thousands who had not yet been hit drove them on.

TULLE AND CHIFFON FOR THE DANCE

by Corinne Lowe

NEW YORK.—[Special Correspondence.]—So much is tulle in evidence in connection with the dance frock that we might select for the wall motto of the Christmas ball, "Bringing in the tulle log." As a matter of fact, of course, it is not bringing in this creation of floating tulle. It is keeping it in. It has only remained for this present season to sustain a vogue which started many years ago.

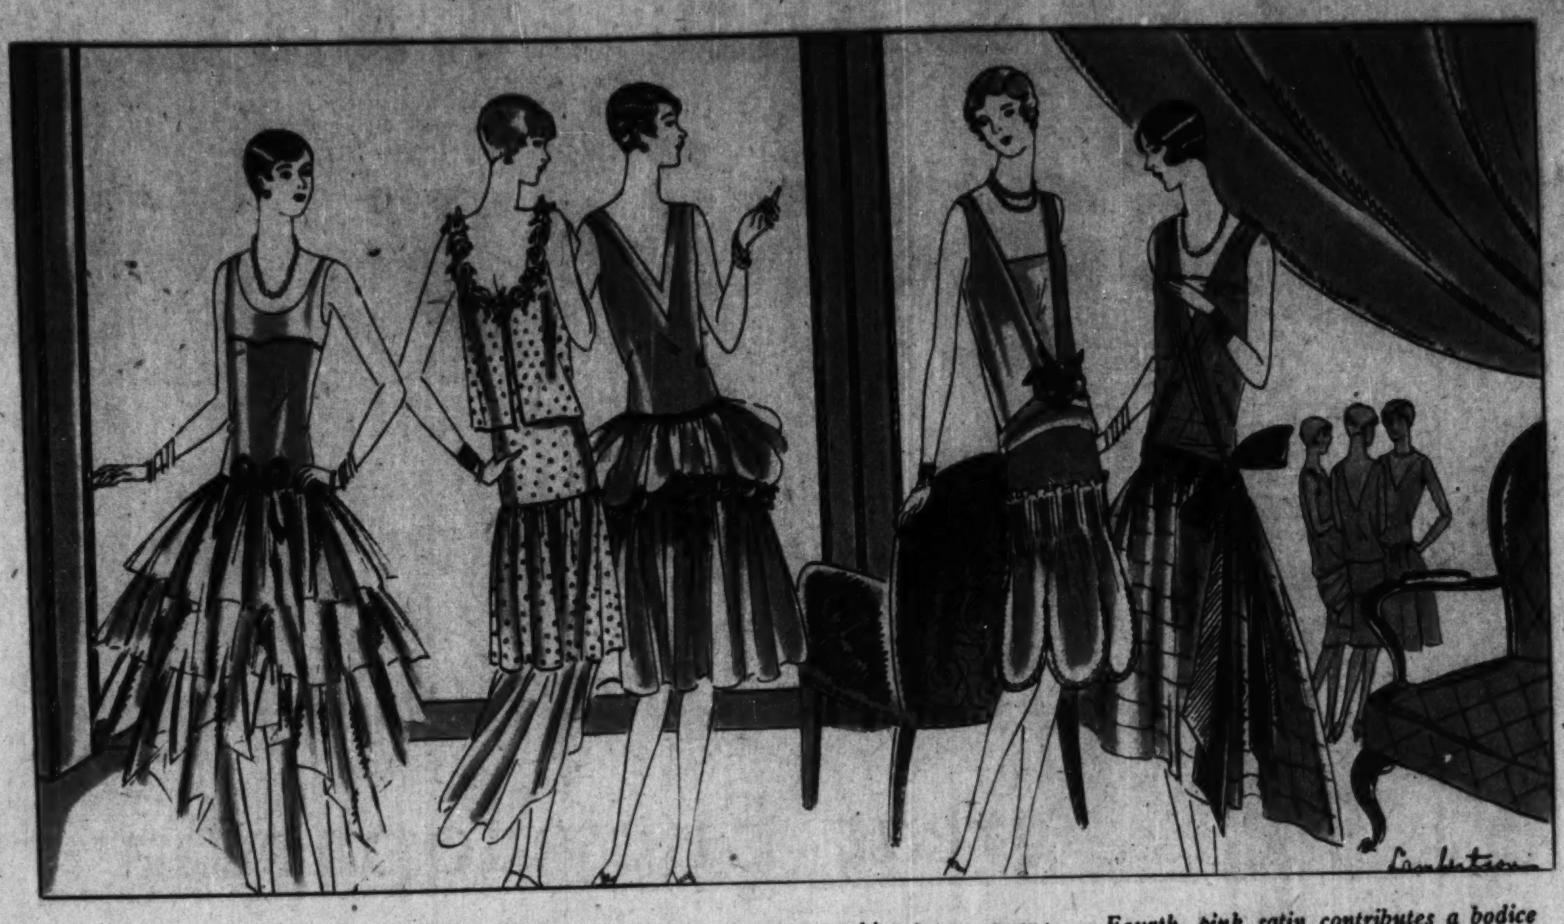
The tulle frock implies a bodice of many different fabrics—taffeta, moire, velvet, the metallic tissues and tulle itself. For the rest its contours are too widely known to encourage any lengthy discussion. Sufficient is it to say that the tiers of tulle forming the skirt are often in shaded effect and that the modern improvement which we installed in the period frock some seasons ago is still there. This refers, of course, to the shortened front length compared to the elongated back.

At the extreme left we illustrate a charming model of this type that uses velvet as the medium for its bodice. The tint chosen is the most delicate of pinky peaches and this is allied with the rose of the skirt. A feature of differentiation in the frock is a yoke which is outlined by rhinestones and which occurs in chiffon to match the tulle skirt. The skirt might well embrace the policy of being shaded, in which case the peach of the velvet bodice would be echoed in the lowest tier and would go through an intermediate tint to the light rose of the chiffon yoke. Here, however, the tiers are all of the same color. The waist line is defined by rhinestones converted at the center front into a bow knot motif. Although tiers such as we encounter in this frock are the most usual development of the tulle period frock, there are other experiments conducted in the interest of novelty. Illustrative of a fresher inspiration is the frock at the extreme right, one which in color is well adapted to the brunette. For the tulle that drapes the bodice and achieves the skirt is in orange and the double sash of velvet combines a pinky orange with pale pink.

Now here is a skirt which is composed of one small tier after another. Look at them and you will see that not a single bit of fullness is permitted. The frock is running altogether, in fact, on flat lines. And there is, too, another departure from the usual period model. Instead of dipping at the back, this skirt takes the side road to fashion.

Many are the types of bodices which consort with these tulle dance frocks. Taking as their common denominator the fitted line, they make all sorts of individual departures. As a rule, the corsage ends at the normal waist line, but we have eminent authority for saying that the long fitted moyenage type of bodice is equally smart and slightly more amusing.

An example of this latter method is supplied by Boue Soeurs in a charming and unusual creation of black tulle and black taffeta. The latter fabric achieves a long corsage molding the hips and meeting a skirt which, instead of being composed of the smaller tiers, is one single flaring piece of black tulle. Down the front of the bodice is traced a large floral pattern of embroidered silver and rhinestones and this embroidery is repeated on a flaring underskirt of taffeta so as to show through the tulle top with magical effect. A bow of taffeta in the back is similarly decorated and a last note of originality is sounded by a decolletage which I mentioned last week—the square line achieved by shoulder straps cut in one with the bodice and an upward curve of the material in front to vary the straight line of the square.



At the extreme left we show how to engage in bringing in the tulle tog to the Christmas dance. Here a rhinestone bodice of peach-colored velvet adds a yoke of chiffon in the same delicate pink as the tulle skirt.

Second, a white chiffon splits its bolero in the back and scatters rhinestones every place except on the under section of its skirt. White and lightest pink roses trim the decolletage.

Next, an apple green taffeta banding its neckline in self-color chiffon puffs out its skirt over the hips by means of purple-pink roses.

Fourth, pink satin contributes a bodice to a petalled skirt of pink chiffon applied by cartridge plaits and trimmed with gold beads. The vestee is also of chiffon.

Last, an orange tulle frock with flat tiers as its novel message is sashed in velvet uniting pale pink and orange.

In evening frocks of all persuasions one is impressed by two characteristics of the season. One is the upward trend of the waist line. Although the long bodice such as I have just described in connection with the creation from Boue Soeurs is still in good repute, a great many of these models in our new waist society are veritable climbers. This fact is demonstrated by all manner of models. Another marked trend of the season is toward shoulder straps cut in one with the bodice. This latter is manifested in both square and oval types of decolletage.

When tulle is not the fabric decided upon for the dance frock, net often takes its place. This season there are numerous evening gowns that combine velvet and net in the most enchanting and original fashion. A good illustration of this combination comes from Premet, who has designed a high waisted model of black transparent velvet combined with that familiar skirt which is short in front and long at the back. The top part of the skirt is in velvet and this is cut into points over an under section of black net. The waist of this gown is encircled by rhinestones and the oval neckline, still sponsored by some of the smartest houses, provides an opportunity for that touch of color invited by so many of these somber gowns. All around its course are flat roses of delicate pale pink.

A formidable rival of the bouffante tulle creation is the dance frock of chiffon or georgette. Both these fabrics are "cut in on" as much as ever, and they are cut in a way that spells infinite variety. However, as they adapt themselves so well to the finesse of the bolero, it is a temptation to steer the shears that way.

Second from the left we present the white chiffon dance frock so much esteemed now. This is one of the group to which we have just referred. It takes the bolero route to fashion.

Showing you that a bolero can assume as many forms as a woman's resentment, this one is split down the back, curves upward in front, and is bound in self-material. Also does the U-shaped cut of the back, with that attendant garland of white and pale pink roses, contribute to the novelty of aspect.

But the bolero is only one item in an impressive total of new features. There is an all-over sprinkling of rhinestones and there is an under section of white chiffon skirt contrasted with the remainder of the gown by its elimination of these brilliants. True to the season's most poignant sentiment, this undersection dips way down in the back. As a last point of interest, behold the tightly molded line of the hips which in today's evening creation is almost always present in connection with the bolero.

The white chiffon dance and dinner frock is so thoroughly in the spirit of this season's evening occasion that neither maid nor matron who selects it for the holiday festivity can lay herself open to blame. Ways of developing this medium in this tone are legion and only the vogue of embroidery of rhinestones and silver may be mentioned in this general discussion.

Lace is in just as good repute as ever for the dance frock and among the newest offerings in this field are gorgeous multi-colored laces. These, as well as all laces, show up awfully well in the bolero and tier treatments, which, introduced some seasons ago, are jazzed up by new side draperies. And, speaking of new materials, we find some of the lamés quite irresistible to those in search of something different. In this connection one recalls instantly the light and blue lamé woven into a tweed design used by Doeuillet for one of his new dance frocks.

The last model, which we shall describe on the page, is the creation of satin and chiffon fourth from the left. The scalloped chiffon skirt of this model is not new, but those petals look new because of the way the skirt is attached—by means of the fashionable cartridge plaits. Each petal of the skirt is trimmed with gold beads in diamond shape and the other touch of trimming—those chiffon roses at the waist line—shade from the pink of the frock to warm brown. A vestee of chiffon is introduced in the satin bodice.

MY LADY FAR AWAY - - - By Beatrice Grimshaw

The yelling increased every moment; it was deafening, dazing. Hugh found time to wonder that a man who had been through the bombardments of the world war should even notice it, but it had a personal note that carried and got home. "If the cartridges give out before that navy behind realises what's going on," he thought, "it will be a bad business." He would not acknowledge that it was a bad business already. One of the boat boys was down with an arrow through his chest; another was wounded in the leg.

"Give her another knot if you have to burn the ship for it," he shouted down the engine hatch. He did not suppose the Lahara could do any more than she was doing, but——

By God! they had got that other knot; must be better plucked ones than he had thought them. Confound those cartridges. If he could only fire freely, he'd have the beggars on the run in thirty seconds. . . . A boat boy began firing wildly. Hugh reached over and clubbed him on the head. "All together—fire!" he ordered. Another volley further diminished his tiny store, and the canoes hadn't been stopped, though they were certainly weakening a little.

No, by Jove! they were not weakening. They were drawing together, preparing for attack. Some one there must have a head. Some one had seen that the increased pace of the yacht was telling on the paddlers; that it was now or never. The mob spirit was welded into one at last.

The Lahara was doing her utmost, quivering from bow to stern as she urged her way toward the opening river. Out there was safety, if only the natives didn't think——

They did; they had. The unseen leader had given his orders and the orders were obeyed. All in a moment, the canoes—as many of them as could find room—drew right across the opening to the river and blocked it. And as the Lahara, at top speed, drove into them, scores of the headhunters abandoned their canoes, and swarmed aboard like bull-ants rushing on a carcass.

This maneuver was the one thing they had done all together and apparently the one thing they could do in concert; but they did it perfectly. Hugh and his boys, fighting desperately with knife and rifle butt—the cartridges had failed—were driven toward the middle of the deck by sheer weight of numbers; and over the rail more and more savages kept pouring, till it seemed as if the very world were made of human limbs and furious human faces. They were using the short distance arrows, wide and cruel; they had spears, too, and stabbed as they came. Two or three boat boys were down; Hugh himself was conscious of some injury, but felt it scarce at all. The only thought in his mind was—"Stella—and Martha! We can't save them—rather ourselves—but no bullets left now; it's messy work." Then something happened. He could not see what, but it was as if a silent bomb had been exploded in the middle of the swarming warriors, scattering them right and left. And all the yelling they had done up to this was nothing compared to what now arose from their

They were backing—weakening. Hugh shouted to his boys and charged after the flying natives. Somebody called out to him, "Take care—stand clear!" and Welch passed him, striking right and left with what seemed to be black rope. In another moment Wilsdon saw that the snake tamer had opened his cases, and taken out the deadly occupants; that he was actually fighting with them, keeping them with marvelous art from touching himself while he swung them through the air at the headhunters.

There is nothing that the Papuan fears like a snake, and Wilsdon knew it.

"Gosh," he thought, "that'll do the trick." He did not dare to join in this new style fighting; he could only carry the cages as they were wanted, and keep out of the way once Welch had smashed in the lids, and let the terrible inhabitants loose. His boys had no scruples whatever; they climbed up the masts and remained there, quarreling with one another for room. Black snakes, tiger snakes, brown snakes, pythons, death adders, a writhing, gleaming mass of poison and death, Welch pulled them all out and slung them at the yelling, terrified natives. He leaned over the side of the ship and cast death adders into canoes; he pitched black snakes with scarlet bellies into the lake and saw them swim up to the shallow ends of the canoes and try to writhe their way in, while the horrified occupants jumped out and dog-paddled wildly away. He cracked a long tiger like a whip in the face of the only man who withstood the attack, and the native—a sorcerer—recognised one greater than himself and fled, crying.

It was over in a minute or two. Faster than they had poured into the ship, the headhunters poured out of it and the movement, taken up by canoes and canoes, one from another, became general even before those on the outskirts of the fleet knew what had happened. The Lahara, bursting her way through a covey of emptied canoes that bumped along her sides as she went, found the passage, worked out into the river and was away. Not yet were the people defeated. Some of the canoes gave chase; but even though they paddled at an astounding rate, it was a stern chase now and Wilsdon knew they would not hold the spurt long enough. It was over.

He wiped his face with his sleeve and gasped, "My gosh, that was hot."

"You're pinked," remarked Welch. "Their arrows are filthy; better attend to it."

"It's a bullet wound," pronounced Hugh, examining his leg. "Clean flesh wound, through the muscle. Won't matter much. Shows just what these coastal beggars of ours are worth in the way of keeping their heads. Might have been my head. Hope you haven't left any snakes lying about, by the way."

"I am extremely sorry to say," answered Welch, "that I was obliged to sacrifice my whole collection."

"Awfully decent of you, but I can't say we'll miss them. Will you—may I——"

"Certainly. I'm a poor man, more or less. Charter me the Lahara for another trip."

"What! You're not going back to——"

"I am going back," replied Welch, with a certain deliberation, "to the lake. If you have no need for your island and the house on it I should be very glad to purchase——"

"O, rot, take it as a gift. But, man alive, why do you think of doing such a thing?"

"Partly," replied the other, "because I think of making a new collection when I've had time to refit. Partly because—she's got me."

"Who? Martha?"

"Certainly not. I can't tell you her name, but I think My Lady Far Away is as near as any one can come to it."

"Please yourself," said Hugh with a stare. He understood, but tried to pretend to himself, as well as to the other, that he did not.

"And now," he added, "I think we'd better let the women out of their black hole. We shall be half way down the river by sundown; this tide is adding knots to our speed."

A YEAR later—quite recently, in fact—two couples, visibly honeymooning, encountered each other at that Australian paradise of wedding couples, Jenolan Caves. One pair was coming out of the Orient cave with a private guide just as the other entered it, similarly accompanied. They looked at each other with some interest; to have a private guide and a private view in Jenolan numbers you at once among the elect.

"That's a damn pretty little cat with Lord Wilsdon," remarked the thin, tall, rather distinguished looking man who was walking with the fair haired and exceedingly well dressed woman.

"She's just home from school," said, in a disparaging tone of voice, his bride. "Bread and butter in a lordly dish."

"Damn good," said the man, chuckling. "You mean to make yourself known?" He looked at her as if he knew and savored a rich private joke.

"You can introduce me," she told him, meeting his glance with one as hard and shameless as his own. They were, in truth, a very well matched pair.

"Lord Wilsdon," said the man, lifting his hat, "I think I have had the pleasure——"

Hugh had met him, but did not remember him at all clearly.

"Certainly, certainly," he said, acknowledging the greeting, and wondering how many more idiots were going to interrupt and spoil his honeymoon—it was more of a nuisance to have a title than any one would think who hadn't tried. Then his eyes opened wide as he saw for the first time the face of the strange man's partner.

"May I introduce my wife?" said the stranger.

"And may I introduce my husband?" put in Martha. "Mr. Lyle."

It took a good deal to astonish Lord Wilsdon, but he remained speechless for quite a good part of a minute.

"I thought——" he began. Then he recommenced. "I was—under the impression that——" How could he go on?

Martha saved him.

"We decided on the whole," she said sweetly, "that we liked each other best. And, happily, my husband's mother died just before we remarried."

"O!"

"And left my husband ever so much—she died without a will, poor dear, or else, I dare say, he'd have got——"

"Quite sure," grinned Lyle, "nothing."

To look at the two it was very clear they had a good deal more than nothing, as it was. Hugh, later watching Martha at afternoon tea in the lounge, suffered an odd flash of memory when he saw her daintily eating cakes.

"They are quite happy, if you give them plenty of cake——"

"I wish her luck," was his thought.

TEMPTING MENUS FOR THE WEEK

BY JANE EDDINGTON

Some Spanish Medleys

DON QUIXOTE'S daily dinner came from a pot, an "olla," and was that stew of many meats and vegetables called an "olla podriga," which term has been used in literature as a picturesque equivalent of medley. Another daily stew of Spanish peoples is the "puchero," also named for the pot in which it is cooked. Into it go beef, lamb—curious parts, sometimes—ham or bacon, and Spanish peas (garbansos) and vegetables. It is a "standing stew in Spanish countries," and figuratively means daily food. Salmagundi, which is undoubtedly Spanish, is also a mixture of foods—in a sort of mosaic. Cafeteria is a Spanish word, and the fact has its medley aspects.

Conspicuously Spanish touches have been imprinted on the cookery of many countries and credited by such words as tortilla, seemingly used in Spain for omelets—many varieties—and in Mexico for a sort of corn pancake, although tortilla au rhum seems to be served also in Mexico and is cooked egg roll afire—wherever served.

As in language, so in cookery the top influence in many countries is Spanish. In cookery there is Cuban Spanish, as in New Orleans. In both these places it is called Creole cookery, although there are people who claim that a Creole must be born in Louisiana and be part Spanish and part French. Also in cookery there are Texan Spanish, New Mexican Spanish, Californian Spanish, etc. The cookery in Buenos Aires and elsewhere in South America is Spanish, and Spanish influences prevail in the Philippines—modified here, as elsewhere, by many other tendencies—and in other islands of the sea.

Creole Chicken Okra Soup

For one quart of chicken soup stock use one or two tablespoons of rice, a little cooked chicken shredded, and the following vegetables chopped rather fine: One-half cup of okra (canned or dried can be used instead of fresh), one tomato, half a dozen string beans, one small onion, one stem of celery. If the soup is gently cooked so a potato would not cook to a mush, one potato, cut in dice, will be a desirable addition. All these ingredients may be added at the start except the rice, which is better, perhaps, if added after the soup boils up, but hard boiling will give a poor soup. Cook carefully for about three-fourths of an hour at just boiling temperature, but no rough or galloping boil.

A Sandwich

In an article on a woman's life (a doctor's wife) in a leper isle of the sea, where Spanish influences prevail, there was this: "And Dionisio, my little familiar, would come in with the sandwiches—the little toasted ones he loves to make for important company, filled with cheese and Spanish pimiento toasted rapidly on both sides and served in little hissing brown squares—always by 'Nisio himself, who adores being praised for them." 'Nisio also helped with the bread making.

Give them the Gift every family want —and we will include the bookcase free in addition to your gift of the great Encyclopaedia Britannica

This Family Form Saves you 40% of the regular price of the Cambridge Issue!

THINK of the glow, the pride, the satisfaction, that fills the whole household with the ownership of the Encyclopaedia Britannica. Here is a truly permanent gift; the more they use it, the more useful it becomes. It is America's greatest reference work; in fact, the world's greatest reference book, for no other country, no other civilization, can show anything to approach it.

Remember, this is the Thirteenth Edition—the very latest edition of the Britannica. Full-sized pages. Full-sized type. 15,000 maps and illustrations. 600,000 indexed subjects in 33,000 pages, by 2,500 authorities in over 50 countries. What a difference a gift like this makes in a home! What an atmosphere of knowledge! What an advantage to children of high school age who are now required to look up so many things after school hours.

And besides all this—the handsome bookcase FREE

Yes, this Company will present one of these handsome special bookcases (illustrated above) to any family receiving the Britannica at Christmas time. So your gift will enrich the home in appearance as well as in knowledge. And the cost of the whole will be no greater than the price of a single piece of furniture or the price of a year's supply of casual reading matter for the family.

"The most famous encyclopaedia in English," says a publication of the American Library Association which also endorses the Britannica as one of the essential reference works for public libraries. It is recommended also in the highest terms for private and business use by such men and women as the following:

CHARLES M. SCHWAB	GERTRUDE B. LANE
SENATOR ARTHUR CAPPER	WILLIAM A. WHITE
ELLSWORTH HUNTINGTON	ARTHUR BRISBANE
GEORGE E. VINCENT	BURTON HOLMES and hundreds of others equally well known.

The new idea in home book buying

The practical business man cannot keep on buying books the year 'round. It does not pay. He gets too many useless volumes, and he does not know they are useless until too late. The Britannica, on the other hand, brings everything together in one place—all knowledge on all subjects. It is complete, handy—always there when you want it. It solves the problem of collecting a home library—finishes the matter up once and for all.

The Britannica idea is this: let other people do the studying and the grinding. You get the results. Let others browse around. You go straight to "information headquarters." Let others pick up fragments from second-rate sources. You get your facts from first-line authorities who are not only up-to-the-minute but in most cases actually in advance of their time.

Here are the reasons for the 40% saving

How can this 40% reduction in price be possible? Simply this: we are binding two volumes in one. This is not a condensed edition. It is not something "just as good." It is a genuine, identical Britannica—identical in contents, in size of type, and with the identical color plates. But it is bound two volumes in one—16 volumes instead of 32. This is a labor- plan that makes possible great economy and, w the present supply lasts, you can get the benefit

But do not wait—you can get easy terms

This offer will hold only as long as the supply of the New Form for Family Use, so we stro advise immediate action on your part. You will the 32 volumes bound as 16 (2 volumes in 1) extremely compact and convenient arrangement the home—and the handsome mahogany-fini bookcase as a gift from us.
